The Carpenterian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA, NORTH AUSTRALIA.

THURSDAY ISLAND.—JANUARY 1ST, 1901.

[PRICE, 2/6 A YEAR,

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST DAY OF EACH QUARTER.

POST FREE.

NOTICE.

All communications to be addressed to the Editor of The Carpenterian, See House, Thursday Island, to whom subscriptions may be sent. Subscription, 2/6 per annum, post free.

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS.

All contributions of Parish News, etc., must reach the Editor by the last day of February, May, August, and November in each year.

Official Notifications.

The Bishop desires to give the following notices:

1. The Canons of the Synod of the Diocese of North Queensland will continue to be the rule of the Church in the Diocese of Carpentaria, except in so far as they are abrogated in any point by special and published direction of the Ordinary, or are plainly inapplicable through change of circumstances and conditions.

2. The Parishes in the Diocese of Carpentaria are assessed for Diocesan expenses at the rate of 3 per cent per annum on the gross receipts of the previous year. By gross receipts is meant all money received by the Wardens for any Church purpose whatever, as per the Easter Report and Balance Sheet. The assessment shall be paid at the end of each quarter to the Diocesan Secretary, See House, Thursday Island, and no Parish shall be entitled to receive any Diocesan grant or contribution while such assessment is in arrear and unpaid.

3. Mr. Joseph Hughes, Registrar-General of Queensland, has been appointed by the Bishop Hon. Treasurer of the Diocese of Carpentaria.

Ourselves.

It is clear that with the few and scattered parishes of the Diocese of Carpentaria a Diocesan paper can only be supported by the ready and willing help of all concerned. We propose at present to appear but once a quarter, and the cost of The Carpenterian will be 2/6 a year. No doubt this is a somewhat high price for a quarterly paper, but we must remember the very limited circulation, and the fact that as we have no large town we cannot expect an income from advertisements. The advantages to the Church of a Diocesan paper are so great that we must appeal to all our readers, and we hope that they will be all the Church people in the Diocese, to pay their share cheerfully for the good of the Church. It is needless to say that there is no financial profit in a Church paper. It represents a very considerable sacrifice of time and labour on the part of the management, and Church people are only asked so to contribute their subscriptions that it is not also a financial burden.

THE INSTALLATION.

The installation of the Bishop, on Sunday, November 18th, was an imposing ceremony, although unfortunately the chief expected guests, the Bishop of New Guinea, Lord Beauchamp, and Mr. Le Hunt, Governor of New Guinea, did not arrive until the conclusion of the service. It could not have been helped, but it was very disappointing on both sides. The "Merrie England" was signalled about a quarter of an hour after the service had begun, and it was then of course too late. However, we had our visitors at night, and a very excellent sermon from the Bishop of New Guinea. The Bishop was installed upon his "stool," the old name being very literally appropriate in this case, by the Archdeacon of Cairns, Ven. A. D. Pritt, M.A., who most kindly came up in place of the Bishop of North Queensland, whose enforced absence, through pressure of work in his own Diocese, was most deeply regretted alike by the Bishop and the people to whom he had so greatly endeared himself. The clergy of the Diocese were represented, besides Mr. Thomas, by Rev. H. W. Curtis of Croydon, who looked remarkably well after his four years of isolation on the northern goldfield. Perhaps, however, it was the anticipation of the joys of matrimony into which holy estate we understand he is shortly to enter. During the week a series of devotional services was held by the Bishop for the benefit of the clergy present, and was found of much service to some who had been long isolated. Reference should be made to the great heartiness with which the Bishop was welcomed by the inhabitants of Thursday Island, and the readiness and courtesy with which his wishes were met by the wardens and officials of the Church.

THE CATHEDRAL.

Before the Bishop's installation a public meeting of parishioners was held, and an agreement came to with regard to the parochial and diocesan sides of the work in Thursday Island. It was resolved that the Quetta Memorial Church should be the Cathedral of the Diocese, under the name of the "All Souls Quetta Memorial Cathedral," that the Bishop should be Dean, and should appoint a Sub-Dean to have parochial charge. All the land is to be vested in the Synod of the Diocese, when constituted, for such diocesan, episcopal, and parochial purposes as the Synod may decide, subject to the use of the Cathedral for parochial services and the provision for residence for the clergyman in charge of the parish. The Cathedral even in its present unfinished condition is a building of which the parish, and soon we hope the Diocese, may well be proud. Unfortunately it is a little small. It is not probable that a large Cathedral will ever be needed, and were it possible to accommodate half as many more as the present Church is designed to hold, it would probably be always sufficient for its purpose. The Bishop has written to the architect to inquire whether it may be possible to enlarge the original design without spoiling the symmetry of the building. At any rate it is a great thing to have a Church which at the cost of some two or three thousand pounds can be completed into a Cathedral which, though small, cannot be said to be in any way unworthy.

BISHOP'S COLLEGE.

This, which has been the great aim and hope of the Bishop since his consecration, has been suddenly brought within the range of practical politics by the generosity of Lord Beauchamp, who being present at the Bishop's consecration and interested in his schemes, handed him a letter on the day of his installation, in which he undertook to be responsible for the support of three students at the Theological Training College for three years at least, from Jan. 1st, 1901. The Primate of Australia and others have kindly promised to contribute towards a fourth, so that we are enabled to start with four free studentships for men who are unable to pay for their own theological training.

By an arrangement with the wardens, the Bishop has taken over the present Rectory and added to and enlarged it at a cost of about £250, so that there may be no delay in waiting for the erection of a permanent building, which would cost about £1500, and of which there seems little hope at present unless some generous donor should come forward with the money. After the generosity shown by England in contributing practically the whole endowment of our See, the Bishop is anxious not to appeal to England until he has shown that Australia is prepared to do her part, too, as she is indeed well able to do. Applications for admission as students to the Bishop's College should be addressed to the Bishop at Thursday Island. Candidates holding a free studentship will be expected to remain in the Diocese three years after receiving priest's orders.

The College faces the south-east monsoon, which blows steadily for nine months of the year, and renders the climate of Thursday Island remarkably cool and equable.

DIOCESAN PROPERTY.

Owing to the fact that we have as yet no Synod, it has been found impossible that the Diocese should itself hold property except by the doubtful device of private trustees, a system which continually leads to trouble owing to complications which arise from the death or absence of trustees, and the difficulty of legally keeping the vacancies filled. The Bishop has accordingly asked the Synod of the Diocese of North Queensland to continue to hold the Church property in this Diocese, and to execute a deed of trust declaring what these properties are, and that they are held in trust for the Diocese of Carpentaria, to be delivered up on the formation of a body in the Diocese of Carpentaria, legally capable of holding property on behalf of the Diocese. This arrangement will avoid considerable expenses of transfers, and will keep the property in perfectly safe hands. For the present, therefore, all property bought or given to the Diocese should be transferred to the Synod of the Diocese of North Queensland, in trust for the Synod of the Diocese of Carpentaria, when formed. This is somewhat cumbrous, but the safest method that can be devised.

With regard to Diocesan funds contributed or raised by assessment, the Bishop has been fortunate enough to secure for the Diocese the services as hon. treasurer of Mr. Joseph Hughes, the Registrar-General of Queensland, so well known in the Northern Church by his long services as chairman of committees of the Synod of North Queensland, and warden of St. James' Cathedral, Townsville.

DIOCESAN ASSESSMENT.

It is obvious that, as the Bishop's income of £300 is but barely sufficient for his personal and travelling expenses, and as all grants and endowments were withdrawn entirely from this Diocese on its separation from the Diocese of North Queensland, some funds must be provided for the necessary expenses of working the Diocese, such as postage, telegrams and office expenses, printing of statements, notices, reports and Diocesan documents, General Synod Assessment, and such items as the passages to the Diocese of clergy and lay workers, and the assistance of poor and needy parishes. These expenses are all for the benefit of the parishes as a whole, and in every Diocese in Australia the parishes are now assessed towards the general expenses of the Diocese. In a small Diocese like ours, it is impossible to fix the assessment sufficiently high to really cover the most absolutely needful diocesan expenditure, but it remains a duty that each parish should give its utmost towards this object. The Diocese of North Queensland at its last Synod fixed the parochial assessment at 3 per cent. on the stipend paid by the parish, but the Bishop has decided, after consultation with the various parishes, that in view of the fact of the relatively greater needs of the Diocese, and the fact also that there is not in this Diocese, as in North Queensland, a Sunday set apart for Diocesan offertories, that the assessment shall be 3 per cent. on the gross income of the parish for the previous year, to be paid by quarterly payments as from January 1st, 1901. At first sight it may seem as if this would work somewhat unequally, but a little reflection will show that the inequality is only apparent. One year for instance the parish may make a big effort and raise £200 extra for building purposes. This will mean that in the following year £6 extra will have to be paid as assessment; but in the first place the parish, as it is not likely to make efforts in two successive years, will be raising less money and therefore be more easily able to pay the extra amount, and in the second place churchwardens of ordinary foresight will, when making a special effort, add the diocesan assessment to the expense contemplated and raise for instance £206 instead of £200, thus providing by anticipation for the future. The only alternative, a 4 per cent or 5 per cent assessment on the stipend, would press in reality very much more heavily on the parishes than the plan adopted.

Parish News.

THURSDAY ISLAND.

Rev. R. W. Thomas is leaving on January 8th, after a locum-tenency of about two years. Mr. Thomas has shown considerable interest in the missionary work, of which Thursday Island is the centre, and has acquired some fluency in conducting services in Japanese.

The welcome to the Bishop held in the School of Arts was a very great success. The hall was crowded and the music and speeches alike good.

The installation services were well attended, and the singing was particularly bright and hearty.

We noticed that on the day of the Bishop's installation one half of the communicants were non-Europeans. This is satisfactory in one sense as it shows that the Church is not neglecting her duty towards the alien races, but it does not speak too well for the European Church people that they do not outnumber the aliens in their devotion to the highest ordinance of the Church.

The flag of the "Quetta" is suffering from the effects of exposure, and some steps will have to be taken to preserve it if this most interesting relic is to be retained.

The visit of the Bishop of New Guinea was an unexpected pleasure, but it so happened that he had business at Port Moresby and found that he could come round by Thursday Island without loss of time. By a curious anomaly the territory of Queensland, and therefore the Diocese of Carpentaria, extends to the islands which are barely a mile or two from the coast of New Guinea. We hope that now that the Bishop has found his way to Thursday Island, we may see him from time to time. His earnest words of counsel on Sunday evening were much appreciated.

Lord Beauchamp had promised to address a meeting of Church People at Thursday Island, but unfortunately his stay was too brief to allow of it. His generous gift to the Bishop's College will keep him in our memories.

Archdeacon Pritt's visit was much appreciated by his old friends the Melanesians, to whom he paid many visits. On the Friday after his arrival, the Bishop accompanied the Archdeacon to Friday Island, and administered Holy Communion to Andrew, an old member of the Archdeacon's mission on the Herbert River and regular communicant, who has been afflicted with leprosy for nearly a year and is now rapidly sinking. The administration was made in the Greek fashion to avoid all danger from contagion.

COOKTOWN.

The interest of the past month in this parish has centred around the visit of his Lordship the Bishop of the Diocese. It is unnecessary to particularise all the meetings and services which his Lordship has held, and which cover the whole field of Church work in this parish. Singling out for further details, we may mention first of all the beautiful Confirmation Service held on Sunday, December 2nd, in the morning. The Incumbent presented 22 candidates to his Lordship. The service was most impressive, and the very large congregation appreciated fully the impressive addresses to the confirmees. In the afternoon of the same day his Lordship presented the prizes to the children of the Sunday School, and afterwards gave them a little address. In the evening he preached a most earnest sermon to a packed Church, which was most helpful. On Tuesday, December 4th, a conversazione of welcome was held in the local hall, when a large number of parishioners were present. Mr. Ogilvie, the clergyman's warden, presented an address on behalf of the wardens and committee to his Lordship, at the same time, in a few well-chosen words, welcoming his Lordship amongst us, and trusting that it would not be very long ere he came amongst us again. A musical programme was gone through, after which his Lordship gave a thoughtful address to those present. On the Wednesday evening a service for all the workers was held in Christ Church. A great number presented themselves and listened with marked attention to the earnest words which the Bishop spoke to them. Other meetings were held—two with the committee of the parish, in which the repairs of the Parsonage was a chief theme; and also the appointment of a new Incumbent, for the Rev. A. E. Grabham, who has been in charge for four years, resigned his appointment. Mr. Curtis, at present in charge of Croydon, was offered and has accepted the charge of this parish, and we hope that he will be loyally and willingly supported in his new sphere of duty. A private Confirmation was also held, when the Incumbent presented 2 candidates, making 24 in all, against 21 at the last Confirmation by Bishop Barlow. Being now in the new Diocese and severed altogether from North Queensland, we begin a new era in this, one of the oldest Churches of North Queensland, and we trust that it will be a prosperous future before us, not merely on the material side, but also, and more important, on the spiritual side as well, and we are sure that under the careful oversight of our new Bishop all will be well. It only needs sympathy on the part of the parishioners, and this we trust will not be wanting. After a ten days' visit, his Lordship left for Port Douglas. At a meeting of the Parochial Council it was unanimously resolved to repair the Rectory at a cost of £100, and to make up the Rector's stipend to £200 a year.

CARPENTARIA.

The Gulf of Carpentaria, which gives its name to the Diocese, was named after one Peter Carpenter, or Pieter Charpentier, as his name is variously spelled, who was Governor of the Dutch East Indies exactly three hundred years ago. The name was given by its first discoverers in 1606.

Personalia.

REV. H. W. CURTIS.

Rev. H. W. Curtis, after four years of steady and unremitting work at Croydon, has resigned that parish on his appointment to the parish of Cooktown. Mr. Curtis was educated at St. Boniface College, Warminster, and was ordained deacon in the Diocese of Ballarat in 1891 and priest in 1894. He was for some time Assistant Curate of St. James' Cathedral, Townsville, and afterwards for a short time Incumbent of Herberton. Mr. Curtis has always by his bright and cheery manner commended the brighter side of the Christian life, and we wish him every happiness and success in his new sphere of work.

MR. W. M. WILKINSON.

Mr. W. M. Wilkinson has been accepted by the Bishop for lay work in the Diocese of Carpentaria. Mr. Wilkinson, whose brother Rev. H. Newton is well known for the noble work he is doing under the Bishop of New Guinea, has had some years experience of evangelistic lay work in the Dioceses of Sydney and Newcastle, and comes with the highest testimonials as to his earnestness and high character.

REV. GODFREY SMITH.

Rev. Godfrey Smith late Senior Curate to Alderman Langley at St. Philips' Church, Sydney, was interested in the Bishop's description of work in the Far North, and after careful consideration has volunteered for work in this Diocese. Mr. Smith comes to us as a definite act of conscientious service, giving up work in which he was deeply interested; and in which he will be greatly missed. We are thankful to welcome him amongst us.

It is poor foolishness to run down your enemies.—George Eliot.

RELIGIOUS TRAINING OF THE YOUNG.

The Bishop has instructed his clergy to bring before their congregations on the first Sunday of the new year the most important subject of Religious Instruction in State Schools.

We do not believe that the people of Queensland ever intended to exclude religious teaching from the State Schools. The same word 'secular' occurs in both the New South Wales and the Queensland Act, and in the former it was held to mean merely 'undenominational,' while in the latter it was interpreted to exclude all references to religion at all.

It has been abundantly shown that our Sunday School system is utterly inadequate to meet the abyssmal ignorance of our children. The utmost that the Sunday School can be expected to do is to apply the religious facts and history already existing in the child's mind, and if the scanty time of the Sunday School is to be spent in trying to lay foundations which have never been put down at all, then the facts learned cannot be applied and are in imminent danger of being forgotten for want of any tie to link them together.

Two main objects are aimed at by those who desire to save the children of Queensland from the unhappy fate of growing up without any religious knowledge to preserve them from the temptations of life.

1. That the main facts of the Old and New Testament history and selected passages containing moral and spiritual teaching should be taught to the children as part of their regular school course.
2. That any minister of religion should during that portion of the school time allotted to religious instruction, be allowed to teach the children of his own denomination.

The arguments brought against this proposal are not very convincing.

That perhaps most frequently urged, that some of the teachers might be infidels or unfit persons to teach the Holy Scriptures, we dismiss as a gratuitous and unworthy libel on a most conscientious and honourable profession. We are quite sure that by far the greater number of teachers would, if they were required to do so, teach the Bible at once honestly and intelligently; and it is impossible to legislate for every conceivable exception. We may take it for granted that the great body of teachers will do honestly what they know the law intends them to do.

Secondly, we are told that it is impossible to agree on what should be taught. That this is not so has been demonstrated by the issue in Victoria of the Report of the Royal Commission appointed to consider the subject, as the Commissioners representing all religious bodies, except the Roman Catholics, have agreed upon a series of lessons with complete unanimity; and as the Roman Catholics have their own schools—all honour to them—we need not here consider them.

We are sometimes told that such religious training as could be given in the State Schools would be of no value. Perhaps it would not be very valuable by itself, but as a foundation for the work of the Sunday School teacher and the preacher, it would be invaluable. A great part of their labour is wasted because their audience has never learnt the foundation facts on which their teaching is based, and is quite at a loss to understand their allusions. It would also be of great value as teaching the child that religion comes first. At present the whole of the child's training at the State School impresses upon it the idea that religion is not a necessary part of its training, but a mere extra or voluntary addition to the real business of life. The effects of this idea are very disastrous, and we are beginning to see them in the rising generation.

Every man that cares for his country must work away at this matter until the public conscience is aroused to the danger of a system of education that ignores God and God's Word.

MISSIONS.

This Diocese, with its vast opportunities for missionary work, both among the scattered white and the alien and aboriginal populations, must be in touch and sympathy with missionary work and effort. Lent, which will be upon us in about six weeks, is an excellent opportunity for self-denial in the way of providing means for missionary work.

The offertory on Good Friday will, as has been my custom, be devoted to the missionary work of the Church as represented by the Australian Board of Missions. We trust that it will represent a real effort on the part of the faithful to give as God hath blessed them for the extension of His Kingdom upon earth. Any other contributions for missionary work may be sent direct to the Diocesan Secretary, Thursday Island.

We must not forget that this Diocese owes a good deal to the Australian Board of Missions for their grant towards this Diocese from the funds of the Jubilee Festival.

THE BISHOP'S MOVEMENTS.

The Bishop was consecrated on August 24th, and was detained in Sydney by the business of General Synod until September 6th, when he took a much-needed week's holiday at the National Park. On September 14th, he went to Goulburn, to plead on behalf of the Diocese of Carpentaria, and to speak at the Diocesan Festival. From September 21st to the end of the month the Bishop was preaching and addressing meetings, on behalf of the Diocese, every day in Sydney and the suburbs. During October he proceeded northwards, holding meetings and preaching at Newcastle, East and West Maitland, Morpeth, Singleton, Muswellbrook, Armidale, Toowoomba, Brisbane, Rockhampton, Townsville, Charters Towers, and Hughenden, collecting a sum of about £260 on behalf of the Diocese. On November 11th, the Bishop arrived at Thursday Island, and was installed on the following Sunday, November 18th. On November 27th, the Bishop left for Cooktown, where he arrived on 29th, and held a Confirmation and meetings for Church-workers and others. On December 7th, he left Cooktown for Port Douglas and the Mosman, from which place he intended to proceed overland to Georgetown for Sunday, December 16th, and thence to Normanton for December 23rd, returning to Croydon for Sunday, December 30th, and returning to Thursday Island by the boat leaving Normanton on January 5th, and arriving on January 8th.

As no successor to Rev. R. W. Thomas has yet been appointed, it is probable that the Bishop will be obliged to remain at Thursday Island for the first two months of the year, thus postponing his intended visit to Port Darwin.

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA,
NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. I.—No. 1. Thursday Island, Jan. 1, 1901

THE COMMONWEALTH.

We start under good auspices. To-day the Commonwealth of Australia begins, and we take our humble place as a part and corner of it. The day is one of Hope, and of anxiety to all true lovers of their country. We rejoice that Australia has risen above narrow parochialism into the conception of a great and united State. We hope that with the larger area involved, men's ideas will become less narrow and less selfish. At the same time we cannot be blind to the dangers that threaten us. Will the Federal Parliament succeed in rising above the petty jealousies, selfish aims, and violence of conduct that have so often disgraced the state Assemblies? Are we in the wider area to become more free from or more bound by red tape and bureaucracy? What is the attitude of the Commonwealth to be towards religion and religious training to the young? Is political life going to sink in Australia to the American level of professional politicians, held in check only by the fear of an occasional outburst of popular resentment, or is the wider field going to call forth men of real moral and intellectual strength to the service of their country? These and many other questions are more easily asked than answered.

At least both as Christians and as citizens we can pray for the Commonwealth and for our country. The Bishop has issued a special form of prayer for January 1st, and we hope to hear that it has been widely used.

There is much to cause grave misgivings. The low tone of morality disclosed by the Registrar-General's statistics; the terrible prevalence of intemperance and even drunkenness; the low ideals of commercial honour; the widespread spirit of gambling; the vain and extravagant habits of so many amongst us; the gradual growth of eastern competition, and in some cases the introduction of eastern vices, all these things may well cause us anxious thought. In spite of all this, however, we hold that there is still ground for good hope as to the future. The power of religion is certainly not weakening among us. There are indications that even among our politicians there are men who are not mere opportunists; but men who have ideals and desire to realise them. The wider area and wider conscience to appeal to will probably make it easier to cope with some of the lesser evils of the State. Above all there is much to hope for in the ideal of nationality now for the first time put definitely forward. If we can succeed in definitely identifying the ideal of Australian nationality with the ideal of a Christian nationality there is much to hope for from this conception. We do not ask that the Commonwealth should be identified with the Church, but we do ask that it should clearly stand out as a Christian nation, acknowledging God as its supreme Head—acknowledging Christ as in an undefined sense the Divine Revealer of God and the Holy Scriptures, expounded as each man may, to be the written revelation of God and God-like things. We do not say that this is all that we should like to see the State acknowledge, but we do say that it is the irreducible minimum requisite to maintain the loyalty of Christians to the State. As Churchmen we cannot be thoroughly loyal to a State which of set and obstinate purpose ignores God; while we can be loyal to one that acknowledges God and His word though it confesses itself unable to define or expound them. We are content at least to hope for the best, and to say, ex animo, "God bless the Commonwealth of Australia."

CARPENTARIA.

The Diocese stands as a venture of faith, faith in God, faith in the Church's methods. It was founded by a venture of faith when the Bishop of North Queensland set himself a task which competent judges declared to be impossible, and in a year completed the endowment of the See. It was a venture of faith for the present Bishop to undertake the charge and management of the enormous area included in the Diocese upon an income barely adequate to the most absolutely necessary expenses.

It is a venture of faith to see the organisation of a Diocese in the four or five parishes, and the four clergy in the Diocese at the time of the Bishop's arrival, of whom three were pledged to return, as soon as they could be released, to work in other Dioceses. Practically only one single priest was at the Bishop's disposal and not under previous engagement to leave.

It is a venture of faith to hope that we can establish at once a Training College for our clergy, a venture of faith which has already been brought within possibility of realisation. It is a venture of faith because these difficulties have not been yet overcome, and can only be overcome by continued efforts of the faith which has initiated the work of the Diocese here. We frankly say that we believe that much of the vanishing of difficulties and prospects of advance which are already causing us to be hopeful, are due to the steady and continued use by some members of the Church, in some instances by very humble members of the Church, of the Diocesan monthly card of intercession. Those who wish to use the card and have not got it can obtain it from the Bishop, who will be very glad to send it regularly. Whatever may be the case in more settled districts, it is certain that under the difficult and constantly thwarting conditions of life in the Far North, a Diocese like ours cannot possibly expect to advance merely by human zeal and energy. It must, if it is to accomplish anything, be sustained by an intense realisation of God and the continual intercession of the faithful.

SOCIETY OF TREASURY.

In future all secretaries of the Society of the Treasury are requested to send in their monthly returns to the Diocesan Secretary, See House, Thursday Island. The returns will be published in each number of The Carpenterian.

THE MISSIONARY JUBILEE.

We have not yet received the final and detailed accounts of the Board of Missions Jubilee festival. We are therefore not yet able to express our thanks to those Dioceses, conspicuously North Queensland and Rockhampton, which contributed their offerings towards this Diocese. We trust that they will be received before our next issue.

THOMAS PAINE.

The following passage on Thomas Paine, by George Saintsbury, is worth quoting, because of its curious applicability to more modern attacks upon the Church. After pointing out how Paine, writing without a library and without even a copy of the Scriptures he attacked at hand, claimed to have produced a "book that no Bible reader, though writing at his ease and with a library of Church books about him can refute," Mr. Saintsbury continues: "In his charming self-satisfaction, which only natural temper, assisted by sufficient ignorance can attain in perfection, Paine strongly resembles his disciple Cobbett. But the two were also alike in the effect which this undoubting dogmatism, joined to a very clear, simple and forcible style, produced upon readers even more ignorant than themselves and greatly their inferiors in mental strength and literary skill . . . Paine's ignorance and arbitrary assumption and exclusion of premises passed unnoticed by the classes whom he more particularly addressed. He was thus among the lower and lower middle classes by far the most formidable propagator of anarchist ideas in religion and politics that England produced, and his influence lasted till far into the present century, being, it is said, only superseded by new forms of a similar spirit, but he never could have had much upon persons of education, unless they were prepared to sympathise with him, or were of singularly weak mind"—Nineteenth Century Literature (pp. 31-32).

A HYMN FOR PEACE.

(From the "Guardian.")

"Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."—Isaiah ii. 4.

Lord of Hosts, Who hast endued us
With the strength that maketh strong,
Hast replenished, hast renewed us,
Hear our thankful triumph-song;
See the banner famed in story
Floats in pride across the plain;
Ours the joy, but Thine the glory!
Give us hearts of peace again.

Lord of Right, our cause Thou knowest,
Freedom is the boon we crave;
We have striven to raise the lowest,
Break oppression, free the slave.
Shall we fear when they that fear us
Rage to trouble our repose?
God of justice, Thou shalt hear us,
Judge between us and our foes.

Lord of Death, the shadow darkens
Many a loving hearth and home;
Many a silent mourner hearkens
For the foot that shall not come.
Take the tears of wife and mother,
Faltering prayers and dying breath,
Knit us closer, friend and brother,
With the sacred seal of death.

Lord of Peace, Thy word be spoken!
All the tumult, all the pain,
Every heart untimely broken,
Draw us to Thy side again,
On through warfare, on through blindness,
Forward, till the shadows cease,
Closer to Thy loving-kindness
Nearer to Thy reign of peace. Amen.

THE NATIONAL CHURCH OF THE ENGLISH PEOPLE.

A RETROSPECT AND A PROSPECT.

Article by the Bishop of Brisbane in Church Chronicle.

When we speak of the growth or progress of the Church we mean, in strictness of speech, the increase of its inner life, and of its consequent spiritual power for the purposes for which it was called into being.

But, inasmuch as to gauge these in their essence is beyond our power, we can but fall back on the outward growth of Church organisation which, as we may hope, implies and expresses inward life.

From this point of view, the best evidence of the growth of Church organisation is that which is furnished by the increase of Bishoprics on account of all the subordinate organisation which is the outcome of each such additional Bishopric.

It is notable then—and here I avail myself of statistics from the pen of another—that, while in the previous century two Bishoprics only were created, in the century just closed the number reaches 93, of which number no less than 70 have been founded during the last 50 years.

These figures refer to the Home Church with her Colonial and Missionary Sees, and do not take account of the Church (in communion with ourselves) in the United States of America, which has augmented its Bishoprics by 75, of which increase 52 belong to the latter half of the century.

Leaving now the wider field which our thoughts have been traversing, and narrowing our survey to Australian territory—including, i.e., Tasmania and New Guinea—it should be observed that more than a third of the century had elapsed before what was then an Archdeaconry under the Diocese of Calcutta became in 1836 the Bishopric of Australia—with William Grant Broughton as its first Bishop. Within 64 years the Bishopric of Australia has ramified into no less than sixteen Dioceses—that of Carpentaria being the latest.

Coming nearer home—it was in 1859 that the Diocese of Brisbane, the fifth in order of time, was founded, taken from the Diocese of Newcastle which had been created twelve years before. The Diocese of Brisbane then comprised what is now Southern and Central Queensland, together with the Mackay district. From it were formed (a) in part, i.e., as regards the Mackay district—the Diocese of North Queensland in 1878, and (b), in 1892, the Diocese of Rockhampton.

Where, in 1860, but three clergy were working under Bishop Tufnell, some eighty are labouring now; while the churches that have been erected in the Diocese of Brisbane alone number 115, of which seventy-eight have been built since 1885. Of these, in 1892, six were ceded to the Diocese of Rockhampton, and have, as we believe, become doubled in number since that time.

Contributions received for Church purposes, since the founding of the Diocese of Brisbane, which have passed through the hands of the Treasurer of Synod—as distinct from those raised and administered in the different parishes—have, according to official records, amounted in all to about £157,000, of which about £105,000 has been received since 1885.

This includes £14,200 raised for the Bishop's Mission Chaplains Fund, £10,325 for the Rockhampton Bishopric Fund, £6,000 for the Emergency Fund, £1,050 for the Clergy Central Sustentation Fund, and £13,500 for the Cathedral Building Fund.

Passing now from the organisation and work of a Church which represents, according to census, 36 per cent of the population, we are constrained to ask ourselves as to the fruits of its labours. We do not mean as regards the discharge on the part of its members of their devotional obligations or the enjoyment by them of its privileges—though we are very far from underrating these—but rather to what extent there has resulted, or is resulting, in men a more conscientious habit of mind in respect of the duties of life: for it must never be forgotten that the Church exists not for its own sake, but to moralize (or, if the term be preferred by any, to spiritualize) human life and its relations, social and economic—"to elevate man in his social position"—and that (in the words of the late Archbishop Benson) "the effect of the Church on Society is the final test of its faithfulness."

Such considerations may well cause deep searchings of heart, and awaken a keen sense of shortcomings: yet we are not without hope or without cause to thank God and take courage as we look onward to what the new century may bring forth in respect of the great step which will ever for Australians make memorable January 1, 1901—the founding of the Commonwealth of Australia.

In any new departure in life it is of the first importance to have before you an ideal which dominates, and an aim which controls. One of old, who was par excellence an idealist, and with whom progress was an enthusiasm, illustrated thus simply his lesson in development:—"When I was a child I spake as a child, I felt as a child, I thought as a child; now that I have become a man I have put away childish things." Why? Because with manhood come larger and more inspiring thoughts: greater possibilities open out, and in the light of these all that is childish, as distinct from what is childlike, has no more place. Childish petulancies, follies, wastefulness—these are no longer to be tolerated, and must be put away as childish things. Now there is a close analogy between individual growth and the development of a community. We of this community are now emerging into fuller life—passing as it were from childhood to manhood. Ceasing to be circumscribed by the limitations of a Colony we are becoming a State in a Commonwealth, with all the splendid possibilities which at once open out with their inspiring ideals. Be it ours to see that we put away childish things, that whatever lack of public spirit there may have been in the past, whatever use of public position for personal ends, whatever of playing each for his own hand, shall from this time onward be shed as the weaknesses of childhood are shed off when the constitution matures and becomes more vigorous; and that one and all shall seek to breathe and to promote a higher and a purer atmosphere, and make our public life as a Commonwealth, for its manliness, purity, and disinterestedness, an inspiration and a blessing to the Empire and to the world.

The same great thinker, whose words I have quoted above, refers, as a motive for human conduct, to the fact that "we are members one of another." He perceives in foro conscientiae the binding force of that consideration in the light of the lesson of this Christmas season, and in all that results from that great Incarnation. Surely it is there that the ultimate sanctions for human conduct are to be sought. Not by making it a point of conscience to ignore, in public life and in public education, those higher sanctions which the ideals be kept in view and true progress achieved. Let me clench this thought and close this utterance with the words of one of the most earnest and eloquent of those who have recently passed from us:—"No scientific progress, no political insight, no antiquarian sense of propriety, can give tone and vigour to a nation that has lost faith in God and the moral power which that faith, and that alone, breathes into all departments of national life." W.T.T.B.

The Church beyond Australia.

The Archbishop of Capetown gives an encouraging account of the way in which the work of the Church was going on among the coloured people of the country labouring class. "It is work full of hope, but it needs a tender fostering care, and, as the people are so exceedingly indigent, it needs much external support. Earnestness is most visible. An old man of eighty-three, with his wife over seventy, were confirmed this day fortnight at Slang River; the next morning they both walked over eight miles to the early celebration. At the same place a coloured laundress walked over in spite of her work eight miles and back before her confirmation at 3 p.m. Here, an old woman of over seventy, who was working seventeen miles away, and, being ill, tried to get a cart to convey her, came to-day to say that she had failed, and had walked all the way for her confirmation to-night. And yet they say that the Gospel is not for such people as these!"

A very interesting relic will find its home in the new Cathedral at Inhambane, South Africa. The mensa of the altar has been carved from a log of an old yew tree that has stood for centuries by an ancient well in the parish of Llanfechain, near Oswestry, in North Wales. It was known locally as St. Germanus' Tree, and tradition records that in the fifth century St. Germanus of Auxerre, whose name and work are commemorated in the Kalendar on July 31st, and in Cornwall by the famous Norman Church dedicated to him, used to baptize his rude converts in the well under the shade of this very tree. A year or two ago this venerable tree was blown down during a storm, most of the wood was rotten to the core, but a part was as sound as when St. Germanus rested beneath its branches, and this has been worked up by Messrs. Hems & Sons of Exeter into an altar slab. This precious relic is beautifully grained, and bears in its centre one of the five consecration crosses with a plain incise inscription: "Yew wood. Portion of St. Germanus' tree. Supposed to date from A.D. 446. Formerly standing at Llanfechain, N. Wales, A.D. 1899." It will remind earnest priests toiling to-day beneath the burning sun of Lebombo, that what St. Germanus did so zealously in the cause of Christ fourteen centuries ago amongst the rude Britons, it is their mission to-day to preach among the dusky inhabitants of the "Dark Continent."—Natal Diocesan Magazine.

SUNDAY OBSERVANCE.—We are not poorer, but richer, because we have through many ages rested one day in seven. That day is not lost. While industry is suspended, while the plough lies in the furrow, while the exchange is silent, while no smoke ascends from the factory, a process is going on as important to the wealth of the nation as any process which is performed on more busy days. Man, the machine of machines, is repairing and winding up, so that he returns to his labours on Monday with clearer intellect, with livelier spirits, with renewed corporal vigour.—Lord Macaulay's Speech on the Factory Act.

OUR CHURCH PEWS.

Mr. J. T. Micklethwaite, F.S.A., recently contributed some excellent 'Occasional Notes on Church Furniture and Arrangement' to a contemporary, and from those notes we venture to take interesting information on the subject of pews. Mr. Micklethwaite says:—

'Pews have been used in English churches ever since the thirteenth century, and it is characteristic that about the first mention we have of them refers to a quarrel about places, which the then Bishop of Exeter settled, as many a modern parson in like case has done, and more would find it for their peace if they dared to do it, by forbidding all appropriation. A few very early pews remain. They are very rude things, but as their survival is due to their being in churches where there has not been money to spend on newer ones, it may be that there were better in other and more prosperous places. By the end of the fifteenth century every parish that could afford it had pews, and some which remain are very ornate and expensive, though often they are far from the ideal of the town churchgoer of to-day as to comfort. Besides the open pews, there were closed pews, or closets, as they were called, which were often in the form of screened chapels, with altars in them. From the closet grew the box pew, which prevailed with the idea of the superiority of the sermon over the service. When men were expected to sit still and listen for an hour or more in an unwarmed church, they shut themselves up in boxes so as to keep such warmth as they could generate in themselves for their own private use. The artificial warming of churches and a better feeling as to public worship have taken away the use of the box pew; and but for pride in some places and poverty in others, none would survive into the twentieth century.

'We have now gone back to open pews, and with them we use chairs. Each has its special advantages; for instance, the fixity of the pews, which prevents a zealous, but unthinking, churchwarden from thrusting six into space only enough for five; and the mobility of the chairs, which allows of them being arranged variously as convenience requires. In a well-appointed and well-served Church it is best to use both, there being pews enough for an average congregation, and plenty of room in passages between and beyond them where chairs may be put when they are wanted.

'There is a continual struggle to prevent overcrowding and the ill sectioning of seats. Both faults come of the survival of the old view of pews as mere sittings, instead of being places for worshippers, who should kneel and stand, as well as sit, in them. The most obstinate error about the sectioning of pews is the excessive sloping of the backs and seat-boards. Men seem to look on a pew as a place to lounge in. Infirm folk find such seats troublesome to rise from. And all the slope of the back is so much taken from the working width of the pew. If it were necessary, the amount of it should be added to the normal spacing of three feet. No greater slopes than half an inch in the seat add an inch in the back should be allowed. And even so much is not wanted, for, if the seat-board be broad enough and the back not high enough to reach the shoulder-blades, which is now always the case, the back pressure is only on the top rail, and each sitter takes the angle which best suits him.

'Book-boards on the top rails are a survival from the box pews, which were made so high that men could read from books so placed. That is not possible now, and the book-board at the top not only curtails the kneeling-space, but is itself a great inconvenience to kneelers. A shelf about the level of the seat, and sufficient to lay books on when not in use is not in the way, and is as useful as one higher up.

'Some kneeling-boards seem to be contrived on purpose to prevent people from kneeling, and not any is generally convenient. It is impossible to contrive a fixed kneeler which shall suit everybody. One wants it forward and another back, and the only right way is to provide movable single kneelers, which each can place to suit himself.

'Those who are careless about the comfort of worshippers are often very careful about the welfare of hats and umbrellas. As to the former, it ought to be admitted that, unless you can put it into a box, the only certain protection for a cylinder hat is to hang it up high enough to be out of harm's way; but, in practice, with a clean and clear floor and reasonable care on the part of its owner, a hat may generally rest in safety under the seat. He who tries to keep a seat for his hat as well as one for himself is properly served if his neighbour sits on it.

'The floors of pews should not be raised above those of the passages, or people using chairs will be at a lower level than those using pews, who may chance to be in front of them. And the reason for forbidding the boarding up of backs below the seats is that they may easily be swept and washed.'

Brisbane Notes.

The Bishop has offered the two vacant honorary Canonries to the Rev. Dr. Black and the Rev. T. St. J. Pughe.

The Bishop, as one of the specially invited guests of the New South Wales Government, left for Sydney on the Friday after Christmas. He hoped to return on the 8th inst.

Two delightful little children's parties were given at Bishopsbourne last month by the Bishop, one to the pupils of the Collegiate School for Girls, and the other to the scholars at the Bishopsbourne Sunday School.

Rev. Alexander Macully, M.A., LL.B., was presented by his pupils—in the Literature Class of the Technical College—with a handsome gold pencil case, as a token of their esteem and appreciation of his kindness of manner. The class has greatly increased under Mr. Macully, and should he leave Brisbane his many friends will sincerely regret his departure.

A very impressive missionary service for children was held at the Cathedral on the day after St. Andrew's Day. The Church was filled to overflowing by children from all parts of Brisbane—some coming from as far afield as Sherwood. The sermon was preached by the Sub-Dean. Memento cards stamped with a St. Andrew's Cross were worn by the children, and their simple eagerness to hear and sing abundantly testified to the insight of the promoter of the service.

Our readers will be interested to know that a wedding present has recently been made to Archdeacon David by the Clergy of the Diocese, as a mark of the general regard and affection in which the Archdeacon is held by his brethren. The gift consisted of a handsome revolving book-case, made of Queensland oak, with carved scroll work at the base and round the top. The following words are inscribed on a silver plate:—

"Viro dilecto,
ARTURO EVAN DAVID, ARCHIDIACANO,
In matrimonium ineunti,
d. d.
Clerus E Parochia Brisbaneusi."

Australasian Notes.

The Rev. J. Hussey and Miss Hussey have also returned to Adelaide, last week, after a six months' holiday in England.

The Rev. L. P. Crawford has cabled to the Bishop of Adelaide that he is willing to return to work in the Diocese, and proposes to be here by April, 1901.

For the completion of the Cathedral at Christchurch (N.Z.), £8,694 has been promised, of which £6,145 has been received. Tenders have been called for, and it was hoped that the first stone would be laid this month.

The Rev. P. W. C. Wise has returned from England and been inducted into the cure of St. James', West Adelaide, and St. George's, Goodwood. Mr. Wise specially invited all those who wished to arrange for him a "welcome" social, which he declined to attend, to a Celebration of the Holy Communion.

A brass tablet in memory of the late Lieutenant-Colonel C. E. Umphelby, placed in St. George's, Queenscliffe, by the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of Victorian Regiment of the Royal Australian Artillery, was to be unveiled on Sunday by Major-General Downes, the Commandant.

The Church in the Sydney Diocese is to be congratulated on the practically unanimous election of the Rev. F. B. Boyce to the vacant Canonry. Mr. Boyce's work in social matters deserves recognition, and it is well that one who has given long and earnest attention to such matters should be identified with our Cathedral life, if it is to be representative.

The Rev. W. C. Pritchard, M.A., B.D., Rector-designate of Ipswich, received a purse of sovereigns and illuminated address from the parishioners of St. Saviour's Cathedral and other citizens of Goulburn. The address spoke warmly of Mr. Pritchard's work among the men of the parish, and included a testimony to the way in which Mrs. Pritchard had endeared herself to those with whom she had come in contact.

A circular has been issued in the names of Archdeacon Langley, the Rev. R. C. Nugent Kelly, and Mr. W. E. Morris, with reference to the establishment of the Bendigo Bishopric. It points out that the funds now at the disposal of the new diocese afford a more liberal and solid basis than any other at a similar juncture in the history of Australia. The necessity of a general effort to secure the Bishopric by the establishment of an adequate fund to provide for the Bishop's stipend, so as to be independent of the general endowment of the diocese, is also indicated. As the Archdeacons have approved the Act of Assembly establishing the Bishopric, we may hope that it will soon be put into effect.

"The Rev. P. R. Pymar Dodd," writes the Adelaide Church News, "is par excellence a preacher and a special preacher, and it was a happy inspiration of the Bishop which made him appoint Mr. Dodd a special preacher at the Cathedral, with free choice of subject. He has thereby provoked the delivery of certain sermons, which by reason of their manner and their subject, deserve the deepest thanks of all who care one whit for the future of Australia. The interest in them was great so soon as the course had been announced; it was maintained to the end, and the addresses had been somewhat fully reported in the daily press, as was proved by the magnificent congregation on Sunday evening last, when hundreds were unable to enter the Cathedral, and hundreds more stood throughout the service. The discussion of the sermons is keen on tramcar and railroad and wherever men assemble, for the subject was compellingly—men and women."

Our principles are the springs of our actions; our actions are the springs of our happiness or misery. Too much care, therefore, cannot be taken forming our principles.—Skelton.

He only is an honest man who does that which is right because it is right, and not from motives of policy; and then he is rewarded by finding that the honest course he has pursued is in reality the most politic.—Whately.

SUICIDE.

In the September number of the Nineteenth Century there is an article, by Reginald A. Skelton, upon the "Statistics of Suicide," which cannot fail to arrest the attention of all seriously-minded people.

We have now very abundant evidence that the crime of suicide has become alarmingly common in the civilised world during the present century. France presents the most striking instance of this increase. From 1831 to 1888, the number of suicides in that country increased by more than 200 per cent, while the population only increased by 31 per cent. But France only proves the most glaring example of what has been happening in every European country, except Norway.

We can find no parallel to this state of affairs, unless we travel back to the times of the Roman Empire, when suicide was decidedly the fashion. It is commonly supposed that the Stoics encouraged self-murder as a happy release from the miseries of life; but it is more true to say that the Stoics only regarded it as a last resort, to be very reluctantly made use of to preserve one's honour, but that in practice the voluptuous Epicureans were the great offenders. If we wished to reduce the causes of suicide to one single category, we would attribute it to "weariness of life," and it was just this weariness and hopelessness of a life wasted in sensual pleasures which nerved the Epicurean for his cowardly act. The following lines by Matthew Arnold are eloquent of the emptiness of a Roman noble's life in the decadent days of the Empire:—

"On that hard Pagan world, disgust
And secret loathing fell;
Deep weariness and sated lust
Made human life a hell.

"In his cool hall, with haggard eyes,
The Roman noble lay;
He drove abroad, in furious guise,
Along the Appian Way;

"He made a feast, drank fierce and fast,
And crowned his hair with flowers—
No easier, nor no quicker passed
The impracticable hours."

That weariness of life and loss of hope is at the bottom of all deliberate acts of self-murder will be made clear by examining Morselli's catalogue of causes:—(1) Mental disorders; (2) physical diseases; (3) weariness of life—discontent; (4) passions; (5) vices; (6) afflictions—domestic troubles; (7) financial disorders; (8) misery; (9) remorse, shame, fear of condemnation; (10) despair, unknown and diverse. If we exclude the first item upon this list, all the rest can be summed up in the terms of the third. Suicides are essentially "men without hope."

The frequency of the crime in our own age is the result of an increased stress and strain of life without any corresponding increase of religious feeling. It stands to reason that, the more difficult and complicated our life, the greater is our need for religious faith. It is a fact not to be passed over, that during the middle ages, when life was fairly simple and religious faith strong, suicides were exceedingly rare; but the decline of faith, caused by our religious quarrels and our national progress, has made the endless struggle of life look very terrible to those "who sit in darkness and the shadow of death." Are we to treat the crime of self-murder with pity or contempt? The law, indeed, is severe enough. The suicide is not, it is true, as heretofore, buried at cross-roads with a stake driven through his body, but he is interred without Christian burial, at dead of night, and his property is confiscated to the Crown. But juries shrink from undertaking the odium of pronouncing the verdict of guilty. This tendency is in itself an evidence that public opinion regards the suicide as a creature to be pitied rather than despised. Yet the crime, in itself, is contemptible. It is, as a general rule, not courage but cowardice that prompts it—an unwillingness to face misfortune and suffering—a "shuffling off" of the duties of life. In view of that very large class of people whose morality is determined by the laws of the country, to whom moral sin and legal crime are coterminous, it would be desirable if juries were to show more courage in bringing in the verdict of suicide.

But no amount of law-making can be expected to remedy an evil which comes from within. It may possibly be that, when we have digested all the novelties of modern existence, the struggle of life may become less severe, and the desire to escape from it less common. We live in a transition age: our minds are bewhirlled and befogged by the multitudinous intricacies of "the daily round"—by the stress of competition—by the uncertainty of what lies in the future. Perhaps when a generation has grown up which was born to the new state of things, and when the world takes a rest from fresh discoveries, which she must do in order to recover her strength, the tendency to self-destruction will diminish. But such a change, if it come, will have no permanent effect.

Nothing but a deeper grasping of Christian truth will fortify the mind against "hopelessness." The consciousness that we are not our own, but are "bought with a price," the great example of patient suffering upon the Cross of Calvary, the deepened sense of personal sin, which makes a soul shrink from judgment before the allotted time, the glorious hope of Immortality, only to be attained by those who have patiently borne the Cross upon earth, which makes the "sufferings of this world" as nothing in the balance, make suicide to the Christian an act of reckless presumption. The Christian doctrine of suffering, enunciated so beautifully in "The Disciples," by Harriet King, is the real antidote to suicide:—

"But, if imperfect, thou let slip thy cross,
Thou wilt not find it in this world again,
Nor in another; here and here alone
Is given thee to suffer for God's sake.
In other worlds we shall more perfectly Serve Him, love Him, praise Him, work for Him,
Grow near and nearer Him with all delight;
But then we shall not any more be called
To suffer, which is our appointment here,
Canst thou not suffer then one hour or two?
If He should call thee from thy cross to-day,
Saying 'It is finished,' that hard cross of thine
From which thou prayest for deliverance,
Thinkest thou not, some passion of regret
Would overcome thee? Thou would'st say,
'So soon?
Let me go back and suffer yet awhile
More patiently; I have not yet praised God.'"

It seems to us that the question has a very direct bearing upon Religious Education. Is it fair to send our children out into the vortex of the world without providing them with the only help which will enable them to breast the wave victoriously?

Teach self-denial, and make its practice pleasurable, and you create for the world a destiny more sublime than ever issued from the brain of the wildest dreamer.—Sir Walter Scott.

STORIES OF A SCHOOLMASTER.

In the October Quiver will be found an interesting appreciation of the late Dean Vaughan by "One of his Old Boys," which contains several good stories. The article has reference to the time when the Dean was Head Master of Harrow School. It was in my second term (says the writer) that he gave me two proofs of his own strong notions of honour and his expectations of finding the same value attached to it by others. It was "Billy's" week for calling "bill," and it was popularly supposed that his method was, after rattling the names over with a speed which only long practice could give, to mark at random some twenty names as absentees. At any rate, one morning I, who had up to that date prided myself on never having been absent from a "bill" or half-holiday calling over, was ordered with some eighteen more to Dr. Vaughan at twelve. I can now recall the trembling tone in which I replied to the question, "Where were you at four o'clock bill yesterday?" "I was there, sir,"—a statement which was repeated by the whole eighteen. "Very strange," said the Doctor. "I must consult Mr. O—. Come to me again at six." On our second appearance we were told that "Billy" could not possibly declare that we were none of us there, "he might have made some mistakes." "So," said the Doctor, "every boy who tells me on his honour that he was there yesterday will be treated as having been present; I shall trust your word." It was quite enough for us; those who had really been absent said so, and got their punishment; the others were treated as being present. As one of the real culprits said majestically, "I should feel worse if I took in poor old Vaughan after that than I shall feel doing my lines."

The second case was a lesson to myself personally. I was in the second shell, and we were actively engaged three afternoons a week in murdering the "Alcestis." For the only time in my recollection I was unfairly fagged as boy-in-the-house, being sent on a troublesome errand twice, though I protested I did not know my work for third school. I went up to school with about half the lesson learnt, and was horrified at hearing "The second shell are to go to Dr. Vaughan." To make matters worse, I was head of the form, and I felt that something would be expected of me. Things went on very well for a bit; the boys who were put on knew something about it, and I was able unhesitatingly to answer the questions that came my way. I began to breathe more freely; the time was almost up, the lesson nearly finished; indeed, they had got very much farther than I had.

Vaughan was actually closing his book, when a new idea struck him. "We have a few minutes more," he said; "let me hear how your head remove can deal with this rather difficult bit." It was terrible; there were all sorts of strange words, wicked dialects, and apparently impossible constructions. I made a gallant start, a dash, a hash, came a fearful cropper in my agony over a word that I did not know, and stood silent looking and feeling an idiot, and expecting I knew not what. Vaughan began to question me as to whether I had looked at the lesson, and I replied that I had not got as far, whereupon he demanded the reason; and on my replying that I would rather not give it, he asked whether it concerned myself alone; I said "No." Then said he, "Have you given as much time to the lesson as in your opinion it was in your power to give?" I replied quite honestly that I thought so. Then said he, "Did anything unforeseen deprive you of the time that you had a right to expect?" I again answered with a clear conscience, "Yes, sir, but I cannot say what it was." "Then," said the Doctor, "I think we shall do well to consider that the lesson ended when I was about to end it just now. Of course, I take your word."

The lesson was not lost on the form; one thorough scamp said, "It's an awful shame to lie to Vaughan, for he always believes you; and, besides, you do feel such a beast." I do not feel certain that the Doctor did always believe; but I am sure he knew that his method made nine boys out of ten, if they told him a lie under such circumstances, "feel a beast."

THE RIVERS.

As I followed the course of the stream towards the edge of the plateau a rushing sound smote my ear, and the waters, confined by their rocky channel, sped onwards with ever increasing swiftness. A few hundred yards brought me to the sheer and naked edge of the cliff, and the sight held me spellbound. Before me lay a vast plain smiling in the sunshine, marked by countless fields and homesteads, yellow with harvest, green with meadows, darkened with clumps of forest, dotted with cities and spires, mile after mile of fertile champaign fading away into the dim horizon, where a fine white line betrayed the far-off sea. Right and left the cliffs were naked and wind-swept, while not twenty feet below me the river leapt forth with a roar of triumph, and, describing a curve of matchless beauty, fell without a break into a great rocky pool a thousand feet below, from which it took its steady course—a great roadway of light, straight as an arrow, across the country, past the shining towers of white-walled towns, till it melted away into the ocean beyond our ken. Here I thought is the type of a great and strong man's life. How like the river he plunges forth into life, with aim and object before him and purpose strong, to accomplish what he has set before himself. The winds of opposition or misfortune may strive to buffet him aside, but though their violence may sway him for a moment as he springs, they cannot prevent his falling back into the course that he has marked out for himself as, amid the wonder and awe of men, he moves steadily towards his goal, bearing along with him the comings and goings of lesser men, and bringing strength and refreshment to those who dwell beside his path. It is a great thing, I thought, for a man to know his life-work and life-aim, and to do it by the strength of God that is in him, never failing, never faltering as he passes onward towards that mysterious ocean of eternity which bounds our earthly vision.

Then I turned and journeyed till I came to where another river came down from the mountain tops, and it was as swift and strong and as full of shouting life and vigour as was the first; and when it came to the edge of the tableland it leapt forth as did the other to hurl itself upon the world beneath, but ere it had gone fifty feet it battered itself in vain against a mighty buttress of rock which dashed it into a wild confusion of foam and spray, and swept away its course at right angles into a great rocky valley, where it was checked and twisted and tortured by a thousand uncouth rocks, and combed out into a dozen streams, which ever united and were again separated. Mile after mile the valley ran and twisted and turned, ever breaking and subduing the force of the torrent till at last, after twenty miles of checking and turning, it came forth upon the plain a broad, slow-winding stream, slowly meandering through the meadows till it too, after countless wanderings, reached the distant sea. Here I thought is the type of a broken and thwarted life, and how different to the strong energy of the first; then when I came to note its course more closely I saw that whereas the first river leapt over bare and wind-swept rocks where nothing might live, the course of the second was marked by dense vegetation; every tiny, twisting rivulet which carried it through its barrier of rocks was fringed with fern and banked with moss. Ten thousand trees drew their life from the passing waters, ten thousand living creatures came down to drink of the pools, birds sang in the branches, and butterflies and blue and scarlet dragon flies flitted in and out of the shade. So I thought me that, after all, the thwarted purpose has its use as well as the unthwarted, and if few know its name on mountain or on plain, yet it has a ministry that is none the less good because it is unrecognised. The thwartings, as well as the unthwarted power, come from the hand of God, who made men and rivers alike, and when at last the water of both rivers is lost in the ocean, who will ask which had the grander course if both have fulfilled their purpose and done His will of whom are all things and for whom all things consist.

North Queensland Notes.

The Daughters of the King, at St. Paul's, Charters Towers, have presented a set of six altar vases (brass) to the Church, and also handed £7 to the Rector towards the Richmond Hill Church.

At Hughenden a departure has been made by holding the Sunday School in the morning instead of in the afternoon. Parents commend the change, and children are now attending who were unable to do so before, because of the intense mid-day heat. The majority of our teachers live nearly a mile away, and they naturally welcome the new order of things. When the cold weather sets in it is intended to revert to the afternoon once more.

As a result of the action of the Charters Towers branch of the Christian Social Union, a meeting of ministers of religion was held in the School of Arts on Monday, the 19th of November, when the Rev. J. Pike laid before the representatives of the Methodist and Presbyterian bodies the programme of the Bible in State Schools League. The ministers expressed their hearty approval of the League's principles, and it was arranged that sermons should be preached in the Anglican, Presbyterian, and Methodist Churches of the town on Sunday, December 9th (the second Sunday in Advent), setting forth the importance of the Religion in State Schools movement.

EVIL REPORTS.

The longer I live the more I feel the importance of adhering to the rule which I have laid down for myself in relation to such matters.

1. To hear as little as possible of whatever is to the prejudice of others.
2. To believe nothing of the kind till I am absolutely forced to it.
3. Never to drink in the spirit of one who circulates an ill report.
4. Always to moderate, as far as I can, the unkindness expressed towards others.
5. Always to believe that, if the other side were heard, a very different account would be given of the matter.—Life of Simson, by Carus.

New Guinea Notes

Close to the village Church at Wedau, the headquarters of the Anglican Mission in New Guinea, is a stone still held in great veneration, though not put to the same use as in years gone by. In the old fighting days recourse was had to it, and pieces chipped off and boiled in water. This water when drunk by the fighting men inspired them with courage for the conflict.

There is a curious tradition connected with death on the north-east coast of New Guinea, where the Anglican Mission is working. If anyone has died during the day, the natives prefer to go to bed thirsty rather than replenish their water bottles at the spring, where, they say, the evil spirits resort at evening to wash their hands after their dark deed is done. For every death is attributed to the influence of an evil spirit.

The New Guinea natives, at any rate on the North-East coast where the Anglican Mission has its sphere of operations, are no exception to the almost universal rule amongst barbarous peoples, which makes provision for the physical needs of the departed. When the corpse, doubled up in a mat, is laid in the shallow grave, some taro, a cooking pot, and a few ornaments are placed on top of the body, being the dead man's provision for a journey. After a time, however, they are thought able to provide for themselves, for when the volcano, Mount Victory, puffs up its smoke, the natives say, "There are the dead cooking their food!"

Some of the old fighting men, who under the combined influence of Government and Missionary are now living peaceful lives in New Guinea, feel at times a measure of regret at the change that has taken place. "If the foreigners had fought us with spears and shields," said one of them to an Anglican Missionary not long ago,

QUETTA MEMORIAL CATHEDRAL.

"we should not have been conquered. But they brought guns, and we could not see inside a gun, and it made a great noise and we were frightened." Yet there is no sort of doubt that the natives are thankful for the substitution of peace and security for raids and harassing uncertainty. Lord Lamington, Governor of Queensland, in a recent speech in Sydney said that on the occasion of his visit to New Guinea in 1898 he took some pains to inquire from the natives themselves which kind of life they preferred, and they emphatically approved the present order of things.

THE CHURCH SCHOOL.

The Church School for Girls has been started at Thursday Island. Owing to the fact that the term was very late in beginning, and the weather very wet, we commenced with a smaller number of pupils than we had hoped to have; but everything has gone very smoothly, and we are sure that Miss Smith has so won the confidence of the parents that we can look forward to a large increase in our numbers next term. We wish that we had a more imposing Schoolroom, but that no doubt will come in the course of time.

INTERCESSION CARDS.

Anyone willing to use the monthly cards of intercession for the Diocese can have them sent to them by applying to the Bishop.

REV. W. P. GLOVER.

Rev. W. P. Glover, whose arrival to take parochial charge of Thursday Island has been anxiously expected by both Bishop and people, has been delayed through no fault of his own; it having been practically impossible for him to leave the important Diocesan work in which he was engaged until his successor was appointed. At his urgent request the appointment was hastened, but almost immediately his successor fell ill of typhoid, and the Administrator of the Diocese of Grafton has written to the Bishop apologising for the inconvenience caused to this Diocese by the detaining of Mr. Glover. It is doubtful whether he can be here before the end of April.

The Grafton and Armidale Diocesan News for February, says:—"The Rev. W. P. Glover, Diocesan Registrar, has accepted work in the new Diocese of Carpentaria, and leaves as soon as he can be relieved of his duties in Armidale. The news will cause genuine regret throughout the Diocese. Mr. Glover's work as Registrar has been so truly admirable, and his knowledge of the Diocese is so great, that, remembering his other many qualifications, we had hoped to keep him amongst us for many years to come. He goes to hard pioneer work under difficult conditions, and he will carry with him the prayers and good wishes of the whole Diocese."

[On going to press we learn that on March 30th Mr. Glover passed by Brisbane in a Japanese steamer en route for Thursday Island.]

QUETTA MEMORIAL CATHEDRAL.

We regret to say that the Cathedral, a view of the interior of which we give in this issue, has suffered from the late heavy wet season, several serious cracks having appeared in the concrete. The architect has been consulted as to whether there is any danger of their extending.

It has been decided that a Children's memorial at Townsville to Her late Majesty, Queen Victoria, shall take the form of a monumental brass, to be placed in the Cathedral.

PRAYERS FOR THE DEAD.

The following words of Dr. Welldon, late Headmaster of Harrow and now Bishop of Calcutta, may be commended to the consideration of those who fear that there is something in the ancient and beautiful practice of prayer for the dead, which is contrary to sound doctrine. Dr. Welldon is, as is well known, a man of what are called Protestant views, and has certainly not the smallest sympathy with anything that is contrary to the Reformation settlement. He is also a learned theologian, and his book, "The Hope of Immortality," has achieved a deservedly wide reputation:—

"But we too may and must pray for the dead as they for us. Without such prayer the Communion of Saints becomes but a dream. We know not how or in what degree prayer is operative, although we know that so it is, upon earth, and we cannot know how it may affect them that have passed within the veil. But to pray for them is an act of faith and reverence. No act sustains so well the sympathy of saints. None is so potent to create and energeise the assurance that the dead are still the living. None is such a witness to the reality of a purely spiritual existence and communion. None is so deep and true a solace in the presence of the realities which ever and again darken human life.

"The duty or privilege of prayer for the dead does not so much rest upon isolated passages of Holy Scripture; it rests on the whole conception of Immortality as expressed in the Revelation of Jesus Christ. To believe in intercessory prayer for the dead is not to believe that the state of the dead is mapped out in purgatorial or other periods which a living human authority can modify at will. Indeed it is the very opposite of that belief. For a belief so formal and mechanical is opposed to the fine and sensitive outlines of the Gospel. Our Lord did not teach, or empower anyone to teach, what the future life precisely is, or how it may be affected or influenced by acts done upon earth. He taught only the doctrine of the Communion of Saints, and from that doctrine flows the spiritual sympathy, of which intercessory prayer is the expression, between the living and the dead, and he, who has apprehended the eternal verity of the spiritual life, will no more doubt that prayer can pass the barriers of the unseen world than he will doubt that the spirit itself passes those barriers when it is emancipated from the body at death. For Jesus Christ in His exaltation hold the keys not of Hell (i.e., of Hades) only, but of death.

"Protestantism, which so well exhibits the strength, and so ill the poetry or romance of religion, and is always in danger of losing the delicate flower of devotion, has too much forgotten the dead. It has buried them out of mind as out of sight. It has not thought of them as dwelling in communion with the progress, the sympathy, the aspirations of the holy and eternal souls on earth. It will not be altogether in vain that this essay has been written, if it shall help to inspire any living human soul with a more tender and constant memory of the dead. The Festival of All Souls is a commemoration which enriches and ennoble humanity."—Welldon: "The Hope of Immortality," pp. 334 and 340.

With the above may be compared the Primary Charge of the present Archbishop of Canterbury, which says, "To pray for the dead is not forbidden by the New Testament, and it is not forbidden by the Church of England, and our ecclesiastical courts have accordingly so decided it. But while the Church of England nowhere forbids prayers for the departed, it nevertheless does not authorise the introduction of such prayers into our public worship except in the most cautious and guarded manner. . . . In our private prayers there is nothing in the Church of England teaching to forbid our prayers for those we love, but in our public worship there is need of that kind of reverence which perpetually acknowledges our own ignorance—our ignorance as to what is happening in the world of spirits, and our ignorance of how God will bring to a completion the work which He has begun in Christian souls.—Charge at First Visitation, p. 18.

News of the Parishes.

THURSDAY ISLAND.

Rev. R. W. Thomas left for the Newcastle Diocese on January 8th, and, since then the Bishop has been in charge of the Parish pending the arrival of Rev. W. P. Glover, who has been detained by the inability of the Diocese of Grafton and Armidale to dispense with his services during the vacancy of the See.

The Church School for Girls opened on February 11th, in the Japanese schoolroom.

The See House is now completed, and a large amount of scrub has been cleared away, greatly improving its appearance.

The Mission Work among the Melanesians and Japanese is progressing satisfactorily. The Bishop has been holding services in Japanese after Evensong on Sunday nights, and is preparing five Japanese candidates for Confirmation.

PORT DOUGLAS.

Mr. W. M. Wilkinson, Stipendiary Lay Reader, arrived shortly before Christmas, and has been working hard, both at Port Douglas and the Mosman.

Mr. Rex, with his usual thoughtfulness for the Church, has provided Mr. Wilkinson with a horse and saddle, to enable him to do the outside work.

NORMANTON.

The services on Christmas Day and the following Sunday were conducted by the Bishop of the Diocese.

On Christmas afternoon the Bishop distributed the prizes at the Sunday School; and expressed his very great pleasure at the exceptionally large and regular attendance at the school; and his great appreciation of the efforts of Mr. Field, the Stipendiary Lay Reader, on behalf of the children.

On Thursday, January 3rd, the Bishop was entertained at a Social Gathering in the Town Hall. There was a large attendance, and the Bishop spoke earnestly of the position and the work of the Church.

CROYDON.

Rev. H. W. Curtis left on March 8th, amid the most sincere regrets of those among whom he has worked so faithfully since 1897.

Rev. Godfrey Smith leaves Sydney on March 19th, and should have arrived here before this in print.

PORT DARWIN.

The Bishop left Thursday Island for Port Darwin on February 24th, arriving on the afternoon of 27th. A number of gentlemen met the steamer, assuring the Bishop of a warm welcome on the occasion of his first visit to the Northern Territory, and conducted him to the Residency, where he was the guest of Mr. Justice Dashwood during his stay. As soon as it was known that the Bishop was coming, a large choir of some 25 ladies and gentlemen set to work to practise under the able conductorship of Mr. Price, with results most happily visible on Sunday. The Bishop spent the rest of the week in visiting the Church people, and the hospital and gaol. It was no less than twelve years since any Priest of the Church had visited Port Darwin, other than clergy landing for a few hours from passing steamers. On Sunday, the Town Hall was filled with a large congregation at 11 a.m., when there was Morning Prayer and a Celebration of Holy Communion. The singing was most excellent, and might have been envied by several of our Cathedrals. It was most refreshing to hear a choir which was strong enough to carry the congregation with it, and prevent any dragging of the hymns, etc. There were twenty-two Communicants, among whom we were glad to notice a very large proportion of young men, not ashamed of their Christian profession. In the afternoon, the Bishop had a Service for children, several baptisms and a funeral, and at 8 p.m., in spite of rain, the hall was filled with one of the largest gatherings seen in it for a long time. The congregation was, probably, two-thirds of men. The Bishop, in his sermon, dwelt on the need of a practical acknowledgment of implicitly held religious beliefs, and urged all to help in the work of the Church. A largely attended meeting of members of the Church was subsequently held, and it was unanimously resolved to ask the Bishop to obtain the services of a resident clergyman as soon as possible, and that land be purchased as soon as possible for the erection of a Church and parsonage. Much zeal and hopefulness was manifested. The following gentlemen were elected a committee to assist the Bishop and carry out the wishes of the Churchpeople:—Mr. Justice Dashwood, Dr. Goldsmith, Messrs Andrews, Budgen, Craig (hon. sec.), Green, Finnis, McKay, Martin, Langdon, Stretton and Waters. Owing to the fact of the steamer leaving on Tuesday morning, the Bishop was unable to go up the line, but while at Port Darwin he was able to make arrangements for travelling overland in June, when he hopes to visit the stations and offices on the telegraph line, as far as the South Australian border, from which point he will probably return via Adelaide, that being much the quickest route in point of time, from the southern extremity of the Diocese. The Bishop has licensed Mr. Lennox of the Kapoorlga Aboriginal Mission. This Mission, which is supported by two of the Adelaide Churches, is situated on the Alligator River, about one hundred miles east of Port Darwin, and seems to be making a slow and steady progress under its two devoted managers. It is at present the only Church Aboriginal Mission in the Diocese. The Bishop reached Thursday Island by the "Changsha" on Friday, March 8th.

THE ARCHBISHOPS AND BISHOPS ON OBEDIENCE.

AN EARNEST APPEAL.

The subjoined letter has been addressed by the Archbishops and Bishops of the Church of England to the clergy:—

Brethren in the Lord—With the dawn of the New Century unexampled opportunities for good are opening before the whole of Christendom, and not least before the National Church of England. We rejoice in the reasons for hope and thankfulness which surround us, and in the rich and varied manifestations of religious activity which abound in all quarters. New paths of usefulness have been discovered by Christian zeal: the Mission-fields are white unto harvest. Moved by a deep sense of the responsibilities which such opportunities create, we invited you last year to united prayer, and now, moved by a like sense, we desire most earnestly to press upon you the great and urgent need of united action. From every side at home and abroad the importance of union in the work of Christ is forced upon our attention.

Under these circumstances we cannot but feel the more keenly any causes which tend to lessen the Church's forces to grapple with these noble tasks and opportunities. There are not a few such causes to be found in the lack of faith and prayer, of disciplined life and self-sacrifice, and still more in places where the life of the Church and her officers is mechanical or neglectful, and fails to bring into action the full powers of truth and grace committed to her by the Master. We earnestly appeal at this time to all over whom we are set to consider the call to more zeal, more unity, more scrupulous faithfulness to the solemn obligations which lie upon Churchmen.

But circumstances have given special prominence to certain points in the present condition of our Church which cause very grave anxiety in those to whom by God's appointment the government of it is intrusted. We inherit a form of government which has come down to us from Apostolic times. The duty of guiding the Church is entrusted to the Bishops, and we cannot escape the responsibility. All antiquity is united in teaching that this burden is laid upon them, and if any doctrine can be called Catholic it is that the Bishops have a right to call on all the clergy to follow the godly admonitions and submit themselves to the godly judgments of those who are set over them in the Lord. Those who refuse such obedience are practically setting up a form of government which is distinctly not episcopal, and they cannot claim that they are guided by Catholic principles or treading in Catholic paths. In matters of ritual, the regulation of which is expressly committed to the Bishop by the Book of Common Prayer, the refusal of a clergyman to obey the solemn admonition of his Bishop is a grave offence, still more grave when the refusal sets aside the judgment of the Bishops as a body.

We therefore put before you that we as a body uphold the duty of submitting to the decisions of the Archbishops lately given on questions referred to them in accordance with the direction in the Book of Common Prayer. We acknowledge thankfully the very general recognition of this duty which has been conscientiously given by the clergy at large. But this has unfortunately not been universal.

Brethren, you are well aware of the mischief that must necessarily follow on disregard of the essential principles of all true government. The great work which our Lord has committed to the whole Church, and especially to our own branch of it, the preaching of the Gospel to the whole world, demands all our energy, and is seriously imperilled if we cannot give to it our united force. We entreat you to use all your influence to persuade those—we are thankful to know that they are few in number—who are regardless of our authority, to return to that obedience which alone can expect the blessing of God.

We recognise the pressing need of various measures of reform to enable the Church to do her work more effectively, but all real progress in that direction is seriously hindered so long as, even in a few instances, submission to authority is refused. Most of all will this hinder the fulfilment of any hope or desire of obtaining for the Church such a real measure of self-government as would enable us to supply what may be lacking in our system, or to remove any stumbling blocks out of the way.

Brethren, we earnestly commend these words of ours to your hearts and consciences, praying Almighty God to guide you aright, and we ask for your help in setting our Church free from the injury and discredit which she suffers when men see within her cases of persistent disregard of her constituted authorities.

It is our fervent hope that by humble prayer and united action these difficulties may speedily be removed and our ancient Church enabled with undistracted singleness of aim to fulfil the high duties to which the Providence of God has called her.

THE LEGEND OF THE FORGET-ME-NOT.—The legend of the snowdrop, says a correspondent to The Gardener, recalls to my mind the German legend of the forget-me-not; it is as follows:—When God made the plants and flowers, He gave to all of them names full of meaning, and told each one to remember what He had called it. But in a short time there came a little flower adorned with Heaven's own colour, and looking up with its eye of azure blue it modestly asked, "Lord, what did'st Thou call me? I have forgotten." And the Lord answered, "Forget Me Not." Then the little flower was ashamed, and withdrew to the quiet stream, and under the dark bushes mourned in sadness and solitude over its forgetfulness. Now when anyone seeks the heaven-born flower and plucks it, it says, as a voice from its Maker, "Forget-me-not."

THE BISHOP OF LONDON'S FUNERAL.

ST. PAUL'S, JANUARY 17th, 1901.

Bury him here, deep, deep beneath the dome
Where intermittent thunder of men's prayers
Sounds like a dream; where down the silent
Only the great undying seek their home. [stairs
Here may the historian Bishop rightly come,
Who knew our Church's heritage of cares
Whereby she wins her safety from the snares—
Free thought unfettered, and the chains of Rome.
Here let him rest, his strenuous heart and hand
Tired of the contradictions of an hour
When men choose form for spirit, word for will;
Now winds are up and passing storms have power
The Church can spare such clear-eyed helmsman ill.

He knew the shoals—saw Christ upon the strand.

ROMAN CATHOLICISM.

Rev. Brian J. Clinch writes in the American Catholic Quarterly Review for October, that out of the 223,000,000 of Roman Catholics in the world, less than ten per cent. belong to English-speaking nations, while hardly half a million are of real Anglo-Saxon stock. Indeed, many of the ten per cent., though counted as English, do not even speak that language, the French in Canada, for instance. And the Roman Catholic population is, he thinks, diminishing both relatively and actually among Anglo-Saxons. "The Catholic population of the British Islands is hardly two-thirds what it was at the beginning of Victoria's reign. . . . Adding in the whole Catholic English-speaking population of Canada, Australia and all other British Colonies, there are now a million fewer Catholics in the Empire than then."

Year by year Catholics are diminishing, as if struck by some fatal disease, wherever the English flag flies.

Brisbane Synod is to be convened for Tuesday, June 11th. It will meet for the first time upon the exact anniversary of the Bishop's consecration.

At a meeting of the Diocesan Council held on Friday, March 8th, the Bishop of North Queensland announced that he had appointed the Rev. W. Abel Turner, of Hughenden, and the Rev. J. Pike, of Charters Towers, to vacant canonries on the Cathedral Chapter.

It was announced recently that the Queen has been pleased to approve the appointment of the Rev. Frederick Edward Ridgeway, D.D., to be the Bishop-Suffragan of Kensington in the Diocese of London. The appointment was very generally anticipated.

The Japanese School at Townsville has had a most quaint and interesting tea party in the Jubilee Hall. Mr. Iijima, the Japanese Consul, addressed the party. The address was about hard study and its advantages, with illustrations from the lives of prominent Japanese scholars. By the aid of Mr. Sugimura as interpreter, His Lordship the Bishop spoke encouragingly to the boys, and congratulated them on having so good a teacher as Miss Buchanan. Before closing, the health of their Majesties the King of England and the Emperor of Japan were honoured, and the National Anthems sung.

GOOD MANNERS.

The old Winchester motto, "Manners maketh man," has not a little truth in it even if we refrain from the possibly malicious addition, "the want of them the fellow." We travelled lately by an ocean steamer where ladies came to dinner in a Japanese kimona, and men went about with bare feet in the middle of the day, where ladies smoked, played cards in the smoking room, and men smoked in the ladies' saloon, and both alike bawled at the top of their voices the vulgarest of all vulgar ditties, and these not the common herd, but persons who prided themselves on their wealth and position. These things may not be sins, but they have a common root with sins, namely, an utter disregard of the feelings of others so long as no restraint is put upon oneself.

Good manners are not things to be lightly regarded. They are a very real safeguard against selfishness, which is but another name for sin. Good manners do not depend on birth or education, for they are not seldom found in highest perfection among the poor and the ignorant, but on the other hand the possession of them will often save a 'gentleman' from acts which he might otherwise have committed.

Self-consciousness is one of the greatest foes to good manners, and self-consciousness, although it often takes the forms of shyness and bashfulness, really springs from over-conceit of oneself and too little thought for others. Instead of thinking what service we can render to them, we are thinking what they think of us, a needless and often very ill-based consideration.

There is no doubt that manners have deteriorated. One cause, the abolition of duelling, we cannot regret, although we ought not to need the risk of death to make us behave; the other cause is still operating. It is a general laxness and contempt for discipline and a revolt against all tradition, good as well as bad. Against this we should wage war. Bad manners are not only an offence to good taste, they are an offence against that law of charity and thought for others which is the law of God.

Manners maketh not, perhaps, the whole and perfect man, but certainly one who has much that is the best of man in him. The lack of manners does not make a man a criminal, but it does render him one who inflicts much pain and annoyance on others, and it tends to selfishness and conceit.

True manners can, we believe, be only based on the life and example of Him who was the truest and gentlest of all gentle-men. Perfect manners imply perfect self-conquest, and where else can we find it?

Lord Roberts will lay the Foundation Stone of the new Headquarters of the Church Army, at the Marble Arch, on a day not yet fixed, but probably within the next three months. The Committee has decided that not a shilling of the money contributed, and to be contributed, will be spent on ornamentation of the new buildings, but only upon what is useful and essential for the efficient carrying on of the Society's work.

THE BISHOP'S MESSAGE.

My dear people,—I desire to use the columns of the Diocesan paper to send you a message concerning the work of the Diocese. I was consecrated on August 24th, and the Diocese has consequently been in existence for a little over six months. The first difficulty that confronted me was the fact that out of four clergy then in the Diocese, I could only count on retaining the services of one, Rev. H. W. Curtis, who had done such faithful work at Croydon. Of the others, two were under contract to return to their own Dioceses, and the third had been offered work elsewhere. I succeeded in obtaining the services of two earnest and capable clergy for two of the vacancies, but it is a testimony to the difficulties of our work here, that although negotiations have extended over months, neither of these gentlemen have yet been able to arrive, though I expect them both in the course of this month. Two important parishes, Port Douglas and Palmerston, remain without clergy, although the people earnestly desire to have resident priests, not on account of any financial obstacle, but because it is simply impossible for the Bishop to induce suitable clergy to come to the North without a personal interview, and the distance is too great to allow of such a thing taking place. Port Douglas and Normanton (which should also have a resident priest), are supplied with earnest stipendiary lay readers, but Palmerston, where at least half of the present white population are Churchmen, and where a Wesleyan minister has been stationed for thirty years, has not seen a priest of our Church for more than a dozen years, in spite of the earnest petition of the inhabitants that one might be sent to them. It was because I foresaw from the first that lack of clergy would be the great trouble in this Diocese, that I insisted so strongly on the need of a training college for clergy at Thursday Island, where men might be at once educated and acclimatised and accustomed to the particular work which lay before them. Initial difficulties have been overcome, and the college is now open with two students already in residence, and room for two more, who will, I hope, shortly arrive.

In the meantime I can only exhort those parishes which have no clergy to patience. No doubt it is very hard that when parishes are willing to support a clergyman, none can be found to come, but I do not feel justified in leaving the Diocese at the present juncture to look for them, and short of this all that can be done without personal action is being done.

During the first three months, until my Installation on November 18th, I was occupied first by the General Synod, and then by pleading with, I am thankful to say, considerable success in the South on behalf of the Diocese. Immediately after my Installation I left for Cooktown and Port Douglas, and travelled overland to Georgetown, Croydon, and Normanton, returning to Thursday Island on January 8th. Detained here for more than six weeks by the non-arrival of the Vicar, I undertook the charge of the parochial and mission work, the superintendence of students' work, and the oversight of the completion of the arrangements for the alteration of the Rectory into the See House. On February 24th I left for Palmerston and Port Darwin in the Northern Territory, a visit which, while it saddened me by the opportunities which the Church had lost, left me full of admiration for the staunchness of many of our Churchpeople, and full of hope for the future of the Church there. I returned to Thursday Island on March 8th to await the arrival of the new Vicar of the Parish. I hope if possible to re-visit both the East coast and the Gulf in April and May, and in June I propose, God willing, to visit the stations and the offices on the overland telegraph line which extend as far as Charlotte Waters, the Southern limit of the Diocese. Having reached this point my quickest way to return will be via Adelaide and Melbourne. Although this will involve some absence from the Diocese, and a considerable absence from all means of communication, other than telegraphic, yet I feel that if the season is, as it promises to be, favourable for crossing the continent, it is my duty to make the journey. In the first place, because these places in the Diocese have never been visited by any minister of religion so far as I am aware, and secondly, because I feel it my duty as Bishop to see for myself all parts of my Diocese in order that I may not send clergy anywhere without a knowledge of the circumstances under which they go. My prolonged absence may be some source of inconvenience, but it would probably be more inconvenient for me to be absent next year, when it is hoped that the work of the Diocese will be more consolidated. It is, of course, impossible to make more than provisional arrangements at present, but I hope, if I start early in June, to reach Adelaide by the beginning of August, and to be back in the Diocese by September. I am sure that I need scarcely ask for the prayers of my people in this great journey, which I am too well accustomed to the bush to regard otherwise than as one of great monotony and fatigue. In conclusion, I would ask all those, who really desire to advance the cause of Christ in the Diocese, to obtain from me and use the monthly Intercession cards. The work here is so vast and the difficulties so many, that it is idle for us to hope for any good result unless it be from the good hand of our God upon us. Wishing you all the blessings of the great Easter Season,

I am, your affectionate Bishop,

GILBERT,

See House, Thursday Island,
March 12th, 1901.

THE SEE HOUSE.

The old Rectory at Thursday Island has been transformed into a very spacious and comfortable building; which is now named the See House, and used, primarily as the Bishop's College, and also to provide accommodation, though of a somewhat limited nature, for the Bishop and Vicar of the parish. The house has been fenced and painted besides being enlarged, and is sufficient for the immediate needs of the Diocese. Two students, Messrs. Hitchcock and Lewis, have already arrived, and have commenced work. The Bishop is in correspondence with a third; and a fourth, who had been accepted, changed his plans at the last moment, so that there is still a vacancy. The total cost of the alterations, inclusive of furnishing, has been about £450. The house now contains in all eleven rooms and is in excellent condition. Miss White has taken charge of the housekeeping arrangements. The Bishop would be grateful for gifts of books for the Students' Library started by a gift of books from Lord Beauchamp.

It has at last been officially announced that the Duke of Cornwall and York will lay the Foundation Stone of the new Cathedral at Brisbane on Wednesday, May 22nd.

MISSIONARY WORK.

The justice of many attacks on Missionary Work may be judged from the following statement of Archdeacon Shaw, who has been working at Tokyo in Japan since 1873.

"Of the reality of our work in this country I would like to write a word. Of course it has its ups and downs, its many disappointments and failures, as work which has to do with such an uncertain factor as human nature must always have everywhere; but when I see such a paper as the Spectator, on the strength of the tales in a traveller's book, write in general terms of disparagement of Christian Missions in Japan, I confess I am astonished. The particular writer whose book was under review made absolutely no inquiries, save from men at the club, as to Mission work; I should like to place it on record that though as Chaplain to the Legation and the oldest missionary of our Church in Japan, I hold a fairly prominent position, yet among the host of book-makers who have visited Japan, and have criticised us and our methods, and our success and failure, in their books, not more than one or, at the most, two, in more than twenty-five years, have thought it worth while to address a single word of inquiry to me on a subject they consider themselves competent to criticise on the word of the man in the street."

THE ROUND TABLE CONFERENCE.

Shortly before the lamented death of the Bishop of London, he held a round table conference of the representatives of divergent schools of thought in the Church. Among those on the one side were Canon Gore, Lord Halifax, Canon Armitage Robertson, and on the other, Dr. Wace, Dr. Barlow, Rev. N. Dimock and Professor Moule.

The following statement of the points at issue was agreed upon.

It has been thought desirable to draw together out of the minutes of the proceedings of the conference the following statements in regard to the relation of the Divine Gift to the consecrated elements.

"A. Statement by Professor Moule:—

"I believe that if our eyes, like those of Elisha's servant at Dothan, were opened to the unseen, we should indeed behold our Lord present at our Communion. There and then, assuredly, if anywhere and at any time, He remembers His promise, 'Where two or three are gathered together in My Name, there am I in the midst of them.' Such special presence, the promised congregational presence, is perfectly mysterious in mode, but absolutely true in fact; no creation of our imagination or emotion, but an object for our faith. I believe that our Lord, so present, not on the holy table, but at it, would be seen Himself, in our presence, to bless the bread and wine for a holy use, and to distribute them to His disciples, saying to all and each: Take, eat, this is My Body which was given for you, drink ye all of this; this is My Blood of the New Covenant which was shed for you for the remission of sins. I believe that we should worship Him thus present in the midst of us in His living grace, with unspeakable reverence, thanksgiving, joy, and love. We should revere the bread and wine with a profound sense of their sacredness as given by Him in physical assurance of our joyful part, as believers in Him, and so as members of Him, in all the benefits of His passion. Receiving them, while beholding Him, we should, through them as His equivalent signs of His once sacrificed Body and Blood, take deep into us a fresh certainty of our perfect acceptance in Him our Sacrifice, and also of our mystical union with Him, as He, once dead, now lives for us and in us, thus feeding on Him in the heart, by faith, with thanksgiving. Receiving His signs, we should look up with renewed and inexpressible confidence through Him to the Father.

"I do not think that the Holy Scriptures give us reason to believe that this sacred procedure (which we cannot see, but which is truly present to faith) involves any special attachment of His presence to the sacred signs, albeit called His Body and His Blood by reason of their equivalence as Divine tokens.

"B. Statements (1) by Lord Halifax; (2) by Canon Gore:—

"(1) That the bread and wine, by virtue of our Lord's institution, becomes sacramentally the Body and Blood of Christ.

"That this change is sacramental, in a sphere outside the cognisance of sense, to be accepted and therefore to be apprehended only by faith—i.e., that to the eye of faith, since 'faith is not imagination, but believes only what is objectively true,' the bread and wine are the Body and Blood of Christ, but that in the natural order they remain what they were before.

"That expressed devotionally in the words of Professor Moule, 'I see in the Holy Eucharist, which is primarily and before all things the memorial of the Lord's death, Christ my Lord at the holy table, coming to me and saying: This is my Body which was broken for you, this is My Blood which was shed for you;' or as was expressed by Canon Gore, Canon Newbolt, and Lord Halifax, 'That in every Eucharist Christ is the real consecrator,' Who in the service which He has instituted for the perpetual memory of His death gives to His faithful people His Body as broken, His blood as poured out, mystically represented and exhibited under the aspect of death by the separate consecration of the bread and wine.

"That Christ is present in the Holy Eucharist not in a corporal or natural manner, not locally as if He descended from Heaven upon our altars, but sacramentally only, spiritually, after the manner of a spirit."

"(2) I believe that 'the bread which is of the earth receiving the invocation of God is no longer common bread, but Eucharist made up of two realities, an earthly and a heavenly,' that is, the bread and wine in all their natural reality and the spiritual realities of the Body and Blood of Christ, which are inseparable from Christ Himself in His whole Person.

"Therefore as truly as with the eye of sense I behold the bread and wine, so truly with the eye of faith I am henceforth to behold Jesus Christ present to feed me with His own Body and Blood, sacramentally identified with the bread and wine."

The Guardian thus sums up the result of the Conference:—

"Taking the Conference, then, as we find it, and treating it as almost wholly concerned with the doctrine of the Eucharist, our impression is more satisfactory than we should have antecedently hoped. Our surprise is not that there should have been differences of opinion which resisted all attempts at conciliation, but that these differences were so clearly defined and lay within such narrow limits. The extremes of Zwinglianism and of any doctrine of a physical change in the elements were, apparently, mentioned only to be rejected by those from whom such rejection was specially welcome. And in discussing the sacrificial character of the Eucharist there was no denial on one side of the sacrificial aspect of the rite, nor any assertion on the other side of a sacrifice other than commemorative of the sacrifice of the Cross. These limits, of course, admit of considerable divergence of belief within them. But it is no small gain to have them thus formally recognised and placed on record by representative men. The real difference between the two most widely divergent views formulated itself in the question of the nature of the Divine gift, discussed in the first debate. Both sides appear to have agreed that in the Eucharist we partake of the Body of Christ, crucified and glorified. But while one side pressed a phrase of Waterland to the effect that we are directly made partakers of the crucified body of Christ, and, consequently, of His glorified person, the other side reversed this statement, holding that we feed primarily on the Body of the glorified Christ, and by consequence upon the same Body as crucified. The question involves not, indeed, the fact of a real reception of Christ in the Sacrament, but the alternative between the two ways of conceiving the presence of Christ and the relation of that presence to the consecrated elements. This alternative became narrowed down in the discussion to the question, whether the elements are, as Lord Halifax expressed it, 'sacramentally identified' with the sacred Body and Blood, or are rather, as Dr. Wace preferred to speak, 'sacramentally equivalent' to them. Now, we would not be understood to minimise the significance of this alternative. It undoubtedly covers a very definite difference of personal apprehension of the manner in which the Divine Gift is conveyed to us in the act of Communion, and if remorselessly pressed in either direction it sends men apart in widely divergent ritual directions. But we venture to question whether it need be pressed in any such way. To the lay mind the difference, stated as above, is a subtle one, and suggestive rather of the limitations of our knowledge of the mystery than of the imperative need of deciding between two sharply contrasted and mutually exclusive branches of a dichotomy. We cannot help hoping, therefore, that in regard to doctrine the Conference may in the long run prove productive of permanent good—not, indeed, by bringing all sides to uniformity of conviction, but, perhaps, by convincing each that the conviction of the other is capable of being stated in such a way as to invite understanding rather than to challenge contradiction."

It is a great thing to clear the ground and understand one another's position even if we cannot as yet agree altogether in allowing the lawfulness of that other position than our own.

The Bishop of Rochester is asking his Clergy and the Churchmen of South London to leave no stone unturned to support the very strongest temperance advocates for the new London County Council, as he understands an attempt is to be made to lower its standard in dealing with temperance and the liquor traffic.

A cable from England notified the appointment of the late Bishop of Ballarat to the Vicarage of Blackburn, and the post of Assistant Bishop of Manchester. The news gave considerable surprise in Brisbane, because the living of Blackburn was not known to be vacant. The last copy of the Guardian, however, brings out the sad tidings of the sudden death of Dr. Cramer Roberts, the late Vicar.

TENNYSON'S ODE.

The following lines of Tennyson on the Funeral of the Duke of Wellington are so curiously applicable to the Funeral of the Queen, that we have ventured to adapt them by the change of the masculine to the feminine, and one or two slight verbal alterations. The affection with which Tennyson regarded the Queen forbids us to think that he would have resented such a use of his muse:—

Bury the great Queen
 With an Empire's lamentation,
 Let us bury the great Queen
 To the noise of the mourning of a mighty nation,
 Mourning when their leaders fall
 And sorrow darkens hamlet and hall.

* * *

Lead out the pageant sad and slow
 As fits an universal woe,
 Let the long procession go
 And let the sorrowing crowds about it grow,
 And let the mournful martial music blow;
 The greatest English Queen is low.

All is over and done;
 Render thanks to the Giver,
 England, for thy own
 Let the bell be tolled,
 Render thanks to the Giver
 And render to Him the mould.

* * *

Let the bell be tolled
 And a reverent people behold
 The towering car, the sable steeds;
 Bright let it be with its blazoned deeds
 Dark in its funeral fold:
 Let the bell be tolled:
 And a deeper knell in the heart be knoll'd,

And the sound of the sorrowing anthem roll'd
 Through the dome of the golden cross,
 And the volleying canon thunder her loss
 In voices unknown of old.

Throughout the centuries let a people's voice
 In full acclaim,
 A people's voice,
 The proof and echo of all human fame;
 A people's voice when they rejoice,
 Attest their sovereign lady's claim
 With honour, honour, honour, honour to her Eternal honour to her name.

A people's voice: we are a people yet,
 We have a voice with which to pay the debt
 Of boundless love and reverence and regret.

* * *

O Statesmen guard us, keep our noble country whole,

And save the one true seed of freedom sown
 Betwixt a people and their ancient throne,
 That sober freedom out of which there springs
 Our loyal passion for our temperate kings:
 For saving that ye help to save mankind;
 Till public wrong be crumbled into dust,
 And drill the raw world for the march of mind,
 Till crowds at length be sane and crowns be just.

Her voice is silent in your council halls
 For ever; and whatever tempests lour
 For ever silent: even if they broke
 In thunder; yet remember all
 She spoke among you: and the one who spoke;
 Who never sold the truth to serve the hour,
 Nor paltered with eternal God for power;
 Who let the turbid streams of rumour flow
 Thro' either babbling world of high and low;
 Whose life was work;
 Who never spoke against a foe,
 Whose eighty winters froze with one rebuke
 All great self-seekers trampling on the right:
 Truth teller was our English Alfred named;
 Truth lover was our English Queen,
 Whatever record leap to light
 She never shall be shamed.

* * *

Now to glorious burial slowly borne,
 Followed by the great of other lands;
 She on whom from both her open hands
 Lavish Honour shower'd all her stars,
 And affluent Fortune emptied all her horn
 Yea let all good things await Him who cares not to be great,
 But as he saves or serves the State.
 Not once or twice in our rough Island story
 The path of duty was the way to glory:
 He that walks it only thirsting
 For the right, and learns to deaden
 Love of self, before his journey closes,
 He shall find the stubborn thistle bursting
 Into glossy purples, which outridden
 All voluptuous garden roses.
 Not once or twice in our fair island story
 The path of duty was the way to glory:
 He that ever following her commands,
 On with toil of heart and knees and hands,
 Through the long gorge to the far light has won
 His path upward, and prevailed,
 Shall find the toppling crags of duty scaled
 Are close upon the shining table-lands
 To which our God Himself is moon and sun.
 Such was she: her work is done.
 But while the races of mankind endure,
 Let her great example stand
 Colossal, seen of every land,

And keep the soldier firm, the statesman pure;
 Till in all lands, and in all human story
 The path of duty be the way to glory.

Peace, it is a day of pain
 For one, about whose patriarchal knees
 Late the little children clung.
 O, peace it is a day of pain,
 For one upon whose heart and brain
 Once the weight and fate of Europe hung.

Ours the pain be hers the gain
 More than is of man's degree
 Must be with us watching here
 At this our great solemnity.
 Whom we see not we revere,
 We revere, and while we hear
 The tides of music's golden sea
 Setting towards eternity,
 Uplifted high in heart and hope are we,
 Until we doubt not that for one so true
 There must be other nobler work to do.
 For though the giant ages heave the hill
 And break the shore, and evermore
 Make and break and work their will
 Though world on world in myriad myriads roll
 Round us each with different powers,
 And other forms of life than ours.
 What know we greater than the soul?
 On God and Godlike men we build our trust.
 Hush. The Dead March wails in the people's ears:

The dark crowd moves and there are sobs and tears.

The black earth yawns: the mortal disappears,
 Ashes to ashes, dust to dust.
 She is gone who seemed so great:
 Gone, but nothing can bereave her
 Of the force she made her own
 Being here, and we believe her
 Something far advanced in state;
 And that she wears a truer crown
 Than any one that man can weave her.
 Speak no more of her renown;
 Lay your earthly fancies down.
 And in the vast Cathedral leave her.
 God accept her, Christ receive her.

DEATH OF THE QUEEN.

The sad news of the Queen's death was received in Thursday Island about 11 a.m. on January 22, and the Cathedral bell was tolled for an hour.

On Sunday, January 27, a most solemn and impressive service was held in the Cathedral at 10 a.m. There were present, the Permanent Force under Captain Coxen, the Garrison Battery under Lieutenant Smith, and the members of the Rifle Club, together with the Masonic Lodge in regalia. The Cathedral was hung with black cloth from every pillar, and on the pillars nearest the chancel were the monograms "V.R. 1837," and "V.I. 1901," surrounded by the most magnificent wreaths of white flowers made by Mrs. Bennett, wife of the Rector's Warden. On the pulpit was a most exquisite cross of white jasmine made by Mrs. Smith. The altar, pulpit, lectern and stalls, were also hung with black. The congregation completely filled the building, and everywhere in dress and demeanour were signs of the sadness felt by all.

The Service began with hymn 375, and sentences from the Burial Office consisted of Mattins and Litany with Special Psalm Lessons and Prayers. The first lesson, I. Chron. xxix. 10-29, was read by Hon. John Douglas, the second, I. Cor. xv. 35, by Captain Coxen. In the Litany the following prayers were used in addition to the prayer from the Burial Service.

Blessed Lord, in whose sight the death of Thy servants is precious, we give thanks to Thee and magnify Thy Name for Thine abundant grace bestowed on our late Sovereign Lady Queen Victoria, by which she was enabled to do Thy will in faithfulness for so many years. Let her memory be ever blessed among us that we may follow the example of her patience and charity, her steadfastness and devotion to duty. Grant that our land may ever be preserved from the assaults of all enemies, bodily and spiritual, and devoutly given to serve Thee in all good works through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Almighty God, who rulest over all the kingdoms of the earth, and disposest them according to Thy good pleasure, we beseech Thee to bless Thy servant Edward our King. Let Thy wisdom be his guide and Thine arm strengthen him. Let justice, truth and holiness, peace and love flourish in his days. Direct all his counsels and endeavours to Thy glory and the welfare of Thy people. Grant that neither sinful passion nor private interest may disappoint his care for the public good. Let him always possess the hearts of his people. May his reign be long and prosperous and crown him with immortality in the life to come through Jesus Christ our Lord.

The Bishop's sermon was as follows:—

"He died in a good old age, full of days, riches, and honour."—I. Chron. xxix. 28.

It is not easy to express in adequate words the thoughts that surge over us on hearing across the seas that sad message, "The Queen is dead."

So in an ancient forest might an old and stately oak sink slowly to its fall. Urged by no untimely axe, but yielding little by little and still resisting the steadily pushing weight of years, the goodly branches, under which so many generations have sat at ease, sink and sway and totter till, with a crash that re-echoes through earth and sky, the great tree falls prone and still, and the awed spectator holds his breath for a moment, wondering at the vast gap that is left in the forest, and full of pity for the silence and the loss.

For two-thirds of a century Queen Victoria has filled a foremost, and for the last twenty-five years the foremost, place among the kings and great ones of the earth, and were there no other considerations, the removal of such a figure must stir the memory and fire the imagination, but the Queen was not only great in unexampled length of years and almost unexampled power and prosperity, but she was also pre-eminent in those noble qualities which go to make the truly great in peer or in peasant.

The office of a modern constitutional monarch is no easy sinecure. It entails constant work, constant watchfulness, constant fatigue. It is full of pitfalls for the unwary and there is little place of forgiveness for the unwise. Yet from the days when the burden of empire was laid on her youthful and inexperienced shoulders, Victoria so lived and so acted as to win not only the love and loyalty of her own people, in all parts of her vast dominions, but also the almost universal respect and reverence of foreign nations.

The foundation of the Queen's success was her profound conviction that she held her authority as a trust from God, and was responsible to Him for the use she made of it.

"I can scarcely believe that I am Queen of England" she said to her mother on the morning after that memorable midnight when the Archbishop had announced to her the death of William IV. "Indeed you are," replied her mother. "Do you not hear the people cheering you outside the palace?" "Then if I am Queen let me give you my first command: I wish to be alone, quite alone, for the rest of the day."

Who can doubt the influence of that day of prayer and preparation or that her keen sense of responsibility and of the need of Divine assistance deepened rather than lessened with years?

She came to the throne at a time when the idea of monarchy had fallen, it must be admitted not undeservedly, into considerable disrepute; and when competent observers believed that it could never again hold the place it had once occupied either in the confidence of statesmen or the hearts of the people; but by sixty years of practical proof of the vast services it can render in a free and constitutional State she completely rehabilitated it in the eyes of statesmen, while at the same time winning an unparalleled hold on the hearts of the people.

It is no easy matter for us to estimate as yet the debt of gratitude that we owe to the Queen, but some two or three points come out clearly:

1. We owe no little of the freedom from revolutionary violence and political unsettlement which has distinguished our history during the last half century, to the fact that the ruler of the State was one whom all alike respected, against whom no slander could be raised, and whose life was patently devoted to fulfilling the duties of her position. It would be difficult to over-estimate the importance of this factor of the Queen's personal influence not only in softening political asperities at home, but in binding together the elements and nationalities of the Empire. That she learned Hindostanee in her old age, in order to be able to talk to the Indian princes in their own tongue, is but one small example of her infinite patience and tact.

2. The Queen exercised the strongest immediate influence, almost always for good, on the affairs of the country. Like England's other great Queen—her equal in intellect but far her inferior in moral worth—she had a strong will, and she refused to be coerced by her ministers into any action which she believed to be contrary to the true interests of the country. Time after time she refused to sign rash or ill-considered despatches which would have involved the country in unnecessary and perhaps fatal wars. Time after time she intervened to soften the bitterness of party strife, or to suggest some honourable compromise. Not seldom, as when the Lords refused to pass the Army Purchase Abolishment Bill, by a bold exercise of power she secured the will of the people against the opposition of those in authority. Amid the succession of changing politicians she was the one constant element of stability, the one minister of unrivalled insight and experience.

3. Whatever moral evils may have affected English society it could at least not plead, as under many previous rulers, that it was but following the example of the throne and court. Not only did the Queen herself set the example of a high tone and pure life, but she made constant and strenuous efforts to preserve the same tone in her court, and there can be little doubt that the Queen's openly expressed disapproval of vicious living has been a very real and restraining influence. Who can estimate the silent influence of the fact that for over sixty years the highest person in the land was one to whom truth, purity, and justice were no mere names, but an integral part of her conviction and life?

4. The Queen has given to the nation and the world an example which cannot easily be forgotten of consideration and thought for others. Although she might well have pleaded the pre-occupation of cares of state, no accident befell her people which did not bring forth from her words of well chosen sympathy and comfort, and often the most obscure sufferers were surprised and cheered by messages from their Sovereign. Queen Victoria remembered that her people were men and women like herself: she tried to share their joys and sorrows, and her love and care were repaid by a devotion and affection such as were perhaps never enjoyed by ruler before. Great soldiers and leaders like Napoleon were, it is true, almost worshipped by their soldiers; but their path was shadowed by the silent curses of the widow and the orphan, and since the days of Alfred the Good it would be difficult to point to any ruler so universally beloved. Well did our great English poet say,

Revered, beloved—O you that hold
A nobler office upon earth
Than arms, or power of brain, or birth
Could give the warrior kings of old.

May children of our children say
She wrought her people lasting good;

Her court was pure: her life serene;
God gave her peace, her land reposed,
A thousand claims to reverence closed
In her as mother, wife and queen;

And statesmen at her Council met
Who knew the season's when to take Occasion by the hand, and make
The bounds of freedom wider yet

By shaping some august decree,
Which kept her throne unshaken still,
Broad-based upon her people's will,
And compassed by the inviolate sea.

5. The Queen gave her people a noble and enduring example of unflinching devotion to duty. No despatches were ever signed without reading and careful consideration, no private sorrow was allowed to hinder public duty, where only private preference was concerned she could yield gracefully, and her industry was unremitting. At an age when retirement and repose were fairly earned she continued to exercise the onerous duties of her office with undiminished care. Duty was her watchword, and she was faithful to it all the days of her life.

In contemplating such a life we need first of all to render thanks for it to Almighty God for the help and strength it has been to the nation and the example it has been to all the world. England to-day owes no little of her peace, her prosperity and her prestige, to the fact that Victoria the Queen has worked and been. To God then be the first thanks for the services to England of the ruler He gave to her for so many years.

Secondly, we should strive to show our worthiness of the gift by a higher conception of national life and duty. Lord Rosebery has recently reminded us in very noble words of our national responsibilities, of the need of national self-examination, and of obedience to the national conscience, and I would also quote to you the less known words of Bishop Spalding of Colorado, "To make righteousness prevail, to make justice reign, to spread beauty, gentleness, wisdom and peace, to widen opportunity, to increase good will, to move in the light of higher thoughts and larger hopes, to encourage science and art, to foster industry and thrift, education and culture, reverence and obedience, purity and love, honesty, sobriety, and disinterested devotion to the common good, this is the patriot's aim, this is his ideal," and this aim and this ideal Queen Victoria has done not a little to make possible for us.

Yet after all, it seems somewhat ungracious to weigh our benefits even in thankfulness. We are here to-day not to appraise but to mourn; we mourn as an empire, we mourn as a nation, we mourn as the people of Australia, given unity and nationhood by one of her latest acts, we mourn, many of us, almost as individuals for a personal friend, a mother in Israel as well as a mother of nations.

We could have wished that her last days had been unclouded by public sorrows and unshadowed by private bereavements, but God knows best and orders best for prince and peasant. For her there is rest after labour, and solace after pain. Our Church permits us to pray that we, as she, and she, as we, may have perfect consummation and bliss, both in body and soul, in God's eternal and everlasting glory. We will not add to the beautiful words of our prayer-book. We thank God for her life, we bow to His will in her death, and we, who lived under her in peace, and our children, who know her but in history, will cherish ever the memory of our wisest and best ruler, a woman in whom was no guile, a lover of her people, and a faithful servant of her God.

One word in conclusion. We should be but very little loyal to her that is gone, very careless of what deeply concerns us and our children if we did not pray to-day most earnestly for him on whom the burden of her work has fallen. He has had a long training and has borne himself with marvellous tact and a very high conception of duty. We have every reason to believe that as King he will show himself the worthy son of a worthy mother, but he needs our prayers. His life was spared once in an almost miraculous reply to the prayers of the nation. He needs them even more to-day, and so closely are we bound one to another that we are praying for ourselves and our children too when we pray to-day with no feigned voice, "God save the King."

The Queen's work lives and will live in the tradition she has created and the ideal she has set up. We can best show our gratitude for her memory by making it possible to continue her work, and by loyalty and sympathy to keep the throne of England that which it has under Victoria become—the symbol of a just and righteous authority broad based upon the people's will and widening with the widening conceptions of national honour and duty.

May she whom we have lost rest in peace, and may we who are left strive the more earnestly for the example of her life, to do our duty as men and as citizens in this, our life here, which is the training and prelude of that which is to come.

In the evening the services were continued, and the Bishop spoke of the progress of the nation during the Queen's reign, the high example she had set, and the need of maintaining the national character.

On Saturday, the day of the funeral, a service was held at 9 p.m. that being the actual hour at which the procession was starting, allowing for the difference of time. The whole of the troops were present and the Oddfellows' Lodge in Regalia, and a very large congregation of men. The burial service was read, and the Bishop read a part of Tennyson's ode on the funeral of the Duke of Wellington, pointing out its strange applicability to the present occasion.

Churchwardens are reminded that the second quarterly Diocesan Assessment for the year is due on June 30th, and should be sent forthwith to the Diocesan Secretary.

INDUCTION OF REV. W. P. GLOVER.

Rev. W. P. Glover, of whom we give an illustration in this issue, was inducted as Bishop's Vicar at the Quetta Memorial Cathedral on Sunday evening, April 14th. There was a large congregation. After the third collect the Bishop preached an earnest sermon warning the congregation not to be mere lookers-on and critics, but to be fellow workers with their spiritual Pastor. It was not enough to sit in Church and listen to a sermon, even to listen aright required an effort and a determination on the part of the hearer, while to hear was little unless its precepts were put into practice. They must work out their own salvation, and work, too, for others. The true ideal of worship had been largely lost. Its object was to give rather than to receive. Turning to the Vicar-designate, the Bishop said that he knew with what high ideals and with what true devotion he had undertaken his work, and he prayed that God's blessing might rest alike on him and on the people to whom he was to minister. He looked to him for loyal assistance, both in the Parish and in the Diocese. The Bishop then formally inducted Mr. Glover, and licensed him as Bishop's Vicar and also as Diocesan Secretary, and commended him to the prayers of the congregation.

ALTERATIONS IN PRAYER BOOK.

The following alterations in the Book of Common Prayer, consequent on the accession of King Edward VII. and the establishment of the Commonwealth in Australia, are authorised by the Bishop for use in the Diocese of Carpentaria:—

In Morning and Evening Prayer:—

In "a Prayer for the King's Majesty": 'our most gracious Sovereign Lord, King Edward'; and the consequent alterations of the feminine into the masculine pronoun.

In "a Prayer for the Royal Family": . . . 'to bless our gracious Queen Alexandra, George, Duke of Cornwall and York, May, Duchess of Cornwall and York, and all the Royal Family,' etc.

In the Litany:—

Corresponding changes to be made in the suffrages relating to the King and to the Royal

REV. W. P. GLOVER.

Family; and in the "Collect for the King," and in the "Prayer for the Church Militant," in the Service of Holy Communion.

In the Prayer for the Parliament:—

The Prayer should be: 'as for this Commonwealth in general, so especially for (the Federal Parliament, and for) the Parliament (assembled in this State).'

Prayers for the Governor-General and State Governor:—

The following "Prayer for the Governor-General and the State Governor" has been recommended by the Primate to the Bishops, and is sanctioned for use in the Diocese of Carpentaria:

'Almighty God, who upholdest and governest all things in Heaven and earth, we humbly beseech Thee to send Thy blessing upon Thy servants the Governor-General of Australia and the Governor of this State. Grant unto them strength and wisdom for the fulfilment of the duties of the high offices to which they have been appointed. Preserve them by Thy providence, and so guide them by Thy good Spirit that they may do all things to the glory of Thy Holy Name, and to the welfare of this country and Commonwealth. We ask this in the Name of Jesus Christ our Lord and Saviour. Amen.'

In the Litany:—

In lieu of the additional suffrages hitherto used in the Litany, the following are authorised (to be used after the suffrages for the members of the Royal Family):—

'That it may please Thee to bless and preserve Thy servants the Governor-General and the Governor of this State, and to guide all their counsels for Thy glory, and for the welfare of this Commonwealth.

We beseech Thee to hear us, good Lord.

That it may please Thee to bless (the Federal Parliament, and) the Parliament (assembled in this State), and to direct and prosper all their consultations to the advancement of Thy glory, the good of Thy church, the safety, honour, and welfare of our Sovereign and his dominions.

We beseech Thee to hear us, good Lord.'

All Rector's and Churchwardens are requested to see that the necessary alterations are made in the Public Service Books of the Church.

Heavier responsibility attaches to those who have larger knowledge.

The truest joys which we have experienced have come when we have had grace to enter most entirely into a sorrow not our own.

The beginning of the century finds the Bishop of Gloucester (Dr. Ellicott) the senior Bishop amongst the English Diocesans in point of consecration; but there are no fewer than six retired Indian and Colonial Prelates who date still further back. One of these, Bishop Courtenay, was consecrated in 1856. Amongst the English Prelates, the Bishop of Gloucester (born 1819) is the oldest. Then come the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of Llandaff (1821), and the Bishop of Worcester (1823).

The annual income of the Church of England from permanent sources is roughly five millions and three-quarters, of which four millions and a quarter are derived from the benefices. In addition to this amount, the value of ecclesiastical buildings—taking only their rateable value—is about £600,000 per annum. To these large amounts must be further added, fees, pew-rents, etc., and the enormous sum raised voluntarily—about seven millions and a-half—and thus the total income of the Church may be roughly set down at fifteen millions a year.—Church of Ireland Gazette.

News of the Parishes.

THURSDAY ISLAND.

The annual Easter Meeting was held on Monday evening, 8th April, in the Japanese School-room. It was gratifying to see so many members of the congregation present, and the interest which was taken in the proceedings. The Bishop presided, and in his introductory address spoke of the past and present of the Parish. His Lordship referred to the recent appointment of the Rev. W. P. Glover as Vicar of the Parish, and pointed out that whilst he himself, as Dean, held the rectorship of the Parish, the Vicar would work on practically independent lines.

The Churchwardens presented their report and financial statement. The total income of the Parish for the year amounted to £274, whilst the expenditure reached the total sum of £268, thus leaving a small credit balance in hand. The retiring Churchwardens, Messrs. G. H. Bennett and A. Murray, were re-elected, the former being nominated by the Vicar and the latter being chosen to represent the people.

It was decided to form a Parochial Council, consisting of six members, in addition to the Churchwardens. The Vicar nominated the Hon. John Douglas and Mr. Reid, and the parishioners elected by ballot Messrs. Hadder, Mitchell, G. Smith, and Dr. Wassil. One or two matters of parochial concern were discussed, after which a very successful meeting closed with the blessing pronounced by the Bishop.

The Vicar of the Parish has now completed a thorough visitation of the parishioners, and has received a very kindly welcome on all sides. Our Church people are glad to have pastoral cares once more after the vacancy which has existed in the Parish for over three months.

It is gratifying to note an increased attendance at the Church Services; but there is great need for further improvement in this respect. We should like to see more of our people present on Sunday mornings. Surely many parishioners could make a point of coming to this Service, which, after all, is more important than the evening Service, inasmuch as the Eucharist is then celebrated.

Mr. G. H. Hadder, the capable organist of the Cathedral, is away on holiday. During his absence Miss L. Bennett (who has hitherto rendered valuable help in the capacity of assistant organist), and Mrs. Reid take the organ at morning and evening Service respectively. It is hoped that the choir will soon be strengthened by additional voices. If our people would only recognize that musical talents come from God, they would then see that the highest use to which they can put these gifts is the service of praise and prayer in God's sanctuary.

Two members of the choir are at present away from Thursday Island, viz., Miss Shepherd and Mr. A. Murray. The cause of their absence, however, is a very happy one, inasmuch as they are about to be united in holy wedlock. We wish the young couple, who have both rendered valued service to the Church, every happiness in their new life, and trust that God's blessing may rest upon that life-long union, which, by the time this paragraph appears in print, will have been happily consummated.

On the evening of Thursday, 11th April, the Bishop and Miss White gave an "At Home" at the See House. The purpose of the gathering was twofold—first, to afford an opportunity to the Bishop and Miss White of meeting the Church-people of Thursday Island, and secondly, to welcome the Rev. W. P. Glover to the Parish and introduce him to the parishioners. Extensive preparations had been made for the reception and entertainment of the guests, and when the visitors assembled the house and grounds presented a very pretty appearance. Chinese lanterns illuminated the latter, whilst flags, flowers, and other decorations imparted a pleasing effect to the rooms and verandahs of the See House.

A fine musical programme was rendered by ladies and gentlemen gifted with ability in the art of music, and this, together with free and pleasant conversation, helped to pass away an enjoyable evening. After partaking of refreshments the guests departed to their homes, bearing kind impressions of the Bishop and Miss White's hospitality, and of the good feeling existing among the parishioners.

On the following evening the Melanesian Boys were entertained at the See House. The decorations which had been made for the previous evening were still kept up, and greatly pleased the coloured guests. A number of pictures were shown to the boys. Games were indulged in, and this pastime proved especially enjoyable to the participants. Refreshments were handed round, and then a number of hymns were sung, after which the boys went off, highly delighted with their evening's entertainment.

CROYDON.

St. Margaret's.—The new Rector, the Rev. Godfrey Smith, officiated for the first time on Easter Sunday. At the morning administration of Holy Communion twenty partook, while at the evening Service there was a crowded congregation. The difficulty is not in bringing together a large congregation for the Sunday evening, but it is most difficult to persuade the Croydon people the importance of the morning Service, as giving an opportunity for beginning the day with God.

The Sunday School has now been re-organised, and the teaching staff had been added to in the services of Mesdames Harries and Fardon, but the latter has been taken away from us owing to the appointment of Mr. Fardon to the charge of Morven State School. The loss is great to Croydon Church: the Girls' Bible Class will be without a teacher, and Mr. Fardon's removal will cause a vacancy in the Parochial Council—Morven the gainers thereby. Messrs. James Morrison and Jack Chandler have been appointed respectively secretary and treasurer of the School, and Miss Janet Rudd is now the School organist. There is a sad need of a few earnest and competent teachers.

The Easter Vestry was held in the Church on Sunday, April 28, after the evening Service, the congregation for the most part remaining. There was no balance-sheet to submit to the meeting, but the banking account showed that the debt on the building had increased to £300, and that there was, in addition, an overdraft of over £60 on the current account, exclusive of some unpaid accounts. The election of officers was as follows:—Rector's Warden, Mr. H. Bechtel; People's Warden, Mr. T. H. Waldie; Parochial Councillors, Messrs. A. Kerridge, Geo. Scott, C. H. Maslin, J. Greenhalgh, J. Sabine, H. A. Watson, J. Greig, R. Ross, B. Nobbs, E. D. Harries, Sergt. Henderson, W. A. Gilder, G. R. Hepburn, and D. Fardon.

There was almost a full attendance of the Parochial Council on the following Thursday. His Lordship Bishop White, being then on a visit to the Parish, presided. The finances of the Church were discussed, and the Rector's Stipend for the next twelve months was fixed. The motion for the consideration of the advisability of erecting a suitable residence for the clergyman was carried almost unanimously. Steps have since been taken to raise the necessary amount. The Bishop expressed his pleasure at being able to attend a meeting in which so much interest was manifested.

Ladies' Committee.—This committee has been formed to act as district visitors, and to collect for the maintenance of the Church. A small portion of the Parish has been assigned to each. Encouraging results have so far been the outcome of their efforts, and the prospects of the Church's finances are now, owing to their labours, much brighter. The following are the members of this committee:—Mesdames Waldie, Maslin, Bickerton, Outhbert, Kerridge, Greig, Young, Scott, Bechtel, and Miss Wilmot. This committee will probably form the nucleus of a future Church Guild.

The Rector's Induction took place on Friday, May 3rd. We cull the following from the Croydon Mining News:—

"On last Friday evening, in the presence of a very large and representative congregation, the Rt. Rev. Gilbert White, Bishop of Carpentaria, performed the ceremony of the induction of the Rev. Godfrey Smith as rector of St. Margaret's, Croydon. In his induction address the Bishop took for his text Cor. IV. 3—'Withal praying for us that God would open unto us a door of utterance to speak of the mystery of Christ for which I am also in bonds.' His Lordship referred to the inconsistency and neglect of nominal Christians, whose conduct drove the younger generation away from the church and thus shut their ears to the 'door of utterance' and prevented them hearing the Gospel. The work of the clergyman was to preach the 'mystery of Christ.' The Lord had chosen certain of his servants to be the special stewards and representatives of the Gospel. It was a great practical difference whether a minister believed he received his commission from the people or from God. In concluding, His Lordship pointed out that the Minister of Christ was in bonds—bonds of loyalty to his Master and his own conscience, and that therefore it was to be expected of the congregation that they should assist their new Rector in every way that laid in their power. At the close of the address the Rev. Mr. Smith followed the Bishop to the Holy Table, where with solemn ceremony he was inducted to the 'cure of souls,' being formally handed his license, which was first read by His Lordship, with authority to officiate as priest of the Church of England in this parish. The hymn 'Veni Creator Spiritus' was then sung by the choir and congregation kneeling, and the service closed with the benediction."

The Bishop's Visit.—After visiting Burketown and Normanton the Bishop came on to Croydon, and there spent a week. During these few days His Lordship had very little rest. In addition to the induction, he preached three times on the Sunday (May 5th), met on different evenings the Parochial Council, the Ladies' Committee, Choir, Sunday School Teachers, and those who had but recently been confirmed. Also, the Bishop, before his departure, delivered a lecture in the Good Templars' Hall on "Some Aspects of Modern Thought," in which he treated, in a clear and able way, the trend of modern thought with regard to religion, morals, and politics.

Golden Gate.—Services have been begun at Golden Gate, which has a large and growing population, and is only five miles from Croydon, though so far the Church of England has not been represented there. The result of Mr. Smith's efforts has been very encouraging, and it will probably not be long before the Anglican Church possesses a building in this most needy portion of the Parish. One donor has given for this purpose a portion of land and £10.

COOKTOWN.

We are sorry to have missed sending in a few notes regarding the Church's work, etc., for publication in your first issue of the Carpentarian. We wish the paper every success, both financially and also as the means of spreading the work of the Church. Since the arrival of our new Rector the Easter Meeting was held, when the financial state of the Church was shown to be in a good position. Certainly there was a small debit due to the bank to commence the new year with, but we are glad to say this was paid within a fortnight. The meeting was in every way satisfactory, a good working Parochial Council being appointed for the year. Messrs. Boddington and Thomas were elected Wardens. Ever since the day when the Bishop promised to give the Parish £25 if another £75 was raised, the members of the congregation, and also the committee, have been very busy trying to raise the necessary sum. We are now glad to say the whole amount has been raised. The committee will therefore immediately commence once more and complete the repairs, &c., to the Rectory, for which the sum of £100 was required. We must tender our thanks to those ladies who, by their untiring efforts and willing assistance, raised, by means of a concert and tableaux, the balance of the requisite sum. Also our thanks to the gentlemen for assisting the ladies in every possible way. Before the Bishop pays us his next visit we hope to have the Rectory and grounds in good order.

The congregation at the Sunday Services have been remarkably good for some time past, but still there is room for improvement at the morning Services. The number of Sunday School scholars has increased lately, which is very encouraging; we are also pleased to say that two lady teachers, Mrs. Musgrave and Miss Inman, have been added to our already good staff of teachers. The Society of the Treasury continue to do good work. At their last meeting the lists of names were revised, many more being added to the subscription lists. The ladies hope now to report a considerable addition in the funds collected monthly. There have also been a few additions to the choir, who, together with our old and faithful members, now compose a really good choir, each one taking a great interest in the musical portion of the Services. We must not forget to say how sorry we all are that Miss E. Roberts has left us for Townsville. After a regular and faithful attendance for over seventeen years, her voice will be sadly missed in the choir. We wish her every happiness in her new surroundings. It is intended to present her with a Prayer and Hymn Book as a mark of appreciation; they will be sent on to her after their receipt from Brisbane. We have at present visiting us the Rev. Newton and Mrs. and Mr. Toulinson from New Guinea. The former, before he returns to his work, is to be married to Miss Sully, who is deeply interested in the New Guinea Mission work, having a special ability for the healing of bodily ailments, the treatment of complaints peculiar to the natives, and also facility for acquiring their language. We wish them every happiness for their future. Mr. and Mrs. Tomlinson are on a health trip to the old country. We have also another marriage to report between Miss Allan, a faithful member and earnest worker for the Church for many years past, and the Rev. Schwartz, of the Cape Bedford Aboriginal Mission, where he has been for many years doing a noble work. The happy couple intend making a trip to Germany, which we envy them, hoping that it will be a pleasant one, and that every happiness will attend them through life. We will conclude our few notes with another marriage between Miss Saxby, a faithful member of the choir since her admission, and Mr. Rich, of H.M. Customs, a past member of the Parochial Council and present active worker for the Church. We also wish them every happiness in life. Other interesting matters must be left for your next issue.

BURKETOWN.

It is so many years since this town was visited by a clergyman of the Church that the memory of such an event has been almost lost, so that it was with no little interest that the visit of the Bishop was looked forward to. The Waterlily, the miserable little tender which conveys passengers from the Maranoa, managed, fortunately, just to scrape over the bar on Saturday afternoon, April 20th, and then had to lie at the mouth of the river until early next morning waiting for the tide. During the night it came on to blow very fiercely, and the passengers congratulated themselves that they were not outside. A good passage was made up the river, and the Waterlily arrived at the unprecedentedly early hour of noon on Sunday; Sunday night, Monday, Tuesday, and even Wednesday being not uncommon times of arrival owing to the peculiarities of the tide. The Bishop was most hospitably entertained by Mr. A. Wells, the P.M. and Sub-Collector of Customs, and formerly Churchwarden at Thursday Island. In the evening the Divisional Hall was filled with a large congregation, of whom more than three-fourths were men. Mrs. Black played, and the singing was very hearty. The Bishop preached from the words "God so loved the world," and made an earnest appeal to the men present to lead a higher and more spiritual life. The congregation was most attentive, and a deep impression seems to have been made on many present. On Tuesday morning there was a celebration of Holy Communion at 7.30 a.m.; in the afternoon the Bishop baptized a large number of children. The Bishop had made arrangements to ride overland to Normanton, but a heavy storm made the road impassable, and he was glad to avail himself of the kind offer of Mr. Forsyth, M.L.A., to return in the Dugong, which had brought him over to address a political meeting. The Church population of Burketown is very small compared to large cities, but it is hoped that in future the place may be visited at least once or twice in the year.

NORMANTON.

The Bishop arrived in Normanton on Saturday, April 27th, and was the guest during his stay of Mr. and Mrs. Millar. On Sunday morning there was a celebration of the Holy Communion, and the Bishop preached on the text, "I am the Bright and the Morning Star."

In the afternoon he addressed the Sunday School children; and at night the Church was filled with the largest congregation seen for a very long time. The Bishop preached on the text, "The invisible things of Him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even His eternal power and glory." The Bishop dwelt on the made cumulative lines of thought which lead up to our belief in God as the Creator, Upholder, and Moral Governor of the World. The sermon was listened to with the deepest attention. During the two following days the Bishop visited the hospital and a large number of members of the congregation, leaving on Wednesday morning for Croydon.

Mr. E. A. Field, who for the last three years has been acting as Stipendiary Lay Reader at Normanton, has intimated to the Bishop his desire to leave at the end of June.

The Easter Meeting of the congregation was held on April 20th, when Messrs. Hall and Millar were re-elected Churchwardens, and Messrs. Robinson and Sherwin members of the Parochial Council. The following statement of accounts for the past year was adopted by the meeting:—Receipts: Balance from last year, £20 12s. 11d.; offertories, £45 2s. 11d.; subscriptions, £67 16s. Total, £133 11s. 10d. Expenditure: Stipend, £102 18s. 4d.; expenses, £23 0s. 9d.; special offertory, 10s. 6d. Total, £125 9s. 7d. There were 98 scholars on the Sunday School roll, with an average attendance of 76. There had been six celebrations of the Holy Communion during the year.

PORT DOUGLAS AND MOSMAN.

Visit of the Lord Bishop of Carpentaria.—The interest manifested by the Lord Bishop of Carpentaria in his second visit from 16th to 22nd March, is highly appreciated by the parishioners. During his stay his Lordship lost no time in making himself acquainted with the local conditions of this part of his Diocese. Nothing daunted by the inclemency of the weather, he travelled through flood and field, calling at as many of the plantations as the limited time at his disposal would allow.

Arriving by steamer at Port Douglas on Saturday morning, his Lordship spent a quiet day. On Sunday, at 11 a.m., the Bishop conducted Matins, and preached a most helpful sermon on the commands, privileges, and blessings of the Holy Communion at St. Andrew's Church to a full congregation, after which he administered the Holy Communion. His Lordship then set out for the Mosman, where it had been arranged he should conduct Evensong and preach. The threatening rain held off, but the roads proved very soft and slippery, making the journey somewhat tedious. At St. David's Church a full congregation had assembled, notwithstanding all the discouragements of a very dark night and an impending downpour of tropical rain. However, all were amply repaid by a bright, hearty Service, and an excellent sermon, emphasising the necessity of a definite belief founded on the true faith. His Lordship took for his text St. John iii, 17, and during the course of his address expressed his surprise that there is not a Sunday School in connection with St. David's, Mosman, but hoped that when he again visits the Parish this important nursery of the Church would be well provided for. At 10 o'clock on Sunday morning there was a Celebration of the Holy Communion, after which his Lordship set out to make himself acquainted

MISSIONS.

The sad fate of Dr. Chalmers, who for a quarter of a century has been one of the best known and most respected missionaries in New Guinea, arouses our keenest sympathy. Life-long devotion to one task is not so common as to be lightly regarded, and Dr. Chalmers showed no common ideal of duty in sticking to his post at his advanced age, when some six or eight months ago death deprived him of the devoted partner of his life, and left him stricken to the heart by the blow. Although we cannot profess to believe that an "unsectarian" society is the best means of preaching the Gospel, we cannot withhold our warmest tribute of respect and admiration for such worthy representatives of it as Dr. Chalmers, who by his faith, perseverance, and indomitable courage, won the respect of all decent white men and the devoted love of the natives of New Guinea. His death has not failed to give rise to the usual silly outcry against Missions among those who profess themselves Christians and Churchmen, and who should be ashamed of such an exhibition of ignorance and want of faith. 'Why,' they say, 'should valuable lives, of men capable of reforming those at home, or even of doing well for themselves and making a fortune in business, be sacrificed in preaching to mere blacks who are better without the Gospel than with it?'

Can, we ask in amazement, those who thus talk have comprehended the alphabet of Christianity? We do not know whether they have or not, but we do know that they often hold a prominent position and even prominent offices in the Church.

Do they attach no meaning whatever to the last solemn injunction of Christ, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature?" or do they imagine that we ought to hunt out a special class of fools, useless for business purposes and unfit to minister to the spiritual needs of a white man, but good enough to fulfil, in lieu of themselves, the most serious and emphatic command of their Lord?

If a mining prospector goes up country and is killed by the natives, do we hear on every side denunciations of the folly of looking for gold? No! He is a lion-hearted pioneer, a real white man, one who has given his life to open out the country for others. When a gallant soldier falls at the head of his troops do we hear tirades against the folly of wasting valuable lives on the profession of arms? When a fireman or policeman is killed in the execution of his duty do we say that his occupation could be dispensed with? The only grounds on which unavoidable loss of life in missionary work can be criticised is that the work itself is not needful. Is it not time that the objectors to missionary work ceased from side issues and untenable cavils, and oppose honestly, if they wish to oppose them, the plain commands of Christ, and His wisdom in issuing them.

It is wearisome in the extreme to hear men bring up old exploded fallacies, such as 'loss of valuable lives,' 'charity begins at home,' 'the heathen are better as they are,' 'native converts are no good,' &c., when all the time one knows perfectly well that all these arguments, even if they were true, which they are not, are utterly beside the point; because if we are Christians we must believe that the definite commands of Christ are imperative, and because we know that the command to evangelize the whole world is, of all Christ's commands, the most definite.

To disobey is simply to set up our judgment as to the fitness of things against His judgment, a process not only somewhat lacking in the grace of humility, but calculated also to lead to results which will be alike mortifying to our self-conceit and disturbing to our convenience.

That unbelievers should decry Christian missions is alike natural and to be expected, but it is surely about time that Christians and Churchmen should cease to league themselves with those without in the attempt to injure, by cavil and innuendo, that which is the source of their own nominal faith, the very life of the Church, and the undisputed will of her Master.

with the district, administering the Sacrament of Baptism to three children at the first place of call. While at Mosman the Bishop presided at a meeting of the Churchwardens and Parochial Council of St. David's Church. After the financial and general prospects of the Parish were discussed, and the desire for an ordained clergyman expressed, his Lordship assured those present that he would leave no stone unturned to secure a suitable clergyman, and with that object he intended at an early date to visit the Southern Dioceses to try and procure the services of men in Holy Orders for this and other Parishes in the Diocese. The Wardens and Councillors thanked his Lordship for presiding, for his words of counsel and encouragement, and for his kind interest in the Parish, assuring him of their sympathy and hearty co-operation in the work of the Church in this part of his Diocese. Tuesday evening the unpropitious weather did not prevent a fairly large attendance of the South Sea Island boys at the Church, when the Bishop addressed them from St. Matthew xxv. It was with deep attention they listened to the simple language and practical lessons as spoken by his Lordship. Wednesday morning saw his Lordship aboard the train returning to Port Douglas, where he had announced that he desired to meet the congregation attending St. Andrew's in the evening, but climatic and other conditions prevented the people assembling. During his visit the Bishop expressed his appreciation of the interest taken by Mr. St. Clair Bernard in St. Andrew's Church, Port Douglas, it being largely owing to his activity that the Church Services are maintained at the Port. He was also very pleased at securing the help and co-operation of the Misses Blackmore in connection with the Society of the Treasury. On Friday his Lordship returned North by steamer.

Visit of the Rev. H. W. Curtis.—In fulfilment of the promise made by the Lord Bishop of Carpentaria when with us in March, the Rev. H. W. Curtis, recently appointed Rector of Cooktown, came to us for Sunday, May 12th. Mr. Curtis must have been gratified at the cordial greetings which met him on all sides on his return after an absence of nearly four years. On Sunday Mr. Curtis had a very full day at St. David's, Mosman, conducting morning and evening Services, administering the Holy Communion and Holy Baptism, addressing the South Sea Island boys at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and presiding at the annual Easter Meeting of the parishioners after evening Service. Before his sermon the rev. gentleman expressed the pleasure it afforded him to be again amongst the parishioners, congratulated them on the erection of the Church, and the district on the many signs of prosperity and advancement since his last visit. His addresses were greatly appreciated, and we trust may prove fruitful in holy living. On Wednesday evening Mr. Curtis conducted Service and preached at St. Andrew's, Port Douglas, presiding at the annual Easter Meeting at the close of the Service.

PORT DOUGLAS.

Easter Meeting.—On Wednesday evening, May 15th, after Service, the annual Easter Meeting of the congregation of St. Andrew's Church, Port Douglas, was held, Rev. H. W. Curtis, Rector of Cooktown, presiding. The minutes of the previous annual meeting were confirmed, after which the hon. secretary and treasurer (Mr. St. Clair Bernard), submitted the balance sheet for the year ending March 31st, 1901, which showed that there had been an appreciable decrease in the Church's liabilities. The Chairman, after expressing his pleasure in presiding, pointed out that there must be a substantial increase in the interest and financial support of the Church if the present order of Services is to be maintained. He stated that the Lord Bishop of the Diocese was desirous of obtaining the services of a man in Holy Orders for the Parish, in conjunction with Mosman. It was decided that a special canvass of this part of the Parish be made, with the view of obtaining definite promises of subscriptions for the stipend of a clergyman, and the result reported to Rev. Mr. Curtis on his next visit. The Chairman did not consider it necessary to appoint Wardens and a Parochial Council, but suggested that Mr. St. Clair Bernard be asked to undertake the responsibility of the financial affairs of the Church and that he be fully authorised to deal with same. Mr. Bernard, in accepting the position, exhorted those interested throughout the Parish to a more lively interest in their privileges and responsibilities in connection with the Church. A vote of thanks was accorded those ladies who had interested themselves in the Society of the Treasury in the past, and to the Misses Blackmore for the energetic way they have taken up that important office for the current year. A vote of thanks to the Chairman for presiding, and the meeting closed with the benediction.

ST. DAVID'S, MOSMAN.

Annual Easter Meetings.—At the close of Divine Service on Sunday evening, May 12th, the Annual Easter Meeting was held, the Rev. H. W. Curtis, Rector of Cooktown, presiding. The minutes of the previous annual meeting were read and confirmed, after which the hon. secretary and treasurer (Mr. R. D. Rex) read the Churchwardens' and Parochial Council's Report for the year ending March 31st, 1901, and also submitted the Statement of Accounts. The Report referred to the formation of the new Diocese of Carpentaria, of which this Parish forms a part; the interest manifested by the Lord Bishop on his two visits since his consecration; the difficulty experienced by the Bishop in obtaining a Priest for the Parish; and the financial position of the Church. The Chairman congratulated the Wardens and Council on their Report, and trusted the amount owing on Building Account would soon be paid off. He said that he had been deputed by the Bishop of the Diocese to request the people of Mosman to undertake the responsibility of providing for the stipend for a resident clergyman, so that he might live in Mosman, thus affording more frequent and regular Services, and a more concentrated ministry. The Churchwardens and Parochial Council to be elected were deputed to ascertain what definite promises and support the Parish is prepared to undertake and report same to the Rev. H. W. Curtis, on his next visit in July. The Report and Balance Sheet having been received in the usual way, the officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows:—Mr. R. O. Jones was re-appointed Rector's Warden; Mr. F. W. Barnard re-elected People's Warden; and Messrs. E. W. Spon, H. S. W. C. Roberts, H. W. Skellman, re-elected Parochial Councillors, with Mr. G. B. Locke, who succeeds Mr. John White, who withdrew. Mr. R. D. Rex was again appointed Hon. Secretary and Treasurer, and a well merited vote of thanks was accorded him for faithful service during the past year. A vote of thanks to the retiring officers, the ladies, for supplying flowers for the Altar, and the Chairman, for presiding, the meeting closed with the Benediction.

On Sunday, May 12th, when the congregation assembled at St. David's, they found the Church comfortably furnished with substantial and well-designed pews, the work having been carried out by Mr. Locke. The Church needs painting very badly, in order to preserve it against the destructive influences of the weather. After erecting so worthy a building, at a cost of nearly £200 (of which £40 is still owing), it is a pity to see it deteriorating through the want of the necessary coats of paint. The estimated cost of painting is £25. Will some of the readers of the Carpentarian assist this Missionary Church by contributing towards the cost of this work?

The Parishioners and friends interested in St. David's Church, Mosman, purchased, some little time ago, a suitable horse, and on May 13th, presented him fully equipped to the Parish for the use of the Incumbent. This unexpected kindness on the part of those making this gift is greatly appreciated by Mr. W. M. Wilkinson, who is temporarily in charge of the district, and, needless to say, will greatly facilitate the work of the Parish.

We suppose that democracy means rule by the people for the people's good. With the latter half of the definition we are in complete agreement; and with the first half in so far as it seems, as things are, the only course, and on the whole the wisest and justest course, to distribute the power of government as widely as possible.

It is true that, like the old democracy of Athens, our modern democracy is only a strictly limited democracy, for its most ardent advocates not only shrink from the logical conclusion of giving the franchise to all adult persons in the country, but denounce it as a monstrous absurdity that a Chinaman or an aboriginal should have a vote. However, let this little inconsistency pass, and let us consider democracy as the rule of the (white) people for the (white) people's good. What we wish to call attention to is the most widely spread delusion that the rule of the majority is the rule of the people, and that it is necessary for the people's good.

Rule by the people means that the will of the whole people is to prevail, not the will of a majority. Supposing that, of a community of one hundred, fifty-two wish one thing and forty-eight the opposite thing, how can it be possibly said that the will of the fifty-two represents the will of the whole people? As a matter of fact we know that a majority may prove itself the very worst and most conscienceless of all tyrants. Of course the real will of the people is not the will of the majority, but the will of the majority modified by the due weight given to the will of the minority. In other words, a measure passed by a small majority represents, not the will of the people, but only the will of the small and often fluctuating majority, i.e., three or four persons may act as arbiters of the will and destiny of a nation, and utterly ignore the wishes of nearly half the people. Of course it is said that the majority is largely influenced by the will and numbers of the minority, and no doubt that is usually true, but it does not always hold true when passion and party feeling are bitterly aroused; and the fact that government by majorities puts power into the hands of a small majority to cruelly wrong or outrage the feelings of an almost equal minority, shows that government by majorities does not, as a matter of fact, mean government by the people. That it does not always mean government for the people is only too obvious by the experience of any democratic legislature.

The matter is complicated by the enormous concentration of wealth in a few hands. We have been lately informed that Mr. Rockefeller has purchased Mr. Carnegie's interest in the steel trust for £20,000,000, and that the former gentleman owns at least £40,000,000, or some £12 for every person in his State. Now, what sort of an influence in Queensland would a man have who possessed, say, £5,000,000, and was willing to devote a million or two to obtaining a political majority? Dare we say that it would be impossible, even with manhood suffrage, for such a man to obtain a majority subservient to his will, and would such a majority, if obtained, really represent the will of the people of Queensland?

If the delusion that the will of the majority is the will of the people could be utterly slain, we should be at least a step nearer to obtaining that will of the people, and many concomitant fallacies would be exploded.

The sum of the whole matter is that no political machinery will obtain government by the people for the people's good. The people's will must first be trained and taught to resist passion, to respect rights, to value self-respect, to consider others before it can adequately express itself or even desire the real good of the whole people. How can selfishness be eradicated and self-control taught? Will it be accomplished by political mouthings about the rights of the people, by flatteries of its self-importance, and exaggerations of its authority to do as it will? We trow not.

The people needs to learn its duty rather than its power, to be disciplined rather than pampered, to give rather than to grasp. We hold that the people can only rule as a whole people, and act for the whole good, when it has learnt to act on those eternal principles of right and wrong which age cannot abate nor custom stale, and these principles cannot be based on aught else but the will of that Supreme Being of whose nature and attributes they are the expression.

What then shall we say of the wisdom or foresight of a State that excludes God from its schools and deprives its future citizens of that basis of moral training which alone can make them true democrats and patriots, who will place the people's good before every other earthly consideration. True democrats will not rest until the people have learnt, not merely by the cultivation of the intellect, but by the training of the whole moral nature, to put the welfare of the whole before the welfare of a part, even if that part be the most numerous part, thus making democracy not merely a name but a reality.

General Church News.

The new Bishop of London, Right Rev. Arthur Foley Winnington-Ingram, is 43 years of age, and was born in Worcester. He was educated at Marlborough College and Keble College, Oxford. He was ordained deacon and priest in 1884 by the present Archbishop of York, and has thus been only seventeen years in Orders when he finds himself in the most important position in the Church, next to the Primacy. In 1888 he began the work which made him so well known as head of the Oxford House at Bethnal Green. He continued his work here preaching Sunday after Sunday in Victoria Park, and meeting atheistic lecturers on their own ground until 1897, when he became Bishop of Stepney, with the oversight of East London. In this capacity he has won the love and enthusiastic confidence of clergy and people alike. Speaking at a meeting of the East London Church Fund, the Bishop designate said "he should carry away with him a wonderful picture of the whole-heartedness of the East-end people. He still hoped to retain in his arm the muscle which he had created by shaking hands at East-end Church 'socials'—(laughter)—and he should not soon forget the incident in the Bethnal Green road when the police were trying to protect him from what they imagined was a hostile crowd, and the crowd was trying to protect him from some unseen enemies in the distance, and shouting with one voice 'We have come to see you 'ome.'"

Mr. C. J. Rhodes has given a scholarship to Oxford of £250 a year to the Diocesan School at Capetown on the following conditions:—In the election of a student to a scholarship regard should be had to: (1) his literary and scholastic attainments; (2) his fondness of, and success in, manly outdoor sports, such as cricket, football, and the like; (3) his qualities of manhood, such as truth, courage, devotion to duty, sympathy for and protection of the weak, kindliness, unselfishness, and fellowship; (4) his exhibition during school days of moral force of character and of instincts to lead and take an interest in his schoolmates, for these latter attributes will be likely in after-life to guide him to esteem the performance of public duties as his highest aim. Mr. Rhodes has also given £3,000 to the Capetown Cathedral.

Rev. F. S. Baines, secretary to the Council for Service Abroad under the Board of Missions, has been elected to the Bishopric of Natal. Mr. Baines was formerly Archdeacon of Durban, having volunteered to serve in South Africa for five years. On his return, he took up his present duties, which he has discharged with zeal and devotion.

Mr. J. H. Dennis has undertaken to defray the total cost (£13,000) of the central tower of Truro Cathedral. The nave is to be completed at the end of next year. It is hoped that the tower will be completed a year later.

Canon Gore has been giving a lecture to the Wesleyan Ministers in London. The attendance was greater than ever known in connection with the London Ministers' meetings. The subject was "The Virgin Birth of Christ: its Religious Significance and Historical Evidence." The lecturer was warmly welcomed. The Recorder says: "There was about him an intensity, a reverence, a courage, that one could almost imagine becoming magnetic."

The Church has sustained a great loss in the death of Dr. Bright. He was not only a learned liturgical student and historian, but a man of deep piety and strong personal influence.

BISHOP POTTER AND THE POLICE.

The Bishop of New York, Right Rev. H. C. Potter, lately addressed a letter to the Mayor of New York, protesting against the connivance of the police with vice in that city. The Mayor replied in most sympathetic terms, and so great was the indignation aroused by the Bishop's eloquence that even the "boss" of Tammany Hall found it advisable to pose as the suggester of a Vigilance Committee to see that the reforms demanded were carried out. We subjoin a part of the Bishop's letter:—

"The statement now in my possession of two clergymen of the highest character contains the testimony of two men, given without exaggeration, with the most painstaking reserve, and with absolute truthfulness. In substance it is briefly this: that when one of them complained to a police captain of a condition of things in his immediate neighbourhood, whose pre-eminent infamy is a matter of common notoriety, a condition of things easily verified by any intelligent citizen who passes through the streets in which it exists, he was told that he lied; and that when, disheartened by such an experience, he carried his complaint to a higher authority in the police force he was met with insolent derision.

I affirm that such virtual safeguarding of vice in the city of New York is a burning shame to any decent and civilized community, and an intolerable outrage upon those whom it especially and pre-eminently concerns. I am not, I beg to say, unmindful of the fact that the existence of vice in a great city is, practically, an inevitable condition of the life of such a community. I am not demanding that vice shall be "stamped out" by the police or any other civil authority. That is a task which would demand for its achievement a race of angels and not of men. But I approach you, sir, to protest with all my power against a condition of things in which vice is not only tolerated, but shielded and encouraged by those whose sworn duty it is to repress and discourage it, and, in the name of unsullied youth and innocence, of young girls and their mothers who, though living under conditions often of privation and the hard struggle for a livelihood, have in them every instinct of virtue and purity that are the ornaments of any so-called gentlewomen in the land. I know those of whom I speak; their homes, their lives, their toil, and their aspirations. Their sensibility to insult or outrage is as keen as theirs who are in your household or mine; and before God and in the face of the citizens of New York I protest, as my people have charged me to do, against the habitual insult, the persistent menace, the unutterably defiling contacts, to which, day by day, because of the base complicity of the police of New York with the lowest forms of vice and crime they are subjected. And, in the name of these little ones, these weak and defenceless ones, Christian and Hebrew alike, of many races and tongues, but of homes in which God is feared, and His law revered, and virtue and decency honored and exemplified, I call upon you, sir, to save these people who are in a very real way committed to your charge, from a living hell, leprous, deadly, damning, to which the criminal supineness of the constituted authorities, set for the defence of decency and good order, threatens to doom them.

This, sir, is my case. I leave it confidently in your hands. Confidently, I say, because I cannot believe that you will fail to recognize in it a great duty, a duty which you will set yourself to discharge, no matter how great the cost. I do not forget what has come to be too often expected in our days from those who hold office when those who are their partisan associates are involved in wrong-doing. But I cannot believe that, in such a case as this, you will hesitate as to your duty, no matter where the doing of it may compel you to strike. Great place such as yours demands great courage and great sacrifice. Great crises such as that which has now come in the history of our city, and I think I may be forgiven if I add, in your own career, demand great acts. I cannot believe that you will disdain an opportunity so unique as that which now confronts you for action worthy of your office, your citizenship, your manhood.

I am, sir,

Respectfully yours,

HENRY C. POTTER,

Bishop of New York.

Nov. 15, 1900."

OUR OWN CHURCH.

If meekness inherits a special blessing the Church of England should be greatly blessed, for its members show a most singular meekness wherever their own faith is concerned. If it is a question of contest of convictions, as in the case of mixed marriages, they seem to take it for granted that it is they who should smilingly give way, and they will subscribe with cheerfulness to any religious body that asks them while their own Church is languishing for want of support. A man said to us a few days ago: "The members of the Church of England are the only people who are ashamed of their Church; and have no enthusiasm for it." We do not believe that this is true, but it has a basis of truth.

There can be little doubt that the members of our Church are, as a rule, painfully deficient in any knowledge of why they are Churchmen, and why they might not as well be anything else. Having little knowledge they have weak convictions, and easily become a prey to false teaching.

We desire to point out briefly why we are in conscience bound to be, and remain members of the Church of England. It is because, so far as we can see, the Church of England is more truly catholic, i.e., more like the primitive undivided Church of the Apostles, the first four centuries and the four Œcumenical Councils than any other religious body in our land. She is more primitive and catholic than the Church of Rome, because the Church of Rome, while retaining catholic truth, has made pernicious and utterly unauthorised additions to it (1) by substituting at the Lateran Council of 1216 a material, gross and irreverent theory of the Mass for the earlier primitive and catholic doctrine of the spiritual presence of Jesus Christ in the Holy Eucharist; (2) by in the ninth century introducing a practically new order of ministry, that of a Pope, who was not merely primus inter pares, but who absorbed into himself the rights of the primitive order of bishops, making them his mere vicars, and claiming an authority subversive of that of the ancient self governing councils of the Church; (3) by, in the thirteenth century, attributing to the Blessed Virgin Mary a position, authority, and honour inconsistent with that of a created being; (4) by the utterly unjustifiable withdrawal from the laity, in A.D. 1415, of their undoubted primitive and catholic right to the cup in the Holy Communion; (5) by making confession, contrary to primitive use, a necessary condition of communicating, and the baseless theory which gave rise to the great abuse of indulgences; (6) by the Papal Bull of A.D. 1854, which made the Immaculate Conception of the Blessed Virgin an Article of Faith, thus derogating from the unique honour of Christ as alone conceived and born without sin, and emphasising the unprimitive and uncatholic position in which His Mother had been placed; (7) by the decree of the Vatican Council of 1871, which gave the Pope a position of infallibility denounced as monstrous by a previous Pope, unintelligible even to its authors, but a deadly weapon to enslave the Church.

For all these, and other minor reasons, we hold that the Church of England is more true to primitive and catholic use than the Church of Rome—that if we believe we are right we cannot give up our own Church for Rome without the sin of wilfully acting against the light.

Equally we believe that the Church of England is more primitive and Catholic than the host of religious bodies which have dissented from her teaching and separated from her discipline during the last four hundred years. As the Church of Rome has added to, so these bodies have subtracted from the faith once delivered to the Saints. (1) Many so-called Christian bodies have practically abandoned, with their Creed, any real belief in the Incarnation, and have sunk into a mere Humanitarianism, or a barren Unitarianism. How serious this danger is may be gathered from the late Mr. Spurgeon's solemn denunciation of "the down-grade theology" of modern dissent. (2) Many have either practically ignored or formally abolished the two great Sacraments ordained by Christ Himself. The Salvation Army, for instance, has formally abolished Holy Baptism in favour of a flag-waving ceremony, devised by General Booth. Can presumption go further? (3) All have abandoned the historic Episcopate, so strongly insisted on by Clement of Rome, who wrote perhaps even before St. John's Gospel was written, and Ignatius, who wrote but a few years after. Many have given up also even a show of the Divine institution of Ordination. (4) All have also given up Confirmation, many times mentioned in the New Testament, and admitted even by Calvin to be of Apostolic origin. (5) Nearly all have given up even the ideal of the unity of the Church, which is so strongly insisted on by our Lord ("one flock one Shepherd") and by St. Paul, in his denunciation of the sin of schism. (6) Most have completely lost the conception of the Church as a Society, which underlies all Christ's teaching on the subject. By insisting simply on the individual's need of salvation they have lowered the idea of Christianity, and given occasion to the enemy to blaspheme. (7) In some there has been a distinct departure from the high standard of the primitive and Catholic Church. Irreverence has not merely been tolerated but introduced into worship; the clear teaching of the Church as to the binding nature of the marriage tie has been explained away to allow of divorce and remarriage; and mere emotion has been authoritatively allowed to usurp the place of devotion. For these reasons, we hold that the Church of England is more true to primitive and Catholic use than the bodies that have separated themselves from her; and that, if we believe we are right, we cannot give up our own Church for them without the sin of wilfully sinning against the light. We do appeal to our own people to have more backbone and to be less flabby in standing up for their Church. She has no origin to be ashamed of; she does not fear enquiry; she bases her claims on Scripture and on history, and she is worthy of all the affection, loyalty, and faithfulness that her children can show towards her.

KAPARLGOO MISSION.

Mr. Lennox, Superintendent of the Kaparlgoo Church Mission to the Aborigines, had an unpleasant experience in February last. Writing to the Bishop, he says:—

"I left Port Darwin on February 9th in company with Mr. S., whom I had engaged as knowing the coast, to help me to bring round the cutter. On the afternoon of February 12th we entered the mouth of what he said was South Alligator River. On going slowly up the river against the tide, as we had no means of making a fire on board, I suggested that I should go ashore, make the tea and bread, and overtake him. We did not anchor as we had no dingey (I nearly paid dearly for want of it). On trying to overtake him I was confronted by a large creek, which I had to head. I found that he had mistaken the river, and I finally reached the Mission Station, after forty hours' travelling with bare feet. He was not there. After searching a long time, and getting the natives to search, I concluded that he must be lost, and as a last resort made a desperate effort to reach Brooks' Creek overland in flood time. It was risky, but thank God I succeeded, and found that S. had arrived and that a steamer had gone out to look for me."

Mr. Lennox goes on to say that the Mission had suffered greatly from the blacks obtaining opium from the Chinese, and adds: "We are thinking of going further from civilization."

The balance sheet of the Mission for the last eighteen months has been published. The total cost of the work since its commencement has been £196 5s. 4d., out of which £40 was for the purchase of the boat. Deducting passage moneys from Adelaide, £28 4s., the total working expenses for eighteen months appear to have been £128, which includes all the expenses of Messrs. Lennox and Gathercole, stores, building, and miscellaneous items. Surely these men not only take their lives in their hands (Mr. Lennox was clubbed almost to death in Western Australia in 1898), but carry self-denial to a point which is almost sublime. Only £120 5s. 1d. has been up to this time received in subscriptions, so that there is ample opportunity to assist the only Church Mission to the Aborigines in our Diocese. Subscriptions may be sent to hon. treasurer, Mr. J. E. Lawton, North Terrace, Adelaide, or they may be sent to the Diocesan Secretary, See House, Thursday Island, and will be forwarded by him.

According to the latest news, received on May 23rd, it had been determined to continue work on the same ground. Mr. Lennox was hoping to travel across to Brooks' Creek to see the Bishop on his way South.

LECTURE BY THE BISHOP.

The following is taken from the Croydon Mining News of May 10th:—

"SOME ASPECTS OF MODERN THOUGHT."

His Lordship the Rt. Rev. Gilbert White, M. A., Bishop of Carpentaria, lectured on the above subject in the Good Templars' Hall on Wednesday evening. Mr. Warden Millican occupied the chair.

His Lordship commenced by briefly outlining the ground to be traversed, beginning by arguing in proof of the existence of a Supreme Being, which he contended had been proved by the consent of man, there never having been a whole nation of agnostics; by the evolution of the universe, by order, beauty, the will of man to do right or wrong, and by certain aspirations in our being, such as prayer. Materialism could not produce anything higher than itself; where, then, did man's spiritual ideas come from? These main lines of thought were all in support of the theory of the existence of God. In dealing with Evolution the lecturer referred to the writings of St. Basil, the eminent theological ecclesiastic, in the fourth century, to show that there was no need for alarm at the spread of that theory. That writer had told them that in the opinion of some, the world had not been created by successive acts of God, but had been all evolved from one primal unit, and he had also supplied the answer 'Transfer then your wonder to Him who gave the unit such a power to develop.' The definition of Evolution given by Herbert Spencer and St. Basil's definition were not incompatible, and did not differ in the slightest degree from the account of the Creation as contained in Genesis. As a matter of fact Evolution in no way excluded God, or detracted from his majesty and power; it did but increase the wonder felt by man at God's method of working. Referring to Materialism, His Lordship illustrated the change in belief during recent years and the rebound back to Christianity by reference to the conversion of Professor Romanes, of Cambridge, and recommended his hearers to read Mr. A. J. Balfour's 'Foundations of Belief,' after a perusal and study of which it would require a tremendous act of faith for a man to believe in Materialism. Next referring to the doctrine of the Trinity, the lecturer argued that it was simpler to believe in the three persons than in one, as in order to complete the relationship the second and third persons should be postulated, the doctrine not being unphilosophical, but absolutely essential to the philosophical comprehension of the God-head. Miracles were next referred to. They had been a stumbling block to many people who defined them as violations of the natural law, but daily the contrary was being proved by science. The proper definition of a miracle was the superseding for an adequate spiritual object of a lower by a higher law of nature, which was done even by the simple act of throwing a stone. The arguments of those who did not believe in miracles were a priori—that they could not happen. It was not a question of what can happen, but what has happened and does happen. The miracles performed by Christ were the result of a higher personality, and were not in any case given in proof of his divine origin. In regard to the cardinal miracles of the Resurrection and the Virgin birth of the Redeemer, if a new kind of life was to be introduced on to earth, then an adequate cause was supplied for superseding the ordinary lower law by a higher law; the adequate spiritual cause was there, and hence the miracle. Passing on to the Old and New Testaments, the lecturer referred to the synoptic Gospels and the four Epistles of St. Paul as containing genuine pictures drawn by contemporaries of Christ as he appeared to them, and their authenticity was undoubted. The Old Testament, which was still subject to much criticism, was the literature containing histories, genealogies, political addresses, sanitary regulations, poems, prayers, etc. The books might be said to have differing values but they were united on three points in unison of aim, God's love for man, the need of righteousness, and the need for a Redeemer. Scattered through the Old Testament were evidences of evolution from the lower to higher ideas of morality and of God. It was adapted to all people, being the only book that could be translated into every language. It spoke to every people and to all human consciences. The bases of morality were next referred to. Egoism—doing right because it pays best—was not tenable, while the Utilitarian theory of John Stuart Mill, of 'the greatest good for the greatest number,' although high in principle, was impossible of accomplishment without including among the 'greatest number' the coloured races of the world. If that were to be the basis of morality the conditions of white men would have to be lowered 50 per cent. so as to raise the coloured race 5 per cent. That was the logical conclusion if Utilitarianism were to be the basis. Another flaw in this theory was that men were inclined to think that the best way of accomplishing their aim was for each man to look out for himself and study the best way to secure his own happiness. There therefore only remained one basis of morality, the doctrine of the Church, religion, the means of knowing right from wrong implanted in man by the Supreme Being. Man's moral responsibilities were similar to his responsibilities to nature, law or society. He was controlled by certain defined limits, but outside those limits he was morally responsible and free.

At the conclusion of His Lordship's address a couple of questions by Mr. Millican and Dr. Rendle were answered, and a hearty vote of thanks to the lecturer, proposed by Mr. T. W. Frost, seconded by the Rev. Mr. Blackney, and carried by acclamation, brought a pleasant, entertaining, and instructive evening to a close.

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS.

All contributions of Parish News, etc., must reach the Editor by the last day of February, May, August, and November in each year.

Official Notifications.

The Rev. W. P. Glover has been appointed Chaplain to the Military Forces at Thursday Island.

Mr. A. E. Field, Lay Reader at Normanston, has resigned his office; and Mr. L. F. Woolrych has been temporarily appointed in his place.

Mr. Charles Herbert Wilson has been licensed as Hon. Lay Helper at Brock's Creek, Northern Territory.

Mr. F. C. Hall has been admitted to the Diocese. He will be licensed as Lay Reader at Croydon.

Church Wardens are reminded that the third quarterly Diocesan Assessment fell due on September 30th. The amount should be paid forthwith to the Diocesan Secretary.

All communications on Diocesan business should be addressed to the Diocesan Secretary.

Diary of the Bishop's Overland Journey.

May 28th.—Left Thursday Island a little before sundown in the "Taiyuan." Very few passengers, but a number of horses. Choppy sea next morning, and ship rolled a great deal. No other passenger at meals. Curious to watch the horses accommodating themselves to the roll of the vessel; it must give them a good deal of exercise. The build of these vessels, with their fort like upper deck, accessible only by winding stairs, suggests, without the racks of rifles in the saloon, that in the China Seas the deck passengers forward are not always as harmless as our present lot. For the next two days, after passing Cape Wessel, the weather was perfect and the ship steady. Melville Island, with its tens of thousands of buffaloes, showed low on the Northern horizon, while the low mangrove capes and islands of the Northern Territory were skirted to the South; no lights and many shoals, a place to be avoided in dirty weather. As we neared Port Darwin the sun set in a ruddy haze, and a bush-fire glowed in his place; the pearling fleet crept homewards, some twenty luggers, before the light breeze, and the great moon—almost full—made a flood of silver mist on our quarter, so that one could see where sea ended and sky began. We anchored soon after eight, but the laws of Port Darwin are framed on those of the Medes and Persians, and if it be but five minutes after sunset the ship must wait till next morning to pass the doctor. Up at 6 a.m., and finally allowed to land about 8 a.m. and so to my former quarters at the Residency, whither Mr. Justice D. had most kindly insisted on my repairing.

I soon met many old friends, and Mr. L. informed me that he had arranged to start on Tuesday morning. Went to the telegraph office and arranged to hold Service at Brock's Creek, and then to be "driven" the following day some fifty miles to Pine Creek. In the afternoon I was driven out to visit a valued member of the Church who had been seriously ill. Arranged weight and form of luggage. Including everything it was about 65 lbs., nearly half being coats and blankets. I only hope they may be enough for the cold nights on the tableland. Port Darwin is a beautiful town. It is situated on low red cliffs about 80 feet high, overlooking the magnificent harbour; and has a tropical look from the luxuriant vegetation and well-kept gardens. The principal buildings are of stone, and the whole place has a far more permanent air than is usual in the North. On Sunday there were well attended Services in the Town Hall, and a meeting was held to arrange for more permanent religious ministrations.

THE BISHOP OF TASMANIA
(Recently elected as Secretary of the S.P.G.)

On Tuesday, June 4th, I left Palmerston by train at 8 a.m. The weather was extraordinarily hot for the time of the year. The line is narrow gauge, 3ft. 6in., with steel sleepers. The chief features of interest are the huge ant-hills, ranging from 12 to 18 feet in height, and built of a reddish earth. In addition to these are many smaller ant-hills built of a grey slatey-looking soil mixed with chopped grass. These hills are in shape somewhat like a very broad chisel, and are peculiar in that they are always exactly North and South. In fact, they are as good as a compass. Another remarkable feature of the country from Palmerston for about 120 miles South is the magnificent growth of an indigenous bamboo, which lines most of the creeks. At Brock's Creek I left the train, Mr. L. taking on my heavy luggage, and spent the night at Mr. W.'s, manager of the N.T. G.M. Co. at Brock's Creek. The white population is very small, but we had a hearty little Service in the office of another mining company, which had been kindly lent to me, and I licensed Mr. W. as hon. Lay Reader for the district. The night was terribly hot, and I was quite unable to sleep until my charitable bachelor hosts took the bed to pieces and re-erected it, with its mosquito curtain, on the open terrace in front of the house. A magnificent view met me at sunrise over a broad valley stretched out like a map at my feet; most of the hills being marked by traces of mining works. Unfortunately, a blight seems to have descended on the once flourishing mining industry of the N.T. The mines seem to be still productive, and indeed have scarcely been tested, few having been sunk 200 and only one 300 feet. Much of the ground is private property, with absentee owners, and of the rest the greater part seems to be held by English capitalists, who have sent out highly salaried English managers with the usual result, and the properties are being held without being worked on at a minimum of working power for speculative purposes. The miners are nearly all Chinese, and are paid 5s. a day. I doubt whether the mine owners really benefit, and certainly the community does not. I can see no such justification for the employment of aliens here such as does I think exist in the case of the sugar and pearling industries.

I was to start next morning at 8 a.m., but we did not get off until 9 a.m., and at nine miles passed Yam Creek, where some fifty Chinese are employed. Soon after this we missed our road, and had to return along a steep creek for some four or five miles to get on to the track or what passed for a track. My conductor, Mr. F., was a splendid driver. The track, at best but a horse pad, disappeared altogether in parts. Mr. F. studied the country with a glance from the top of a range, and with an encouraging,

"We'll let her rip," we were off. I believe Mr. F. has won some reputation as a steeplechase rider, and he certainly deserves it, for we cleared obstacles in fine style. It is stimulating to the interest when one wheel mounts a rock while the other is climbing down the edge of a yawning washaway, but though we did balance for a few moments at the bottom of a creek while the hind wheels were deciding whether or not to take a header over the front, we came to no grief even when a bolt went on a steep descent. Mr. F., who had promised to get me in at noon, was on his mettle, and jumping down as if we had been a Boer cart with French a couple of miles in the rear, he had all put right in two minutes, and we were tearing down hill to test it. It was nearly 2 p.m., however, when we reached Burrundi, and a prize turkey which had been awaiting me had given me up as a bad job, and was consoling a Parliamentary candidate. After a most hospitable welcome I had to start off again at 3 p.m., driven by Mr. S., for Pine Creek, twenty-six miles distant. We had a change of horses waiting on the road, and travelled in great style. From the top of the Union Mountain we had a magnificent view, reminding me of the country between the Hawkesbury River and Sydney. Everywhere were old claims and workings, now entirely in the hands of the Chinese. We met the one white man in the district, and he is leaving at the end of the month. We reached Pine Creek just after dark, and I was hospitably entertained by Mr. K., the Post and Telegraph master, nor was I sorry to get in after fifty-two miles of unspeakably bad roads. After something to eat I had nearly all the inhabitants to Service, and then retired to a well-earned repose.

Pine Creek is the terminus of the rail road and the Chinese town. There are about 250 Chinese miners here, and 400 at Wandii. There is a good cyaniding plant, which seems to be doing well. After driving round the neighbourhood we returned for lunch, and after visiting the various Church-people made a final start with Mr. L. at 3 p.m. He had his camp about five miles out of town, and we stayed there for the night. After visiting the camp I went to see Mr. G., who has a station close at hand, and found that though a loyal member of the Church he had had no opportunity of attending Service for twenty years. In the evening I baptised his three children, the eldest being thirteen. About 100 yards from the house I noticed a tank of water, and learnt that the second boy (at eleven) had set up a claim of his own in the yard, at which he worked diligently as soon as he got back from school; he had made his own cradle and implements, and actually succeeded in getting a very appreciable quantity of gold. This young man ought to turn out a very practical miner.

This was my first night in camp. It was very warm, and my mosquito net was soaked through and through with the dew.

June 7th.—We were up before daylight, but it is a long business to load nine pack horses for the first time, and it was 9 a.m. before we got off. We are, besides Mr. L. and myself, two white men and three black boys, and with a buggy and twenty-six horses we make a large cavalcade. Our progress is slow, as Mr. L. has to inspect each telegraph pole as he rides along. I travelled comfortably and in state in the buggy. The country consists of somewhat uninteresting granite ridges, but there are two beautiful flowering trees—one with a large yellow flower called locally the cotton tree, and the other with a beautiful red flower something like Pyrus japonica in the distance, and a large edible bean. After passing two creeks with the significant names of Sea Pie and Broken Wheel, we halted to change horses at Cullen's Creek (ten miles). A fine diamond sold for £80 was found in this creek just above the crossing, but no others could be discovered. I had a look to see if I could find an endowment for the Diocese, but only found one or two small but delicate flowers. About 2 p.m. we reached Ferguson's Creek (17 miles) and camped. I got under a shady tree and did some arrears of writing. In the evening I made some enquiries about the number of blacks in the Northern Territory. It is very difficult to obtain any correct estimate, but the whole of the northern coast district appears to be thickly populated by wild natives, who find plenty of food in the fish and wild fowl which abound in the lagoons. In the interior, also, the numbers are very considerable, though the greater scarcity of food keeps them down. The blacks gather the wild yams when in season and keep them in immense mounds, sometimes 10 feet high, covered with sand, as potatoes are preserved in England. I was informed that the blacks see in the Magellan clouds surrounding the Southern Cross the form of an emu, and have a tradition that the three bright stars of the Cross are an emu's footprint, and the two pointers two blackfellows tracking it. I made my camp under a tree where the dew was not so heavy, and next morning we drove on fifteen miles to the Edith River, over granite and slate ridges. Much of the country is auriferous. In Pine Creek I saw a curious

The Chinese were sweeping up the dust of the road and washing it for gold. I had never before seen such an example of literally picking up gold in the streets.

I have at length been honoured by the attention of the camp dog, who came and introduced himself to me in the most affable manner last night, and now comports himself with no air of conscious inferiority.

In the afternoon I rode up the creek about five miles to some fine falls. The creek is still and deep, with beautiful green islands and many shady trees. We saw a number of shells of a small turtle on which the blacks had been having an aldermanic feast. We also came across two blackfellows with a tame dingo. They had just extracted a bandicoot from a tree. The dingo seemed to be quite under control. The black made him drop the bandicoot which he was carrying by the simple expedient of pinching his hind leg. The sandstone cliffs of the tableland form here a fine semicircle of red and yellow rocks, about 200 feet high, through a cleft in which the river falls into a magnificent basin nearly a mile in circumference and very deep. It is full of fish-eating crocodiles, which grow up to nine and ten feet in length. Next morning we were up early and got off in good time, the first eighteen miles over rough basaltic country. On the top of the range is the grave of a telegraph operator who died there, and who expressed a wish to be buried "where all the winds blow." We met a fine and intelligent-looking black from Alice Springs named Frank. He gave my companion an account of how he had once set out to shoot the moon. Having got hold of a rifle he climbed with great difficulty the highest mountain he could find and there lay in wait for her to come near. Finally he made sure of his mark and shot, but the bullet made no impression, although he was sure he had shot straight! The heat was intense, like that of a day in mid-summer, and after a couple of hours' halt we went on ten miles to the Katherine River, a magnificent stream nearly as large as the Burdekin, with banks 100 feet high. Here are a telegraph station, police quarters, and a public house. At night the inhabitants gathered on the verandah of the postmaster's house and we had a hearty Service, although the singing left something to be desired. There was a great gathering of blacks for a corroboree, and all night long the distant wailing cries and booming of wooden trumpets could be heard.

Next day (June 10th) a mail was leaving for Pine Creek, and I spent all the day until the mail went answering my correspondence, which had overtaken me here. In the evening I took the boat and sculled a little way along the river. The blacks were resting on the river bank after their corroboree. The men, who wear only a loin cloth, are finer made than the Queensland blacks, and seem to have a good time, as food and water are plentiful, the country being practically unstocked. Some ten miles above the station the Katherine emerges from very rough country through a great gorge of sandstone cliffs. Lava, sandstone, quartz and limestone are said to be jumbled up together in inextricable confusion, making the country most difficult to enter. The formation is said to resemble the famous Banks of South Africa, and good gold has been found where prospectors have been able to penetrate.

Next morning I was up at daylight, and Mr. H. kindly took me before breakfast to see the curious rocks of crystalline limestone about two miles from the station. The rocks rise abruptly to the height of some 15 or 20 feet from the sandy soil, and are weathered into the most extraordinary shapes; narrow lanes are formed between the rocks, giving the place its local name of Little Melbourne.

I spent the morning in visiting the small population of the Katherine, and found then nearly all members of the Church of England and glad to find that their Church had not altogether forgotten them. After lunch I bade farewell to my kind hosts at the station, and went out to camp at the Six-Mile Creek. Here I noticed a fine bowerbird playing round with bright pebbles, glass, and broken telegraph insulators. With regard to these latter it may be mentioned that the greatest enemies of the line in the Northern section are the frogs, who creep up the poles and destroy the insulation with their wet bodies. The hornets' nests are also a source of trouble. Lizards and flying foxes are also occasionally electrocuted by the copper wire. A curious kind of fig tree grows here. The leaves feel exactly like sandpaper and are used by the blacks as such. A short while ago a traveller was found here by one of my companions, dead in his mosquito net, apparently from snake bite. The night was cooler and the next morning quite fresh. Some time was lost in finding the horses, and though up at 5.30 a.m. we did not get off until nearly 10 a.m. The road was chiefly over sand and ironstone overlying limestone, which cropped up in the most uncomfortable way. Seventeen miles brought us to Bacon Swamp, where we camped near a tree marked KING 18/2/71. In spite of its name it is rather a pretty little waterhole. The name arose from the men employed to build the telegraph line striking here on account of insufficient food, when the contractor to pacify them gave them a stock of bacon which he had in his tent. A few drops of rain in the night. Left camp about 8.30 a.m. Heavy sand; passed King's Creek (4 miles) and Roper River (4 miles). This is the head of the great river that empties itself into the Gulf of Carpentaria. Several curious trees the names of which I could not obtain. Twelve miles more to Providence Knoll, where we camped. Very curious deep circular waterholes on the rising ground. A pretty spot, surrounded by fine trees. The name arose through the higher ground being a refuge for the survey party when threatened by a flood. A creeper with beautiful red and black seeds grows in the scrub here. There are two great drawbacks to travelling in this country, the grass seeds and the flies. The latter are most troublesome even at this time of year, covering everything from sunrise to sunset. At night, much conversation about the blacks. The problem is very pressing here, the natives are very numerous and the police very few; every man, when off the main track, carries his life more or less in his hand. A simple verbal report, made in my presence by a linesman to his inspector, exemplifies what I mean. He was out about twenty miles from the Telegraph Station, looking for some of the Station cattle—they must have cattle to live—with a black boy. About sunset, when he camped, some 200 blacks came out on a neighbouring hill, and an old man raising his arms in the air began a long chant apparently of anathemas directed against the black boy. In the morning the hobbles and bells were found to have been removed from the horses, which latter were recovered after much difficulty. It was discovered that the blacks had camped within 200 yards, and that their camp was full of spears and weapons. Owing to the loss of the bells and hobbles, Mr. C. could not remain, and had to abandon the cattle. These were supposed to be friendly blacks, and many were known to C., who is a steady trustworthy man, and always treats the blacks well. It is quite clear that he had a narrow escape. Two policemen and two trackers seem to be the sole legal protection for some 20,000 square miles of country to the East and South. If report says true they have enough to do to protect themselves. One cannot wonder that the blacks succumb to the temptation of killing cattle, which wander perhaps fifty miles from their owners; on the other hand they seem also to kill wantonly cattle which they cannot use, and often within a few miles of the station—even in places where the manager has killed beasts regularly for them. Altogether the problem of obtaining justice and protection for white and black alike is not easy. Many whites as well as blacks are killed, and as usual the innocent often suffer most.

Next day (June 14th) we drove over very low country liable to heavy floods, the head waters of the Roper. The floods are said to cover many miles of country in a wet season; the soil is poor and sandy. We camped at some waterholes on Stirling Creek. I noticed a tree with curious seeds provided with two large vanes which make it whirl round like a windmill as it falls from the tree, doubtless aiding to carry it to a distance. The vanes are the shape of a ship's propeller.

Up early (5.15 a.m.) next morning; breakfast finished before daylight. Journey over black soil flats with many creeks. Passed Abraham's Billabong, a beautiful waterhole covered with lilies and surrounded by fine reeds; then on four miles farther to the Bitter Springs, where we camped. This is a mineral warm spring on a patch of limestone, highly charged with sulphur and bubbling up with considerable volume from a clump of pandanus trees, and beautifully clear. The river is a wide, deep stream of still, permanent water fringed with huge paper bark and other trees, and full of fish. The most noticeable are the striped tiger fish and the ten-gun brig, a small white fish with five large black spots like ports down each side. The soil here seems to be very rich, especially along the banks of the creeks.

Next morning (June 16th) we went on fourteen miles to Elsey River Cattle Station. On the road we met a teamster returning to Pine Creek. He had been over two years on the journey to Powell's Creek, having been delayed by droughts and floods. There are about 5000 head of cattle on the run, which is good country and very well watered. The only literature I had with me was a late copy of the Church Times and a copy of St. Augustine's Confessions. Somehow here the latter seems the most modern. Nice points of ritual have a diminished interest when the nearest Church is 1200 miles away, but the old problems of the human heart are as real and as pressing among the stockmen on the Elsey as they were to the African Saint. How shrewd his comment on the force of example: "O nimis inimica amicitia . . . cum dicitur, 'Eamus, faciamus,' et pudet non esse impudentem!"

At night we had a most hearty Service on the verandah. It was most cheering to see the great attention and the efforts made by the men to join in the responses and the singing. I was afraid that my Service books had been left behind, but fortunately they overtook me at the Katherine, and proved very useful.

I saw here a novel sight: a Chinese drover, who, with his assistants, was bringing down 150 cattle for a Chinese butcher. The Chinese are always ready to pay cash either for cattle or payable mines, and are pushing their way steadily. We did not start until the afternoon, and then made our way to what is called on the map All Saints' Well. The well is there no longer, having been made in the bed of the creek, in which there was now water. A tree called gutta-percha grows here. It bleeds a milky, sticky sap when cut, very like india-rubber, and burns with a faintly similar smell. All round this country one is struck by the beautiful great patches of red everlasting on the ridges and high ground, covering acres in places with a red carpet. We were up early and got a good start before 8 a.m. About four miles on the road we left the low Elsey country and with it all traces of tropical vegetation, entering on dry limestone country covered with a thin layer of ironstone. After about twenty-two miles travelling we reached No. 2 Well. During the late drought there was no water between here and Newcastle Waters, and all the stock had to be moved here. The well is a fine and well-built one, with a substantial fence and covering, and is about eighty feet deep. The limestone formation is curious, and is mixed with flint. Next day we went on to No. 3 Well, which has been lately completed, and is 107 feet deep. The old well was broken into by the creek in the wet season, and tons of earth were carried down, leaving an excavation thirty feet wide by sixty in length and twenty-five deep. Although all this has disappeared down the well the latter seems as deep as ever, but dry. During the time that the water was running into the well the sound could be heard three miles away, but the water all disappeared, like the earth, into some interior chasm. The formation of the stone in the new well is very beautiful, consisting of cavities in a kind of sandstone, filled with most beautiful limestone crystals. The water in the water-hole near the well is just like milk. It is said that water of this colour evaporates very slowly. Certainly it is very cold while ordinary water is quite warm. The night was quite cold. Next day we drove on through the same kind of country between a low sandy ridge and the dry coolibah swamp, which is dignified with the name of Birdum Creek. There are no creeks and no hills in this part of the world. We camped at the Ironstone Hole. One of the boys brought me a piece of skull carefully held between two sticks. Two black boys died here of thirst, and the natives shun the spot. The S.E. wind was very piercing all the morning.

Next day (June 21st) we did not make such an early start as usual, as we had a short stage. After about ten miles of what is called Bay of Biscay country we turned off the road to find water. The going was terribly bad, the ground being full of holes and very uneven. Had the buggy not been very strong it would have been broken to pieces; as it was we smashed a swingle-bar and broke a strong iron rail. Finally, however, after two or three miles of jolting we reached a Blue Grass Swamp and camped there, as the stage into the station was too long. A very beautiful tree with a scarlet flower, something like a poinciana, was in full bloom along the road. It goes by the name of the Coral Tree. The leaf is curiously shaped, something like a laterally extended ivy. The flies destroy all comfort in travelling. It is one continual battle from sunrise to sunset. I am told, however, that they are not usually so bad.

Next day (Saturday) we passed over some flat, uninteresting country for about twenty-one miles to Daly Waters Telegraph Station, which we reached in time for lunch. The station was deserted during the late drought, as there was no water within fifty miles, and all the stock were removed to No. 2 Well. Distance from Port Darwin, 413 miles.

On Sunday morning we had service at the station, and the singing was led by a harmonium and a violin; in fact, I think the violin did most of the singing, but we made up at night by singing until we were hoarse.

The natives here plaster their bodies in winter with a mixture of earth and ashes, which makes them look as if they were dressed in grey tight-fitting clothes. We had just enough rain to mark the dust, and the weather turned warmer. I obtained here some interesting native stone implements, including a spearhead beautifully cut out of glass.

We left Daly Waters with many thanks to our most kind hosts on Tuesday, June 25th, and went about seventeen miles through patches of mulga and hedgewood scrub to Auld's Pond, where we camped, going on the following day to Milner's Lagoon, a fine sheet of water in a plain covered with bluebush which seemed to be greatly approved of by our horses. The flies were worse here than at any other point, and that is saying a great deal. The lagoon was covered with white spoonbills, ibis, and a few ducks, which latter soon took themselves off. Twenty miles of thick mulga and hedgewood scrub, traversed by a narrow winding road, brought us next day (June 27th) to Frew's Ironstone Lagoon, a beautiful waterhole.

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA,
NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. I.—No. 4. Thursday Island, Oct. 1, 1901

THE BISHOP'S MOVEMENTS.

The Bishop, the first portion of whose diary on his overland journey we print in this issue, arrived at Oodnadatta on Tuesday, August 13th, having been just ten weeks in travelling the 1,300 miles from Brock's Creek, where he left the railway. At Oodnadatta he was fortunate in meeting the Commissioner of Railways, who courteously invited him to proceed to Adelaide in his special train, thus enabling him to arrive in time for Sunday, August 18. The Bishop, who was the guest of the Bishop of Adelaide, and whose journey excited great interest, not only among Churchmen but among others also, preached in the Cathedral on Sunday evening. There was a crowded congregation, and the offertory of over £18 was devoted to the Diocese of Carpentaria. On Monday evening a public welcome was tendered to the Bishop in the Victoria Hall. There was a large attendance. The Bishop of Adelaide, the Right Rev. Dr. Harmer, presided, and among those on the platform were Messrs. Herbert and Mitchell, members for the Northern Territory; the Hon. J. L. Parsons, M.L.C., and a number of the clergy of the Church of England.

The chairman said he could assure the Bishop that the meeting was not only full and hearty, but it was wholly representative. His Excellency the Governor had taken a great interest in the Bishop's journey, and had expressed his intention of being present with Lady Tennyson, but unfortunately, owing to the doctor's orders, he was compelled to remain at Government House. He hoped, however, to preside at a meeting which would be held in Victoria Hall next Monday evening, when the aboriginal question would be discussed, more particularly in connection with the Mission in Carpentaria. The Premier had also determined to be present, but unfortunately he was confined to his home by indisposition. The same cause was also responsible for the absence of the Treasurer. They had, however, a most representative audience, and he noticed present His Honor the Chief Justice, who always took the deepest interest in philanthropic matters. Bishop Gilbert White had been called by the press the "touring Bishop," and he thought the title was justified, except that a tour was generally on pleasure, whereas the Bishop's tour was carried out in discharge of his duties. It was only a year since Bishop White was consecrated, but since then he had undertaken journeys long and continuous. After leaving Port Darwin he had travelled 1,300 miles overland to Oodnadatta, whence a friendly train had wafted him to Adelaide with that speed characteristic of South Australian railways. (Laughter.) Bishop White was not new to Australians. He was accustomed to their ways and methods, and always secured the confidence and esteem of those with whom he came in contact. The Bishop was a keen observer and a clever sketcher, and he had consigned to paper many features of Central Australia. He was certainly the proper man in the proper place, and he would not let the grass grow under his feet. Such a thing, he knew, was a difficult matter in the Northern Territory. (Laughter.) When they read of the long journeys Bishop White would take in the northern part of his Diocese they would remember his visit and retain pleasant recollections of his work. An obligation rested on them as Churchmen to assist in the carrying on of that work. It must be admitted with shame that the Diocese of Adelaide had not fulfilled its duties in regard to distant Port Darwin, and they should determine that things in the future would not be as they had been in the past. Bishop White's hands should not be tied for want of men or money. He tendered to Bishop White a most hearty welcome on the occasion of his first public appearance in Adelaide. (Loud applause.)

Mr. C. E. Herbert, M.P., said he was pleased, as an old Territorian, to welcome the Bishop. More than two years ago he was one of those who then assembled to consider the advisableness of having a Church of England clergyman at Port Darwin. General ignorance was displayed as to the Diocese, but this was excusable, because they had not seen a clergyman for 12 or 14 years. He congratulated the Bishop on having twice visited Port Darwin since his consecration. The Bishop was a skilful general, in that he had an intelligence department; but, unlike most generals, he carried out the duties of the department himself, believing that what was worth doing at all was worth doing well. In his recent journey the Bishop showed considerable courage and determination, and that he was fully equal to the high office he held. He could imagine the interest, amounting almost to mild excitement with which the dwellers in the northern parts received the news that a strange traveller was approaching them, a traveller who had no political axe to grind, and was not anxious to lower a bicycle record. (Laughter.) In the present case it was a good, kindly man, who brought with him the consolations of religion, of which they had been deprived for 10, 20, and in some cases 30 years. He had heard a doubt expressed, and perhaps there was a slight doubt in his own mind, as to the chances of success of some of the races to be met with in the Northern Territory, the Japanese and the Chinese particularly. Still, as the Bishop had said, they were there, and it was their duty to do something for them. There was good scope for work among the youths who were growing up. Amongst the aborigines there was surely some good to be done. He had heard it estimated that there were 30,000 blacks in the Northern Territory. The aboriginal vote given by the Government of South Australia to the Northern Territory amounted to £850 per annum. That, he thought, was expended in an unmethodical manner capable of improvement. The blacks had some good characteristics, and chief among these were manliness, affection, and gratitude. On behalf of Territorians, he congratulated the Bishop on his success in overcoming the difficulties of his great journey. He had their sincere and high appreciation. He trusted the Mission work would flourish and receive practical support. (Cheers.)

Bishop White, who on rising was received with rounds of applause, thanked them sincerely on behalf of himself and his Diocese for the kind welcome extended to him in Adelaide. People had spoken before he started of the dangers and hardships to be encountered on such a long journey, but the only danger he had met was that of having his moral character deteriorated by the kindness received along the whole line of route. When he first went to Port Darwin he was agreeably surprised. He had heard most dreadful stories about the place, and had pictured it as a dry, sandy desert, with but a few Chinese humpies. Instead he found one of the most beautiful places he had ever seen, embowered with beautiful trees and palms, the bay enclosed by low reefs, and houses much superior to the buildings in many of the smaller towns of Queensland. In no place had he received a more hearty welcome than in that part of the Northern Territory. He supposed people were anxious to hear something of his travels, and he would endeavour to outline them as briefly as possible. Pine Creek interested him considerably. As it was a mining centre he expected to see something like the mining towns in Queensland, but he could not see a mine anywhere. All the miners were Chinese, and the real town was that where the Chinese lived. The party was a big one, having 26 horses, a buggy, and two or three black boys. He did not carry much luggage, but he was always thankful he had taken the precaution to take a mosquito net. From sunrise to sunset there was one continual buzz of flies and mosquitoes, and they were the only real hardships experienced. Of course they had to camp out nearly every night. The journey occupied ten weeks, and of 53 camps not more than 10 were under roofs. Edith Reservoir was only a large pool, and he felt a strong desire to have a swim in it until he learned that it swarmed with crocodiles. For 200 miles south of Port Darwin the country was all mineral territory, which had never been properly exploited, but only scratched here and there. It seemed to him that there was "something rotten in the state of Denmark" in regard to mining in the Northern Territory. Everything seemed to be in a bad state. Comparing it with Queensland from an amateur's point of view, the difficulty seemed to be that the owners were allowed to hold claims too much without working them. He would like to point out that, in justice to travellers, there were places where wells ought to be put down. He would venture to suggest to those in authority that marks should be made on the maps to indicate whereabouts water could be found. He had seen traces of where men, although in close proximity to water, had been unable to find it, and had wandered away and died. Proceeding further they came to the lagoon country and the Newcastle River. There he saw some of the finest waterholes in the whole of the journey. Powell's Creek was full of beautiful things, and he particularly admired the pebbles, jaspers, and agates to be found thereabout. In that vicinity he saw for the first time the aboriginal method of burying in trees. From this down the country became much poorer, and sand predominated for many miles. He did not intend dealing with the aborigines that night, but he showed several articles of native headgear, weapons, and other things which he had collected. He had endeavoured to give them some idea of his trip, and although that had occupied more space than he had expected, he would like to touch on one or two other questions before concluding. They were only beginning history, and it was obvious that in the future, whether they liked it or not, they would be obliged, either for peace or war, in some way or another, to enter into very close relations with the East, with China and Japan. Japan had already become a world empire, and China would very soon. They would have two world powers to face, and they could not possibly ignore it. The points at which they came into contact with the East were entirely covered by the Diocese of Carpentaria. The kind of front they presented was important.

The Japanese had thrown over their old religion, had lost all faith in it, and had now one desire, and that to become a great people. They knew that if they were to become a great nation they must have some faith, some religion to inspire them. It threw a great responsibility on South Australia. The Northern Territory was the first point at which Japanese saw this continent, and how important it was to present a good front. First impressions went a long way. He urged a vigorous development of the Mission work there. He thought it was not too much to ask that young and robust clergymen should labour there for a few years, for he could honestly say that the climate was not too severe. The work was difficult and hard, but it belonged to the Church, and should be supported. (Cheers.)

During the evening appropriate hymns were sung by the congregation, and a collection of £17 was taken up in aid of the Diocese.

During his stay in Adelaide the Bishop preached at St. Luke's, St. Paul's and Christ Church, and Port Adelaide, besides addressing several drawing-room and other meetings. From Adelaide the Bishop proceeded to Ballarat, Melbourne, and Hobart, to speak on behalf of the Diocese. He speaks at the Sydney Diocesan Festival on September 17, and preaches in St. Andrew's Cathedral on the following Sunday. He hopes to be at Port Douglas about the second week in October. The Bishop has secured a Rector for Port Darwin in the person of Rev. H. G. Gosher, B.A., Camb., of Christ Church, Adelaide, who is strongly recommended by the Bishop and Dean. Mr. Gosher will come north as soon as his place can be supplied at Adelaide. The S.P.G. has given the Bishop a grant of £300 towards the building of Bishop's College.

surrounded on three sides by low ironstone cliffs, and situated between the scrub and an open plain. Four whistling ducks were disporting themselves on its bosom, and three were shortly stewing for supper. The red cliffs, large spreading coolibah trees and winding water, make this a beautiful spot. Mr. L. had a narrow escape here many years ago. The blacks enticed two of his party away under pretence of showing them a new waterhole, and Mr. L. was reading under a tree when he happened to look round and saw a dozen wild blacks with spears ready creeping up close upon him. Fortunately his revolver was lying beside him, and at the sight of it they fled. The suspicious conduct of their guides alarmed the other men, and they fortunately returned without further search for the imaginary water-hole. Several large eagle-hawks were seen on the road, and bird life of all kinds was very plentiful. I have not seen any wallaby or kangaroos in the Northern Territory.

News of the Parishes.

St. Margaret's.—There is still cause for much encouragement here. The congregations continue to be fair in the evening, and there is certainly a perceptible increase in the average number of communicants and in the attendance at morning prayer; but the small attendance at these Services speaks far from well with regard to the spiritual state of the Anglican community. The Rector still holds out hope of improved condition of matters in this respect.

The finances of the Church are in a most hopeful condition, and the long standing overdraft of £60 on the current account has been converted into a credit balance of £30, after only a four months' special effort. But there is still the debt of £300 on the Church building to face, which has been allowed to increase from £240 during the past three years, owing to the interest not being met. A further debt of £90 has been incurred by the Church Council in purchasing a suitable residence for a Rectory, but at the present improved state of finances it is to be hoped that this will be paid by the end of the Church's year. It must be borne in mind that to the Ladies' Committee, the members of which collect monthly for the Church's maintenance, is chiefly due the improved state of the finances.

A successful "Tableaux and Waxworks" was organised by Mr. L. C. Dunne. The entertainment was held in August, and repeated a week later by special request; two crowded houses were the result, and a net gain of £37 to the Church.

A Sunday School picnic was arranged during the mid-winter vacation; the Ladies' Picnic Committee worked untiringly, with the result that the scholars spent one of the most enjoyable of days. It is to be hoped that for the future the picnic will be held annually.

St. Margaret's Church loses a valued helper in Mrs. Dunne, who has filled the post of organist for the past two years. Prior to her departure, at a representative meeting of the Parochial Council, Ladies' Committee, and Choir, the Rev. Godfrey Smith presented, on their behalf, a valuable gold brooch and purse, expressing their appreciation of Mrs. Dunne's services; trusting that the change would be for her benefit, and commending her to God. Mr. T. H. Waldie has consented to temporarily fill the post left vacant.

Golden Gate.—A fortnightly Sunday morning Service is now held here. Under Miss De Vis as organist a serviceable choir has been formed, and the congregations have been most encouraging. The amount collected towards the erection of a Church here is steadily increasing, and there is every prospect of the project being shortly carried out.

Mr. F. C. Hall, from Sydney, who is to pursue his theological studies and to act as lay curate, arrived here August 23rd. With this help, Golden Gate will receive a morning and evening Service weekly, and the Rector will be enabled to pay pastoral visits to Georgetown and Normanton more frequently.

GEORGETOWN.

The Rev. Godfrey Smith, of Croydon, paid a visit to Georgetown towards the end of June. The whole town was visited, and on Sunday the Services were well attended, especially at the evening Services, when the Court House could not accommodate all those who were present.

The Sunday School, which has been carried on with great patience and persistence for some time by Mesdames Boddington, Old, and Everitt, has now, owing to their resignation at various times, been re-organised, and Miss Gibson has now taken charge, with the assistance of some young teachers. During this visit Donneybrook, nine miles out from Georgetown, was visited and several children were baptised. In addition to many baptisms at Georgetown, several children were baptised on the journey to and fro. Great satisfaction was caused when a quarterly pastoral visit was promised, and now a Ladies' Committee, consisting of Mrs. Boddington and Misses Gibson, Green and Edwards, has been formed to collect for the finances in connection with the visit of the Croydon clergyman.

Mr. G. P. Field, after his departure from Normanton, stayed at Georgetown over July 21st en route for the west coast. Services were held morning and evening, and the residents showed their appreciation by attending well.

NORMANTON.

On July 12th Rev. Godfrey Smith visited Normanton and met Mr. L. F. Woolrych, who arrived from Thursday Island to take temporary charge of St. Peter's as Stipendiary Reader in place of Mr. G. P. Field, who had just resigned. Holy Communion was administered in the morning, and there was at the evening Service a record attendance for some years. All possible seating accommodation was taken up, and some who had come to be present at the Service remained outside the building. In the morning Mr. Smith preached on the labourers in the vineyard, urging those present to work for Christ's sake only; previous to his sermon in the evening he urged the congregation to give Mr. Woolrych their hearty and sympathetic support.

Mr. G. P. Field officiated for the last time on Sunday, July 7th. On Saturday, July 6th, he was presented with a purse of £30 by the Mayor on behalf of the Norman citizens, who were present in great numbers to testify to their recognition of his faithful, earnest, and consistent work he had carried on in the town. Mr. Field is uncertain as to his future, but he will probably enter a Theological College with a view to taking Holy Orders. We wish him God's richest blessing.

Church work in this Parish is meeting with success under the Stipendiary Reader Mr. L. F. Woolrych, who has been temporarily put in charge from the Thursday Island College till a definite appointment is made by the Bishop. The Parish has been re-organised, and systematic visiting is meeting with good results. Sunday morning Services are held as well as Evensong. The Sunday School is well maintained, though more male teachers are needed. Daily Mattins are said, and are well attended by the school children; a greater reverence is noticeable in these Services. A strong choir has been organised, Mrs. Curtis giving her services as organist. A Juvenile Church Club has been formed for the purpose of bringing the younger members of the choir together, and is very successful. Confirmation classes are held and regularly attended. A committee of collectors for the "Parochial Fund" has been formed of the following: Mrs. Sherrin, Miss E. McLain, Miss M. Gough, Miss E. Williams, Miss E.

Marsden. It is hoped by Christmas to make some effort to raise funds to make improvements to the Church, which is unfinished.

THURSDAY ISLAND.

The first meeting of our newly formed Parochial Council was held on Thursday evening, 13th June, in the Japanese school-room. The following members were present:—the Vicar, the Hon. J. Douglas, Messrs. Bennett, Mitchell, Reid, and G. Smith. The Rev. W. P. Glover spoke about the work of the Parish, and suggested several matters for consideration. Mr. Bennett introduced the question of finance, pointing out that owing to recent heavy expenditure in connection with the Parish and Diocese, funds were in arrears to the extent of £40. The Council decided to institute an entire canvass of the Parish for contributions towards the parochial funds, the councillors themselves undertaking to carry it out. The Vicar was also asked to rehabilitate the Society of the Treasury, so that the Church's income might be assisted in that direction. The Council recommended the wardens to obtain an extra fifty chairs for the Cathedral, the present sitting accommodation being insufficient for the attendance at many of the services. One or two matters of minor importance were dealt with, after which a successful meeting closed. All the Councillors assured the Vicar of their hearty support in the work of the Church throughout the Parish.

Church work has been carried steadily along since our last notes were sent to the Carpentarian. The attendances at the Sunday Services have been, on the average, fairly good; but to any thoughtful observer it is patent that they are not so large as they might well be. It is manifestly a duty to assemble ourselves together for the worship of Almighty God. If we "profess and call ourselves Christians," we shall surely seek to show it by a regular attendance at God's house of worship; and a consistent endeavour to live in accordance with Christ's teaching.

We should be glad to see many of our people more regular in their Church going. Perhaps, if such were the case, they would not only derive help for their own lives, but also do good to others by the force of a worthy example.

The Annual Sunday School Picnic was held this year on 4th July, the trysting ground being Goode Island; to which location the children and their friends were conveyed in the "Garna," kindly lent by Messrs. Burns, Philp & Co. for the occasion. Everything favoured the success of the gathering—beautiful weather, generous help, and cheerful acquiescence of all concerned. The day passed off splendidly, and the Sunday School scholars retain happy memories of their day's outing. Our best thanks are due to all those who helped in perfecting the arrangements.

It is gratifying to find that the Sunday School is a valued institution in this centre. There is, at the present time, an average attendance of something like 70 scholars every Sunday. A difficulty, however, is experienced from the lack of teachers. Several of the classes are much too large, and if good work is to be done, the Superintendent will have to create extra classes. The Sunday School work is of the last importance to the Church, and it is essential that we should do all in our power to carry it on successfully. Will not one or two more, who have both the leisure and the ability, offer to assist this work? These services would be of great help to us. The Five Years Course of Bible and Prayer Book Teaching has been adopted, and weekly classes are now held for the Teachers' preparation.

The Society of the Treasury has been re-organized, and has set to work to collect regular monthly contributions towards the parochial funds. The following ladies are members of the Society:—Mesdames Mitchell and Shiress, Misses Bennett, Bebranth, and Crispin. Mr. Joe. Bann gathers the offerings of the Melanesian boys. The Japanese contribute through Mr. Kashiwagi.

Confirmation Classes have been commenced by the Vicar, who hopes to be able to present a goodly number of candidates to the Bishop in October next, for the apostolic rite of "the laying on of hands upon those that are baptized and are come to years of discretion."

A beautifully worked set of book markers has been presented to the Vicar for use in the Cathedral, by one who is interested in the work of the Church in these parts. A gift such as this not only serves a practical purpose, but is useful for edification, inasmuch as the different colours emphasize certain truths which the Church teaches at the different seasons of the year. Thus "green," which is used during the Trinity Season, is an emblem of livingness; and reminds us of God's perpetual activity in the kingdom of nature and grace.

Mr. G. H. Hadden has returned from a well earned holiday and again taken up his duties as organist and choirmaster. It is hoped that the Cathedral choir will soon be strengthened by additional voices, and the singing raised to a higher standard. We should be glad to hear of ladies and gentlemen who are willing to assist in this important branch of Church work. If God has gifted us with musical ability, surely it is only fitting that we should seek to show our gratitude by assisting in the service of praise and thanksgiving offered week by week in this Church. The choirmaster earnestly invites assistance in this direction.

We are glad to note that our parishioners are showing their practical sympathy with the management of the Carpentarian. It is surely a mark of appreciation of the value of the "paper," when no less than sixty-five of our Church people have already become annual subscribers to it.

On St. Bartholomew's Day, the anniversary of the Bishop's Consecration, Holy Communion was celebrated in the Cathedral at the early Service. Very few were present, but those who did come offered a joyful Eucharist to God for His good hand upon the Bishop of the Diocese during the past twelve months; and besought the continuance of His favour for the future of our work. On the following Sunday, the Rev. W. P. Glover, Bishop's Vicar, made special reference from the Cathedral pulpit to the completion of the first year of the Bishop's episcopate. Preaching in the morning upon "true greatness," he spoke of the service of God and humanity as the Christian ideal. At the evening service, in the presence of a good congregation, the preacher took as his text "The harvest is plenteous; but the labourers are few." After reviewing the history of the Diocese and speaking about what had been accomplished during the past year of the Bishop's pastorship, he pointed out that the fields were white unto harvest, and emphasized the duty of earnest and continued prayer on the part of all that God would send forth more labourers unto His harvest.

ST. DAVID'S, MOSSMAN.

Since your last issue we have had the second visit from the Rector of Cooktown, Rev. H. W. Curtis. During this visit services were only conducted at St. David's; Mattins, Holy Communion, and Evensong, all being well attended. After Evensong a meeting of parishioners was held, in order to discuss what had been done in regard to the new clergyman whom His Lordship is trying to secure whilst touring the southern Dioceses. The Rector's Warden, Mr. R. O. Jones, said that the Parochial Council had taken the matter in hand after Mr. Curtis delivered the Bishop's message during his last visit. The hon. secretary, Mr. R. D. Rex, had canvassed the parishioners with the result of £80 to £90 being guaranteed, which was considered highly satisfactory. With offertories, etc., the total amount will doubtless be raised. Mr. Curtis the following day wired the result of meeting to His Lordship. Mr. Wilkinson, our present Lay Reader, has greatly endeared himself to the whole district—not only to our own people, but also to others of different denominations. Our only regret is that he is not fully ordained, so that he might remain with us.

The inauguration of the Sunday School took place on July 21st, with 26 scholars on the roll. The teachers, Misses Carstens and Lawson, Messrs. J. White and R. D. Rex (superintendent), take a lively interest in the work, and mean to make it successful.

A certain dissenting body questioned our right to open the school—because they had one!

The congregations at the usual services are good, but at Port Douglas the attendance is falling off. The Mossman, apparently, is becoming the busy centre. The want of an organist to play regularly has been keenly felt hitherto. Two ladies have now kindly offered their services—Mrs Barnard officiating in the morning, and Miss Williams in the evening. This arrangement will be greatly appreciated, as music undoubtedly tends to help devotion.

The Mill is in full swing. One sees many strange faces at Church, and the good influence the Church throws out is apparent in the district.

Mr. Wilkinson visits the Seven-Mile at regular intervals, instructing both old and young. With Pacific Islanders and Japanese classes, his time is fully occupied. Mr. Field, of Normanton, paid us a flying visit before he left Normanton.

SENATOR DOBSON'S FEDERAL DIVORCE BILL.

To the Editor of the "Carpentarian."

Sir,—Are the citizens of Queensland fully seized with the serious change that will be made in the marriage laws of this State if Senator Dobson's Divorce Bill is passed in the Commonwealth Parliament? I have not yet seen the text of the Bill, but, as it is stated to be based upon the Divorce Acts of Victoria and New South Wales, it is not difficult to forecast the clauses, and, if passed, it will become law in Queensland. It is well known that it is comparatively easy to obtain a divorce in the two south-eastern States, but it is not so well-known that divorces have increased enormously in consequence. Indeed, I venture to think that it would surprise a large number of citizens to find what is the unenviable position occupied by our sister States in the marriage statistics of the world. Mr. Coghlan has tabulated the proportionate annual number of divorces for every ten thousand marriages in the various civilized countries where statistics are available for the purpose. The result of his observation is as follows:—The Canadian Dominion has only four divorces annually for every ten thousand marriages in the State; the United Kingdom—11; Germany—165; France—180; and the United States—612. Let these figures be compared with the figures belonging to Australia. In Queensland the ratio of divorce, computed as above, is 23.0; in South Australia—25.2; in Western Australia—18.1; in Tasmania—38.5; in Victoria—135.9; and in New South Wales, 277.5. The result of such comparison is obvious, but it becomes perhaps more startling when it is further found that Switzerland is the only civilized country with a larger proportion of divorces to the population than New South Wales—excepting, of course, the United States, which is at the head of the unenviable list.

It has been said that the increase of divorces which occurred after the passing of the laxer laws in New South Wales and Victoria may be accounted for by the fact that advantage would be taken of the change of legislation to dissolve marriages, the bonds of which had been broken long before under other circumstances. This is doubtless true, but the numbers are still alarming, for, as quoted above, they are taken from an average of the three years, 1896-'98, and therefore represent the state of affairs several years after the passing of the Acts. Furthermore, it is a matter of every-day observation that the opportunities for divorce create not infrequently the desire for divorce, and the longer the Marriage Laws are relaxed, the larger grow the proportion of those who seek for divorce, not because the marriage tie is intolerable, but because it is distasteful. This tendency is demoralising to the individual, but the true significance of the increase of divorce must be sought in its relation to the family and the social order generally. It is, perhaps, too early in the day to attempt to gauge this significance in Australia, but when it is shewn from comparing 29,670 cases in ten of the United States of America that divorce occurred on the average within ten years of marriage, the fact is startling. Personally, I do not wonder that one of the American Political Ministers in London denounced the whole business as a "disgrace" to his country and "a menace to social order." Is it likely that the effect of laws similar to those in America will be dissimilar in Australia? Already the evil consequences have commenced to shew themselves in the two colonies that have relaxed their Marriage Laws, and now it is proposed to extend to all Australia the provisions of their unwise Acts.

I believe that in the Dominion of Canada divorce was under the Union Act assigned to Federal Parliament, but that the various Provincial laws have been left untouched. It has also been found unwise in the United States to force uniformity in the various Legislatures. Why should it be done here? But granted that uniformity is desirable,—as I am inclined to think that it is,—why in common fairness should four States be called upon to sacrifice their standard of marriage rather than two States return to a higher conception of the responsibility of maintaining the social stability of the Australian people? Federation will, indeed, have been purchased too dearly if the moral tone of the community at large is sacrificed to suit the needs—or shall I say the conveniences of the few.

GEORGE H. FRODSHAM,
Commissary to the Bishop of Carpentaria.
Brisbane, Sept. 11th, 1901.

Copy of a Resolution passed by the Brisbane Diocesan Council on Thursday, September 5th, 1901, on the motion of the Rev. G. H. Frodsham, seconded by Mr. J. W. Stack:—

"That the Bishop-in-Council for the Diocese of Brisbane, on behalf of the Church of England in Southern Queensland, hereby strongly protests against any enlargement of the area of divorce in this State such as is proposed in Senator Dobson's Divorce Bill."

It was further decided that the above resolution should be sent to the Premier of Queensland with the request that he would forward the same to the Commonwealth Premier. The Archdeacon has received intimation from the Government that this has been done.

BIBLE IN STATE SCHOOLS LEAGUE.

The Executive Council of the Bible in State Schools League will shortly be testing the wishes of the parents of children attending the State Schools of the State as to the introduction of simple Bible Lessons into the school curriculum.

It is well for all to remember—

1. The reform desired by the Bible in State Schools League is simply to define the word secular, as in the N.S.W. Act, to include "general religious teaching as distinguished from dogmatical or polemical theology," and to allow the special teaching to take place in school hours, as in N.S.W., and not after or before school hours, as at present allowed in this State.
2. The reform will in no sense alter the principle upon which the present State Education Act is worked.
3. That the Department of Public Instruction in New South Wales declare that the system desired by the League is found to work harmoniously and well with regard to all Denominations in the State.

Further information can be obtained from any clergyman in the Diocese of Carpentaria, or from the hon. secretary of the League, the Rev. G. H. Frodsham, Brisbane.

NEW SECRETARY OF THE S.P.G.

The Bishop of Tasmania has been elected as Secretary of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, and leaves Australia to take up his new work in England about the end of this month. The Brisbane Church Chronicle, commenting upon the appointment, says:—"We are not among those who bewail the loss the Australian Church will feel when the Bishop of Tasmania goes to occupy the Secretarial chair of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. The S.P.G. has notably done so much for us that any sacrifice on our part can only inadequately express our indebtedness. And if a wider conception of the call is taken we do not see that the case is altered. We have claimed men from England for the Church in Australia, and if Australia is called upon to give back a man to serve the whole 'Church of the Dispersion' where is the injury—or the honour! As to the question whether the office of Secretary is compatible with Episcopal responsibility, we contend that insufficient data lie before the many critics who have risen in judgment. They do not know what developments in the Secretarial work had been planned by the Society nor what the Bishop of Tasmania has in his mind for the future. The wisdom of the S.P.G. has been to place the missionaries supported by them directly under the supervision of their Diocesans, but are there not men to be Ordained in England for work abroad—are there not Missionary Bishops to be chosen and consecrated? When it is seen that the Bishop of Tasmania has departed from the high conception of his office which has so far distinguished him it will be time to talk about 'turning his back upon Episcopal responsibilities.'" We wish him God-speed.

WHOM THE LORD LOVETH HE CHASTENETH.

'One sorrow more? I thought the tale complete.'

He bore amiss who grudges what he bore:
Stretch out thy hands and urge thy feet to meet
One sorrow more.

Yea, make thy count for two or three or four:
The kind Physician will not slack to treat
His patient while there's rankling in the sore.

Bear up in anguish, ease will yet be sweet;
Bear up all day, for night hath rest in store:
Christ bears thy burthen with thee, rise and greet
One sorrow more.

A PRAYER FOR ABSENT FRIENDS.

[Recommended for the daily use of those who have relatives at the seat of war.]

O Lord our God, who art in every place, from Whom no space or distance can ever separate us, we know that they who are absent from each other are still present with Thee. Defend, most gracious Father, those friends from whom we are separated, keep them in body and soul, and grant that both they and we, by drawing near to Thee may be drawing nearer to each other, bound together by the unseen chain of Thy love in the Communion of Thy Spirit and the holy fellowship of Thy Saints; that whether or not, according as it may seem best to Thee, we meet again here on earth, we may surely meet again in Thy Heavenly Kingdom; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

We made a late start from Frew's on the afternoon of the following day (June 28th), and after five or six miles came out on to Sturt's Plain, which is some sixteen miles across. The road was very bad, and it was not until nearly sunset that we reached Five-Mile Point, a cape of scrub reaching out into the plain to within about a mile and a-half of the road. Having brought water with us we made a dry and, as it proved, a very cold camp. In the morning we banks was a most vivid green. We found a much warmer camp here than on the plain, and next morning (Sunday) we went two miles further on to the Newcastle Waters Cattle Station, where we spent the rest of the day. Unfortunately, all hands were away mustering. The station is situated on a stony ridge on the west side of the Newcastle Water, and has a somewhat bare and desolate look. The rock in this part is sandstone, ironstone, and jasper, of which there are many beautiful pebbles. The flies seem to grow worse as we get south. From about mid-day to sunset they render life a burden. Here, as elsewhere, the losses from the drought have been very heavy. After a quiet day here we went on next day to Pole Camp, where the line party was camped. The country was flat and uninteresting, with a very low stony range running parallel to the creek. We had tea with the line party, making in all eleven persons: "the largest camp in the Northern Territory," someone remarked. After tea we had Service. It was a striking scene in the large tent, illuminated by some rather doubtful lamps. It was certainly the first time that Divine Service had been held anywhere in these parts, and some of the party had been years upon the line without even a visit to Palmerston. The night was bitterly cold, and a cutting S.E. wind blew all next day, chilling the very bones. We proceeded down the dreary flats of the Newcastle to a small creek called the Lawson, where we camped. I walked to a small range about two miles off and had a fine view of Lake Woods—a vast sheet of shallow water some eighty or ninety miles in circumference, now full, but in dry obtain Prayer and Hymn Books, Bibles, Sunday School material and general Church requisites at very reasonable prices. Orders should be addressed to the Librarian, Diocesan Book Depot, See House, Thursday Island.

Mr. A. E. Smith, who has been accepted by the Bishop as a student at the Theological College, arrived at Thursday Island on the 2nd inst. There are now three students in residence, and a fourth to come.

I should say sincerity—a deep, great sincerity—is the first characteristic of all men in any way heroic.—Carlyle.

The more solitary, the more friendless, the more unsustained I am, the more I will respect and rely upon myself.—Charlotte Bronte.

found within a few yards of the camp the skull and part of the shirt of some unfortunate traveller. There was nothing to show the cause of death, nor was it known who it was, although several men had been lost of late years. Probably he had been following the telegraph line and turned in here to perish from thirst. It was too cold to make any but an early start in the morning, and we were soon on our way over the remainder of the plain, and through some open wooded country to North Newcastle Water, a magnificent sheet of water a quarter of a mile wide and two miles in length. Mr. C. told me that he had once seen a black swan on this water, and frequently white ones. It is the overflow of this lagoon which forms Lake Woods, thirty miles farther south. Large numbers of pelicans were fishing and sailing about, and the grass on the seasons converted into a parched plain. Later on I walked down to the lake itself, and by climbing a tree near the shore obtained a view over the reedy foreshore, which swarmed with ducks and other waterfowl. Opposite I could just see the further shore, but further south no shore was visible, and the lake must be some 20 miles across. The great expanse of water seemed as if it could never fail, but Mr. L. assured me that he had seen the whole bed of the lake covered with a vast bush fire. It is a real lake, with well-defined shores, and no bushes or timber on its banks; but Sturt crossed it twice without knowing that it was a lake at all. When the overland line was being surveyed the party was in great straits for water, when one of the men drew attention to a lake on the horizon. He was laughed at and told that it was a mirage. No water was found next day, and then the man said that mirage or no mirage he was going to satisfy himself; he did so, and thus discovered the lake.

Next day we proceeded to the Ferguson over the Newcastle flats, and camped close to a low range. I walked through about three miles of rough country to Lamb's Spring, a fine pool of permanent water. Rain threatened, but fortunately did not fall.

Next day I rode over some very rough, though low, ranges to Powell's Creek Telegraph Station. From the top of the range there is a very fine view—extending to Lake Woods on the north, and to the ranges beyond Powell's Creek on the south. The station stands on the edge of a small plain, has a permanent water supply, and is substantially built of stone. I received the warmest welcome, and it was luxury indeed to sleep in a bed with sheets, listen to the rain on the roof, and be thankful that it had not come a day earlier. The country is curious; broken here with masses of conglomerate, sandstone and ironstone, and there are multitudes of agates and jasper, and other beautifully glazed pebbles. There are said to be also more valuable stones among the ranges. I walked a mile or two into the bush to see two aboriginal tree graves, well and firmly made of strong timber.

On Sunday (July 7th) we had a Celebration of the Holy Communion, with four communicants, at 8 a.m., and Morning and Evening Prayer, attended by all the whites on the station. Mrs. K. provided the music, and the singing was excellent, the hymns being rendered with a heartiness and accuracy which show that they had been well practised. It was curious looking out of the door to see a couple of almost naked blacks, with spears and boomerangs, crossing the plain before the house. At Morning Prayer I baptised two half-caste children. The future of these half-castes is a serious question. When young they often receive some kind of education and training, but the danger is lest they should be thrown on the blacks' camp when they grow too old to be treated as children. "The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge." I shall not easily forget the face of one half-caste young man we passed on the road, well-dressed and fairly educated, as, hardly to be distinguished from a white man. He sulked in the blacks' camp to which he was contemptuously relegated.

We left Powell's Creek on Monday (July 8th), with many regrets. My new horse was a little fresh, and a black boy was put on him to exercise him a little. Another boy, as I came up, remarked, with a pleased grin of anticipation, "That fellow horse belong o' you. My word!" However, he was doomed to disappointment, for we proceeded very amicably over some rough, red ridges, covered with spinifex, to Denver's Spring, which is a little oasis in a plain surrounded by ranges. Here I found two well-made blacks' huts shaped like a Kaffir kraal, well thatched and waterproof. I had never seen such elaborate aboriginal dwellings. Close by I found a number of stone knives and other implements which they had forgotten or thrown away. A curious flat-topped mountain of red sandstone—Mount Castle—arises two or three miles to the south, and a rugged kopje to the north. The spring appears to be a natural artesian well, and is never dry.

Next day (July 9th) was a long weary ride over a sandy or gravelly tableland of considerable height, and very barren. We expected to find water at the Middle Tomkinson, 25 miles, but it was dry, and we had to go on another five miles to the South Tomkinson, where we found just enough for the horses; but too dirty to drink. Next day we rode on along the top of the Ashburton Ranges to Kueschner Ponds, where we turned off over a few miles of plain to Banka Banka Station, which is situated on the edge of the plain under a range. I explored these ranges a little, and found them very rough. Some of the gorges might well pass for an ideal valley of desolation, with their red and yellow rocks of desert sandstone covered with scanty spinifex and a few stunted and miserable desert gums; there were many pieces of beautiful opaline quartz. These ranges stretch far to the westward, and the country has never been explored, although Stuart penetrated a little way into it in 1860. The blacks here are fine athletic men with full black beards. One man had his hair bound up with a yellow band so that it stood up like a crown; I tried to sketch him, but he would not stand still for a minute.

The following day we got rather a late start and travelled 21 miles to Attack Creek. Crossing Morfit Creek—a very wide watercourse—we found some beautiful specimens of jasper and other stones. The creek seems to be full of them. Attack Creek was the furthest point reached by Stuart in his first journey. He was attacked here by natives, and returned to Adelaide. On the telegraph line we passed the grave of a man who had died from thirst within a few miles of water. He had gone off the line to within a hundred yards of water and returned without finding it. At Attack Creek I was met by Mr. S., of Tennant's Creek Station, and parted with very great regret from Mr. L. and his party, who returned from here to Port Darwin. Nothing could have exceeded the kindness and courtesy I received from the whole party. We left next morning in a buggy after seeing off Mr. L. on his homeward journey, and travelled for 20 miles over desolate sandstone and spinifex country to Philip's Creek, where there is a fine waterhole. A considerable hole, where we camped for dinner, had dried up completely since Mr. S. passed the previous day, so little can one count on water here. The flies were again very troublesome, and the spear grass seeds worse than anywhere on the journey. There are some pretty flowers here; a small heliotrope ground creeper looking much like the garden verbena, a small blue flower like a harebell, and a white flower much like an English daisy. Mr. S. told me a curious story. He had been camped by himself in a lonely gorge, and was sitting by a fire that he had made in the sand, when he heard the report of a shot, and a bullet scattered up the sand at his feet. In considerable amazement he examined his own weapon, which was not discharged, and waited, but heard nothing more, and could not unravel the mystery for some days, when he remembered that he had passed the spot some days before and lost a loose cartridge, which must have been buried in the sand until exploded by the fire. We had a warm night; and next day travelled over more sand and spinifex to Tennant Creek, which is a stone station built on a little creek. The trees in all this country are very low and stunted, and one gets fine distant views of the red sandstone ranges, which run from east to west, and are beautifully coloured; the air is extraordinarily clear and dry, and one can see immense distances. I was warmly welcomed at the station, where there are five men, and stayed over Sunday and Monday.

The natives here are a fine handsome race, with, in some instances, markedly Jewish features. One is struck with their vigorous life and playfulness, contrasting greatly with the ajeat appearance of the blacks near Queensland towns or stations. The men wear only a narrow loin cloth, and dance and jnmp about with much gracefulness, playing and jesting with one another. They seem to be treated with great kindness here.

On Sunday afternoon, after my arrival, I walked to the M'Douall Ranges, some three or four miles to the south, and climbed up a conical hill of red sandstone, some 250 feet high, from the top of which I had a magnificent view over the alluvial plain and the red sandstone and ironstone ranges which bound it.

At our little Service on Sunday we were but a very few, but we thought of the great gathering at Adelaide to celebrate the completion of the Cathedral, and tried to be with them in spirit. In the evening I was present at the daily distribution of flour to the women and children and infirm old men. The women are not so good-looking or well-made as the men, but on the whole this is the finest tribe of blacks that I have seen.

I left Tennant Creek on Wednesday (July 17th) about 11 a.m. A few miles from the station we passed through the M'Douall Ranges—broken masses of red sandstone and slate, with "blows" of black ironstone. Mount Samuel, a few miles further on, is one solid mass of iron. The road was heavy with sand, and though we put in four horses it was dark when we reached Kelly's Well, 32 miles from Tennant Creek. A bitterly cold S.E. wind was blowing and it seemed to go clean through the blankets, making sleep a difficult matter; in fact, we were only too glad to get up at the very first streak of dawn. We had a very heavy day—34 miles—of deep sand. The country is most desolate, spinifex and sand except for a few hundred yards on each side of the very rare creeks. We stopped for dinner at the Gilbert, where there was a little grass. To the east the bare Murchison Range stretches for about 25 miles like a Yorkshire moor, but with spinifex for grass, and often not even that. Towards evening the wind dropped, and we had a more pleasant camp at the Bonny Well. I had again to say my Evensong by the light of the camp fire. The stars were wonderfully brilliant, as always in this clear air. The Bonny is a large sandy creek, and I noticed some fine jaspers and other pebbles as we crossed it. I also found part of a fine spear-head of opaline quartz.

News of the Parishes.

PORT DOUGLAS.

On Thursday evening, October 24th, the Bishop arrived at Port Douglas by the "Aramac," and at 8 a.m. the following morning celebrated the Holy Communion at St. Andrew's Church, when there were eight communicants. In the afternoon, in company with Mr. W. M. Wilkinson, Stipendiary Lay Reader, he set out on horseback for the Mosman, spending the rest of this and the following day in visiting the sugar farmers. At night the Bishop was present at a gathering of some fifty South Sea Islanders in St. David's Church. The growth of this class speaks volumes for Mr. Wilkinson's devoted work. When the Bishop visited Mosman a year ago nothing was being done for these people, and one of them said to him, "Wesleyan teach boy every day; Church of England no teach any boy." Mr. Wilkinson began work on January 1st, and when the Bishop arrived in March he found a small class of some fifteen or twenty boys, contrasting painfully by their untidy appearance and vacancy of expression with the Thursday Island boys. The change worked during the last seven months is marvellous. The members of the class were neatly dressed, orderly, and reverent, and their influence has been such that one of the farmers remarked, "Not one in twenty of the boys takes a glass now as they used to do." Best of all, Mr. Wilkinson was able to present over 20 candidates for Holy Baptism, some of whom had not missed a single class since he began work. When it is remembered that this work is done in his "spare" time, after attending to the needs of the large and scattered white population, the progress is remarkable. After Evensong, in which the boys joined heartily, for no "pidgeon English" is allowed, and an address from the Bishop, the candidates were examined in the earlier part of the Church Catechism, and questioned individually by the Bishop as to their understanding of the Holy Rite, and their desire to receive it. The Bishop expressed himself much pleased with their intelligence and earnestness. It was impossible to look at the rows of earnest faces and not to think with amazement of the description given of them by interested politicians as moral monsters. One only wishes that the Gospel could find as ready an entrance into the hearts of many white politicians as it does into the lives of these simple kindly folk. One man refused Baptism because he owed some money to a storekeeper, and he did not wish to be baptised until he could pay it off. On Sunday morning the Bishop celebrated the Holy Communion, and there were 11 white communicants, and a fair number at Matins. After the Children's Service in the afternoon, at which the Bishop expressed his gratitude to the teachers for the way in which they had responded to his appeal to start a Sunday School at the Mosman, the Church was filled at 4 p.m. by over 100 Islanders, and in their presence 18 men and 4 women were baptised. The reverence and earnestness of the candidates was most striking. It was clear that they fully understood the responsibility of the step they were taking, and were determined to be true to their Master. The Bishop exhorted them to perseverance and steady preparation for the rite of Confirmation. At night the Church was crowded, and many were unable to obtain admission. The Bishop took as his text the first lesson, the failure of Belshazzar, and showed that we were all being weighed in the balance in like manner. Speaking of the parish, he said that he was glad that the people had come to recognise the earnest, faithful work done by Mr. Wilkinson. He hoped that the new Rector—Rev. C. G. Brazier—would arrive on March 9th, and he hoped to come himself to institute him. A Confirmation would, at the same time, be held at Port Douglas.

On Monday evening a meeting of the Parochial Council was held, Messrs. Jones, Bernard, Lock, Rex, and Wilkinson being present. It was resolved to make an effort to raise a sum of £150 for the purpose of erecting a residence for the Rector of the parish at the Mosman, and a resolution was unanimously adopted welcoming the new Rector. The Council also expressed their deep sense of the services rendered to the parish by Mr. Wilkinson's untiring devotion to duty, and their gratitude to the Bishop for his efforts to advance the good of the parish.

CHRIST CHURCH, COOKTOWN.

The annual Sunday School Picnic took place at the beginning of October. There having been no picnic last year, the event was naturally looked forward to by all the children. Before proceeding to the Reserve (kindly lent to us by the Mayor), the children assembled in the Church (to the number of about 180), where a short Service was held. Afterwards they proceeded to the picnicking ground under the care of the teachers, where a variety of games, &c., were indulged in. During the day the number of children was considerably added to, fully 250 sitting down to dinner and tea. Many parents and visitors availed themselves of the day's pleasure, who very materially helped in amusing the children. Our thanks are also due to them for the splendid manner in which they responded to the solicitations of the teachers and others for provisions, toys, &c. Too much praise cannot be given to the teachers and the kind help of others for their valuable assistance, not only in helping to amuse the children, but also in raising the necessary funds for providing for the day's amusement. After paying all expenses about £1 6s. remained in hand, which has been placed to the credit of the Sunday School Fund.

At the beginning of November we were glad to welcome the Bishop on the occasion of his third visit to this parish. From all quarters it was remarked how well the Bishop was looking after his overland trip to Adelaide and his arduous work up the coast. His Lordship did not allow the grass to grow under his feet; in nearly every Diocese he lectured and preached on behalf of the Mission work in his Diocese. Those who have read the interesting lectures delivered by the Bishop, not only know more of Australia, but understand something of the great work he has set himself to perform. The Bishop's chief desire is to start a Mission for the aboriginals after the manner of that most successful one at Yarrabah, Cairns. We owe a great deal to the "natives" after the way in which they have been treated, therefore we hope and trust that sufficient funds will soon be forthcoming from the people into whose hands the welfare of the blacks has been placed, in order that their condition may be materially improved.

On Sunday morning (November 3rd) a Confirmation was held in the Church, when 16 candidates were presented. Considering the large congregation present, it is obvious that the objection to such a Service being held in the morning has disappeared. The addresses given by the Bishop were listened to with marked attention by all. We hope that the confirmees will, by their manner of life and conversation, endeavour to follow out all that was taught them, not only at the Confirmation Service, but also at the classes held before Confirmation. We were much pleased to see all the newly confirmed at the early Celebration on the following Sunday morning; hoping that they all will try to partake at least once a month. The Rector intends resuscitating the Communicants' Guild (which, for some reason, was allowed to fall through); he hopes, therefore, that all the newly confirmed will become members.

On Monday the Bishop and Rector went to the Laura, where, through the assistance of Mr. Nicholson, the residents were told of the coming visit of the Bishop. Evensong was held in the school-room, which was filled to overflowing. During the short visit four children were baptized. It is the earnest wish of the inhabitants that regular Services be held in the future. If we remember rightly thirteen years have passed since a Church Service was held there. The Rector of Cooktown hopes to be able to pay bi-monthly visits to the Laura and other places up the line very soon. If sufficient candidates can be obtained, a Confirmation Service will be held at the Laura on the Bishop's next visit to this corner of his Diocese.

On Wednesday evening a very fair audience listened with much interest to the Bishop's lecture about his overland trip to Adelaide. The substance of the lecture need not be repeated here, his Lordship having minutely published the account of his travels in the previous issues of this paper. At the conclusion of the lecture many of the audience took the opportunity of looking at the sketches and photographic views of the principal places of interest passed through on the journey.

A "Quiet Day" was held on Friday, which commenced with the Celebration of the Holy Communion. During the "day" addresses were given by the Bishop, all of which were preceded with prayers, intercessions, and hymns. This being the first time such a "day" was held in this parish probably accounts for the small number of Church people present. We can only hope that if such a "day" is held again more will avail themselves of the opportunity of devoting a few hours to God.

After a very pleasant stay the Bishop took his departure per the "Maranoa" for Thursday Island. Before leaving his Lordship took the opportunity of thanking those who had worked so well and faithfully for the improvements at the Rectory, at the same time mentioning a few repairs and alterations which needed attention. These will doubtless be attended to as soon as funds are available.

Before closing our parochial news let us add our pleasure in welcoming Mrs. King as a teacher in the Sunday School, and also several new members to the choir. Our Church choir, it has been said by visitors, compares very favourably with many Southern choirs. This is very pleasing to the members, and also encouraging, who still continue to take great interest in the musical portions of the Services of the Church.

During the last month (November) we received a visit from the Ven. Archdeacon Pritt, of Townsville, who was on his way to Thursday Island to meet the Bishop of North Queensland. Mr. W. M. Wilkinson, of Port Douglas, was with us for a week, his health necessitating a short rest.

The Carpenterian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA,
NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. II.—No. 3. Thursday Island, Jan. 1, 1902

THE NEW YEAR.

With this number the second year of the Carpentarian begins. While in some parishes the circulation is less than it should be, we believe that it has already done good work in giving information and promoting a feeling of diocesan unity.

The first year of our diocesan life almost synchronises with the first year of our diocesan paper. A year ago there was very little that could be called diocesan life at all. The permanent clerical staff was reduced to one, Rev. H. W. Curtis, and the first student had only just arrived at Bishop's College. Parishes were without clergy, and had been for several years without episcopal supervision, while the western (or Northern Territory) half of the diocese had been unvisited for twelve years by any clergyman of our Church.

There is much to be thankful for in the past year. The clerical staff has increased to four priests already at work and two more to arrive in a few weeks' time. Bishop's College has been erected and paid for, and four students are engaged in their studies. The Northern Territory has been visited three times. Regular lay services have been instituted and continued throughout the year, and a Rector of Port Darwin has been appointed and has entered on his duties. All parts of the diocese, including Central Australia, have been visited by the Bishop, most of them twice, and the Mission work among the Japanese and South Sea Islanders has been progressing and expanding. While, however, we are most thankful for these things, there still remains so much to be done that it is only the sure sense that "the good hand of our God has been upon us" during the past year that enables us to look forward without alarm to that upon which we are entering. We are still in need of clergy to fully man our parishes; a great door is open for Mission work among the aborigines, and we need both men and money to enter by it. Our College is a venture of faith and has no endowment whatever. We have no prosperous towns or wealthy individuals in the diocese, and the whole of the North, partly from natural causes and partly from rash legislative experiments is passing through a period of acute depression and straitness of means.

We are thrown back, and it is good that we should be, not on ourselves but on the great Power of God that is behind our human organisation and efforts. We would ask our readers to join in a prayer for the diocese during the coming year, that the same Guidance that we have experienced in the past may be with us also in the future, and turn the year that now is into a source of greater blessing than that which is no more.

COOKTOWN.

Cooktown Church and Rectory, of which we give an illustration, are the oldest ecclesiastical buildings in the Diocese. The Rectory has lately been painted and renovated by the voluntary labour of the parishioners. Daily religious instruction is given by the Rector, Rev. H. W. Curtis, and is well attended.

Notes.

Any gifts of theological or standard works would be gratefully accepted by the Librarian of Bishop's College. They may be sent forthwith by Parcels Post.

Mr. Gathercole, of the Karpargoo Aboriginal Mission, has gone to Adelaide for a rest and change, and Mr. Lennox is left there alone. Another worker is urgently needed.

Archdeacon Pritt has been paying a short visit to Thursday Island, where he came to meet the Bishop of North Queensland on his return from England.

Further additions have been made to the See House, which will, it is hoped, shortly become entirely the property of the Diocese, in which case it will be known in future as Bishop's College.

From January 1st, 1902, all Diocesan accounts will be kept by the Diocesan Secretary, Rev. W. P. Glover. A full statement of the accounts of the Diocese from the Bishop's consecration on August 24th, 1900, to December 31st, 1901, will be submitted to the Conference on February 25th, and will be published in the next number of the Carpentarian.

Rev. G. H. Frodsham, who has rendered the Diocese many services as Commissary to the Bishop in Brisbane, is leaving for England immediately after Easter. He will visit Thursday Island on his way. Mr. Frodsham's loss will be severely felt by his own Diocese, and by the whole Church. Among many other good works, the Referendum on Bible Teaching in State Schools is almost entirely due to his energy.

There are now four students at Bishop's College, Messrs. Hitchcox, Lewis, Woolrych, and Smith, but Mr. Woolrych has had to go temporarily to Normanton, until the arrival of a Rector. Mr. Hall is reading with Rev. G. Smith for the Th. L. Examination, and will go into residence also at Bishop's College before Ordination. Miss White has undertaken the duties of Honorary Lady Superintendent at the College, no light task where housekeeping is so difficult and expensive as it is at Thursday Island.

A Conference of Clergy and Lay Workers of the Diocese of Carpentaria will be held at Thursday Island in February next. The Conference will meet on Tuesday, February 25th, and will sit on Wednesday and Thursday, February 26th and 27th, and Monday, March 3rd. Friday will be kept as a Quiet Day for devotional purposes, and there will be Special Services on Sunday, March 2nd. The Bishop of North Queensland has been invited to be present, but it is not yet known whether he can spare the necessary time. Among the subjects to be discussed are: Sunday School Lessons for the Diocese; the Management of the Church Property; a Proposal by the Bishop with regard to Parochial Finance, Marriage Licenses, and Provincial Action. The occasion will be one of great importance, as it will be the first formal gathering of the Church in a Diocesan capacity. It is hoped that at least five priests out of the six in the Diocese will be able to be present.

The Bishop's Movements.

On Monday evening, August 26th, an important meeting was held at Adelaide, on behalf of the Karpargoo Aboriginal Mission. The Chief Justice was in the chair, the Governor being absent through illness. The Bishop gave a full account of his enquiries into the condition and treatment of the aborigines, and made several suggestions with regard to the law relating to them, which were warmly endorsed by the Chief Justice. The Bishop had also, by appointment, a long interview with Lord Tennyson, who took a deep interest in the matter, and wrote a very able letter to the meeting, which he was unable to attend personally. On the following day the Bishop addressed the boys of St. Peter's College in the morning, and in the afternoon he addressed an important meeting at Government House of the Council and chief workers in the Mothers' Union, of which Lady Tennyson is President. After the meeting, he left by train for Ballarat, with many pleasant recollections of the kindness and sympathy of the Adelaide Churchmen. Two days were spent at Ballarat, and a service and meeting were held in connection with the Diocese of Carpentaria.

From Ballarat the Bishop went straight to Hobart, where he arrived on August 31st, and preached the following day in the Cathedral and Trinity Church. On Monday a large and enthusiastic meeting was held in the Synod Hall, and this was followed by equally well attended meetings at Launceston and Deloraine. The Bishop returned to Melbourne in time for Sunday, and spent a very busy week, preaching at Malvern, Fitzroy, South Yarra, St. John's, St. Peter's, Trinity College, Brighton, and the Cathedral.

On Monday, September 16th, he left by train for Sydney, arriving in time to speak at the Church Society's Meeting on Tuesday evening. On Wednesday he went to the Blue Mountains for two or three days' much-needed rest, and on Sunday preached at St. Philip's, Sydney, and the Cathedral. During the following week he preached or held meetings at St. James', Moore College, King's School, and Hunter's Hill, leaving on Saturday for Newcastle, Morpeth, Maitland, Murrundi, Muswellbrook, and Armidale, which were all visited, and services and meetings held at each. Brisbane was reached on October 8th, and on Sunday morning the Bishop preached at the Pro-Cathedral, and in the evening at Ipswich. On Monday evening, October 14th, in spite of a heavy thunderstorm, there was a full meeting in the Temperance Hall, Mr. LeHunte, Governor of New Guinea, being in the chair. The Bishop gave an account of his overland journey, which was listened to with great attention, and a hearty vote of thanks was proposed by Mr. Foxtton, the Home Secretary of the State.

During his stay in Brisbane, the Bishop interviewed Mr. Foxtton with regard to the establishment of a Church Aboriginal Mission near the mouth of the Mitchell River, and it is hoped that something practical may be done in the course of the coming year.

The Bishop also interviewed the Premier on the subject of the proposed Divorce Bill before the Federal Senate, and presented him with a lengthy letter on the subject, which the Premier promised to bring under the notice of the Federal Government.

On Tuesday, October 15th, the Bishop left Brisbane by the "Maranoa" for Townsville, where he was the guest of Archdeacon and Mrs. Pritt, at the Rectory, and preached at St. Peter's on the Sunday morning, and the Cathedral at night.

On Monday, he visited Charters Towers, and addressed a meeting in the School of Arts, and on the following day he returned to Townsville, for a meeting in the Jubilee Hall. At the commencement of the meeting, Archdeacon Pritt, in the name of the Clergy of his old Diocese, presented the Bishop with a magnificent Episcopal Ring, consisting of a large emethyst, engraved with the arms of the Diocese of Carpentaria, and of the Bishop. In his reply he said that he felt that no elaborate words were needed to express the gratitude that he felt towards his old friends and comrades, who had presented him with such a splendid token of their kind remembrance of him. He should always value it most deeply, in recollection of the happy years that he had spent in the Diocese of North Queensland, and of the comrades who had by their friendship and affection rendered it such a happy time.

On the following day, October 23rd, the Bishop left for the North by the s.s. "Aramac," and landed again in the Diocese at Port Douglas on the evening of Thursday, October 24th.

A short summary of the results of the Bishop's homeward journey may be of interest. It took him eleven weeks to reach Charlotte Waters, the southern limit of the Diocese, where he was 1900 miles from home. Leaving the Diocese there, he was eight weeks in returning to it via Adelaide, Melbourne, Hobart, Sydney, and Brisbane. On the way he addressed more than fifty meetings and congregations, and succeeded in arousing much interest in the work of the Diocese, besides raising about £240 for the work of the Diocese, and securing several Clergy and Lay workers, so that the time occupied by the homeward journey from Charlotte Waters cannot be said to have been wasted. The Bishop desires to acknowledge the universal kindness with which he was welcomed, and the readiness with which the Clergy and Churchwardens gave him facilities to plead for the Diocese.

THURSDAY ISLAND.

A meeting of the Parochial Council was held in the Japanese Schoolroom, on Thursday evening, 3rd October, when several matters of parochial importance were discussed and arranged.

One of our most valued parishioners, Mrs. McCreery, wife of Senior Sergeant McCreery of the local police force, passed to her rest on Sunday, 13th October. The deceased lady had been ailing for a considerable time, but bore her illness with patience and fortitude. At one time Mrs. McCreery took an active part in parochial work, but latterly was prevented from closely identifying herself with any of the Church organisations. She still retained her interest, however, in the Church, and attended its services whenever it was possible for her to do so. In her last moments of consciousness she received the Sacrament of Holy Communion, and passed peacefully away soon afterwards. Much sympathy was expressed for the bereaved husband and mother, both of whom are highly respected residents of Thursday Island.

In response to a request from the Committee of the Torres Straits Hospital, the Churchwardens generously decided to hand over the whole of the collections on the twenty-first Sunday after Trinity to that institution. The services for the day were conducted by the Vicar, who specially emphasised the Christian origin and nature of the Hospital System. He also dwelt upon the double mission of preaching and healing with which the Church was charged, and pointed out that only in so far as we cared for the body as well as the soul could we fulfil Christ's intention with regard to the Church. Special hymns were sung by the choir, and the services were rendered brightly and beautifully. The collections for the day amounted to £8 16s. 9d., of which amount 16s. 3d. was contributed by the children of the Sunday School at their Special Service.

We had a welcome visit from the Ven. Archdeacon Pritt, of Townsville, on the 11th November. The Archdeacon came to the Island to meet Bishop Barlow, and remained with us for a week taking duty in the Cathedral on twenty-fifth Sunday after Trinity. Bishop Barlow arrived in the "Jumna" on Saturday, 2nd November. The boat anchored at Black Rock, but through the kindness of Mr. Douglas the "White Star" was sent down and the Bishop was enabled to come ashore for the day. Owing to the uncertainty of the "Jumna's" arrival it was not generally known that Bishop Barlow was ashore, but those who knew of his presence called and welcomed His Lordship at the See House, where afternoon tea had been kindly provided by Miss White. The Bishop was particularly interested in meeting old friends and inspecting the improvements which had been effected since his last visit. We were all glad to have the genial Bishop with us for the day.

The Society of the Treasury, which we mentioned in the last issue of the Carpentarian as having been re-organised, has been strengthened by the addition of Mesdames Hodder and Reid as members. The principle of "laying by" a regular weekly or monthly contribution, as the case may be, towards the maintenance of the Church's work, is a truly Scriptural one. We are glad to find that our people realise this fact, and consequently respond to the efforts of those ladies who so faithfully make it their business to collect the amounts so set apart.

We have reason to congratulate the members of our choir upon the improvement which has taken place in their singing. It is also refreshing to find a deeper interest being manifested in this important branch of Church work. We trust that under the capable and painstaking care of the organist, Mr. G. H. Hodder, the choir will continue to "lead the praises of the Church" in a skilful, reverent, and worthy manner.

Captain W. A. Coxon, who, for the past three years, has been the Commanding Officer of the Garrison Battery, left Thursday Island for Townsville a few weeks ago. In the removal of this officer the Church has sustained a loss. Captain Coxon was a regular attendant at Divine Service, and set an excellent example to his men in this and other respects. Captain Black is the new Commanding Officer, and we trust to find him a zealous Churchman.

The Bishop of the Diocese arrived at Thursday Island by the "Maranoa," on Monday, 11th November. His Lordship only remained one day, and then went on to Normanton and Croydon, where he hopes to visit all the centres of work.

The Bishop, it is hoped, will be with us for a Sunday some time this month, but we shall see very little of his Lordship until the New Year, when he expects to be in residence for a few weeks at the See House.

A movement is on foot to erect a Parish Hall. The need of an institution such as this will be apparent when it is pointed out that we have no accommodation whatever for meetings, social gatherings, and other such functions connected with the Church's general work. A hall in which the Sunday School might meet, Parochial gatherings assemble, and meetings of young men be held, would be a very great boon to the Parish. It is estimated that a suitable building could be erected at a cost of £250, towards which several friends have already privately promised contributions. The object is such a deserving one that we feel sure many of our Church people will be glad to help it to a successful issue. What is wanted in a matter of this nature is for some generous Churchman to give practical effect to the project by a goodly donation, and thus by the force of example inspire others to help.

A small grant of cards and pictures has been made by the S.P.C.K., London, for use among the Lepers at Friday Island. Several friends have also been good enough to send illustrated papers to the Bishop and the Vicar for a similar purpose. A generous contribution for "comforts" has also to be acknowledged from Miss Close, of Sydney.

ETHERIDGE.

The Bishop left Croydon on a visit to the Etheridge on Tuesday, November 19th, and arrived at Georgetown the following day, after a tiring coach journey. Starting early the next morning he rode out 35 miles to the Big Reef, when he visited the people and held service for the first time for very many years. After baptizing several children he left the Big Reef early, and visited Charlestown and Donnybrook, holding service at the latter place and reaching Georgetown about 11 p.m. the same night. On Sunday, services were held at Georgetown, and on Tuesday the Bishop left on a long journey on horseback to visit the Einasleigh Copperfield, returning to Croydon for the following Sunday. The Etheridge is not very prosperous at present, although several mines are turning out good gold. The population is extremely scattered, three or four families in each little place separated by fifteen or twenty miles from the next. This makes the problem of the supply of religious ministrations a very difficult one. Rev. G. Smith has been making heroic efforts to supply them from Croydon once a quarter; but it is a task beyond even his powers of devoted energy. The Bishop was everywhere most warmly welcomed, and special thanks are due to Mr. Boddington, the P.M., who most kindly lent his own riding horses to the Bishop. Rain is being most anxiously looked for as several of the mills have already exhausted their supply of water.

NORMANTON.

Church work has been going on steadily here under the charge of Mr. L. Woolrych. The choir shows a great improvement, both in members and quality of singing, and the congregations have been steadily if slowly growing.

The Bishop arrived on his half-yearly visit early on November 15th, and spent that and the following day in visiting members of the Church. He was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Millar during his stay. On Saturday afternoon the Bishop met the candidates for Confirmation, and had a personal interview with each, examining them and expressing himself satisfied with the progress they had made under instruction.

On Saturday evening a most successful social gathering was held in the Divisional Board Hall under the direction of Mr. Curtis. All the Church people of the town were present. Mr. Hall briefly welcomed the Bishop, who spoke at some length in reply. He said he had on this occasion, what speakers had not always, something to say. In the first place he had heard that there was (though never to his face) a good deal of silly talk about High and Low Church, and ritual and anti-ritual. He had no patience with such triviality. The Church was face to face with desperate problems of indifference and sin. She had a work to do, and a fight to the death to fight, and there was no time for trifling. He absolutely refused to be dictated to by any narrow clique or party in the Church. The glory of the Church of England had been her wide power of comprehension of men who, while at one in their loyal acceptance of her teaching, differed often most widely in their estimate of the advisability of the use of things which were non essential. He had shown his willingness to be just by appointing to Croydon a clergyman who held somewhat extreme views in one direction, because he believed he was absolutely the best man for the work; if he thought that another man of a very different school of thought was the best man for another parish he should appoint him without the least hesitation. He intended to be governed solely by what he believed, after full examination and consultation, to be the good of a parish, and by what, as the result of years of patient study, he believed to be the mind of the Prayer Book, and not by any party whatever. He strongly deprecated party spirit, as tending to distract the Church from her proper work, and affording men an excuse for neglecting personal religion. He had, he thought, some claim to be trusted by the people of the Church he had ever served with unswerving loyalty. After referring to the referendum now being held by the Bible in State Schools League, the Bishop said that he had been doing his utmost to fulfil the wish of the parish to have a clergyman in full orders, and he was in hopes that he had succeeded. Mr. Woolrych had done most faithful work, but he wished him to return as soon as possible to his studies at Thursday Island. He must remind his hearers that if they wanted a priest they must be prepared to give of their substance. Some people thought that if they offered a clergyman the same wage as a road labourer they were doing a generous act. He did not think so at all. The labourer was worthy of his hire; and so was the clergyman, whose education had cost a great deal more, and whose necessary expenses were much greater. He had been much pleased with his present visit to Normanton. He was conscious of a growth in Church life and energy, and he had good hopes for the future.

On Sunday morning there were two Celebrations of the Holy Communion, and in the afternoon the Bishop confirmed five persons, aged from 15 to 19.

At night there was a large congregation, and the Anthem, "Incline Thine Ear," was well rendered by the choir. The Bishop preached a simple and earnest sermon on the need of personal religion.

CROYDON.

The town is now undergoing such a depression as has not previously existed. Business is not in a satisfactory state, and money is exceedingly scarce. Naturally, this has told on the Church, but does not altogether account for the falling-off of the congregation, nor for the want of interest on the part of some who previously had readily helped. Still there is much for which to be thankful; the morning service, though few attend, is a time of profit, and the evening congregation is fair. Communicants show a good average in attendance. From November to March a falling-off is generally expected, the season being against Church life and work. The attendance of the Sunday School scholars keeps up well, while that at morning instruction, at 8.40 a.m., fluctuates. Several prominent Church of England people have journeyed south to be away from Croydon during the summer months, but their return may be expected somewhere near the season of Easter.

Mr. F. C. Hall is now the assistant to the Rector. His services are most valuable in that more services can be given to outside places. Mr. Hall has had experience in work for Christ for some years. While at Rookwood, as honorary reader, he conducted services in a little Church not far distant.

The Ladies' Committee has somewhat altered. They are now two less in number than formerly; another's district has been temporarily filled. The two districts have been divided among the others. The finances of the Church depend mostly on the labours of the Committee. They have worked energetically and consistently. It may be often noted that they do not receive from proposing Church members the encouragement they deserve.

Mr. J. Waldie is now organist. Mr. F. C. Hall is choir master. There is a constant difficulty in keeping a good choir through repeated changes. Mr. Hall has taken charge of the training of the boys; they are making very fair progress. This work affords ground for encouragement for the future.

GOLDEN GATE.

There is at present a weekly Sunday evening service held at Golden Gate. There is much encouragement given for work here. The subscriptions for the Church are coming in slowly but surely. There are many promises which have not yet been gathered. So soon as these amounts have been handed in, we shall be able to erect the building.

GEORGETOWN.

The whole of the Etheridge district was visited by Rev. Godfrey Smith during the month of September. At Georgetown the services were well attended. The Sunday School is in a very promising state, and the order excellent.

Besides Georgetown, Mr. Smith held services at Gilbert River, Tonk's Camp, Cumberland, Donneybrook, and Einasleigh. The attendances and the interest evidenced were most gratifying. A Sunday School has been commenced at the Einasleigh, of which there are favourable reports. Mr. Hooper, assisted by Mrs. Lawn and Miss Crossley, comprise the teaching staff. Arrangements have also been made for the instruction of our children both at Cumberland and Donneybrook. We trust someone may be found to take up this work at Gilbert River. It would be a good thing for Georgetown if a Clergyman could be procured for the Etheridge district. The need is great, for a population of 1750 people, except for the occasional clerical visit from Georgetown, are neglected by the Church.

At the time of the writing of this letter, the Bishop is paying a visit to the Etheridge district, and his account of visitation we may receive this issue of paper.

PORT DARWIN.

Since the departure of Mr. Craig, to whose labours of love the Church owes a large debt, the Services in the Town Hall have been continued by Mr. C. H. Davis, and the attendance continues to be good.

The Church Council have already £156, which they have collected during the year, in hand, towards the purchase of a Church site and the erection of a Church, and the ladies are working most enthusiastically for a great Sale of Work to be held on November 29th and 30th, with a view of increasing this amount. To the above must be added a sum of £23 16s. 2d., balance of an old Northern Territory account, paid over by the Diocese of Adelaide to the Bishop for the Palmerston Church Building Fund, and a sum of £25, promised by the Bishop on behalf of the Diocese of Carpentaria, which has also paid the fare of Rev. H. P. Gocher, M.A., to his new sphere of work, in order to assist the Parish. Mr. J. H. Finnis, the Hon. Sec., Sergeant Waters, and Mr. C. H. Davis write cheerfully about the work and progress of the Church, in spite of bad times and the departure of many members of our Church. Rev. H. P. Gocher, M.A., left Adelaide at the beginning of December, and should now be in residence at Port Darwin.

The Bishop will pay Port Darwin a flying visit just before Christmas, in order to induct Mr. Gocher, and to make final arrangements for the purchase of a site for the Church and Rectory.

MOSMAN AND PORT DOUGLAS.

On October 24th, we had the pleasure of welcoming our Bishop on his return to the Diocese from his memorable journey through the neglected regions of Central Australia, of which this Diocese (Carpentaria) forms so large a portion. We have a special interest in congratulating His Lordship on the success of his mission south in search of labourers for this Diocese, seeing that our own local need is about to be supplied by the voluntary offer of the Rev. A. C. Brazier, B.A., of the Melbourne Diocese, to take the vacant Rectorship. Mr. Brazier is to be accompanied by his friend and co-worker, Rev. A. R. Pitt, M.A., also of Melbourne, whose devotion and zeal in the service of the Church is highly spoken of. Both Clergymen come on the highest recommendations of those in authority. We look forward to their arrival in March, when they may expect a warm welcome and hearty co-operation in the work to which they are coming.

On Friday, 25th, after celebrating Holy Communion at St. Andrew's, Port Douglas, the Bishop rode to the Mosman, where his time was fully occupied until Wednesday morning. Saturday evening addressed a large gathering of Melanesian boys at St. David's Church, after which he Catechised those who were candidates for Baptism. On Sunday there was a full attendance at Mattins. In the afternoon His Lordship addressed the Sunday School teachers and scholars, and expressed his pleasure at seeing the Sunday School established since his last visit. After Sunday School, twenty-two from the Melanesian Class (eighteen men and four women) came forward for Baptism. The

BIBLE IN STATE SCHOOLS LEAGUE.

TO THE EDITOR.

Sir,—With reference to the debate in the Legislative Assembly on Tuesday, December 3rd, upon the subject of the referendum which is now being taken throughout the State, I think that the time has come for laying before the public a full history of the matter, so that it may be clearly understood that the League has acted in good faith and consistently with the statements made by the Premier to their representatives.

1. The object of the Bible in State Schools League is to procure an amendment of the State Education Act of 1875, so far as to substitute for clause 5 clauses 7, 17, and 18 of the Public Instruction Act of 1886, New South Wales. It will be seen from comparison of these clauses that the effect of the reform desired by the Bible in State Schools League is simply to define the word "secular," as in the New South Wales Act, to include "general religious teaching as distinguished from dogmatical or polemical theology," and to allow the special teaching to take place in school hours, as in New South Wales, and not after or before school hours, as at present allowed in this State.

2. With a view to obtaining this reform, a large deputation waited upon the Premier on 18th September, 1900, when, in his reply, he spoke as follows:—"As for the teaching of religion by ministers of various denominations in school hours, he did not know whether they need ask the Parliament to sanction that, although personally he could see no reason why it should not be permitted. . . . The other question was a very much bigger one . . . and until they knew what the wishes of the parents were, nothing could be done. He certainly thought the parents should be consulted. . . . He thought if the wishes of the majority of the parents were taken and were in favour of an alteration, that it should be made. Personally speaking, if such a vote was taken he would give his vote for such an alteration, though, as Premier of the colony, he had no right to do anything contrary to the will of the majority of the people. He would consult his colleagues on the first question, and the other question he thought was the one which the parents of the children should decide." The above quotation is taken from the Brisbane Courier of 19th September, and the gist of the statement was that the Premier could do nothing without the wishes of the parents being obtained.

3. The League had then to consider how the wishes of the parents could be obtained, and a deputation, consisting of the Bishop of Brisbane, the Rev. W. Whale, and myself, again waited upon the Premier, who then reiterated the statement that he had made to the larger deputation, to the effect that he could not go so far as to promise that the Government should conduct the referendum, on the ground of expense. The deputation, however, understood, firstly, that the League would be expected to obtain proof of the wishes of the parents; and, secondly, that the Premier would favour the Education Department, rendering all possible assistance.

4. As a next step, I interviewed the Secretary for Public Instruction, who consented to furnish, through the department, the names and addresses of parents of children attending the State schools; but subsequent to the interview I received a letter from the department informing me that the collection of information, together with classification and arrangement, would involve too much expense for the department to undertake the work. I then said that the Executive Council of the League would do all the necessary classification and arrangement of the lists, provided that the department would officially instruct the head teachers of the State schools throughout the colony to furnish me with a complete list of the names and addresses of the parents and guardians of scholars attending the said schools. This official instruction was given in the Education Office Gazette of January and February this year.

5. In June last, when the lists were practically all in, application was made to the Minister for Education asking him if he would regard favourably the referendum being taken in nine of the principal towns of the State. This application was forwarded to the Chief Secretary, and was acknowledged by him. As, however, I was unable to obtain any definite reply from the Chief Secretary, the Executive Council of the League determined, on 6th September, to canvass the parents throughout the whole State. The official lists of parents have been distributed to representatives of local committees, who have arranged for the various parents to be seen and asked the following question:—"Are you in favour of the introduction of Bible lessons into the State schools?" An accompanying leaflet explained to all the religious provisions of the New South Wales Act. This work is nearing its completion, and the few returns which have reached me to date show an overwhelming majority in favour of Religious Education. At the time of writing the figures are:—Yes, 3117; No, 150. I hope that practically all the returns, at any rate from Southern and Central Queensland, will reach me before Christmas.

It will be seen from the above that the League have acted in good faith in endeavouring to obtain the wishes of the parents of children attending the State schools, as a necessary step to any action being taken by the Government. Until the question was asked by the member for Croydon on 23rd October in the Legislative Assembly, the League had no idea that they could be thought to be acting without the knowledge and approval of the head of the Government. I was at once instructed to obtain some explanation of the Premier's answer, and in the absence of Mr. Philp obtained an interview with the Acting Premier, who said that he was unable to speak definitely upon the Premier's intentions, but that his answer to Mr. Browne evidently referred strictly to the terms of the question. I may say that the Acting Premier informed me that personally he was in favour of a plebiscite of the electors upon the subject. Whatever misunderstanding has arisen is due, I fear, to the fact that the League failed to inform the Government of the commencement of the work of taking the referendum.—I am, Sir, &c.,

GEORGE H. FRODSHAM,
Hon. Secretary, Adelaide House, Ann Street,
9th December.

The Government of British New Guinea has from the very first testified to the value of the work of the Missionaries in the Possession. As early in its history as 1886 the Special Commissioner stated that 'a great and noble enterprise has been conducted by a set of most self-sacrificing men, who have carried the message of Christ to a savage race of inhuman murderers.' Sir W. MacGregor and Mr. Le Hunte have spoken no less emphatically to the same effect.

Church was crowded with South Sea Island boys, and many could not gain admittance. A marked feature of the Service was the reverence maintained throughout—not one element to disturb the solemnity of the occasion—the conduct of those Baptised was most reverent and impressive. May each one continue Christ's faithful soldier "to his and her life's end." At Evensong the seating accommodation proved insufficient for the congregation assembled. The Services throughout the day were very hearty, and the plain and impressive sermons by the Bishop will long remain with those who heard them.

Monday, His Lordship presided at a meeting of the Churchwardens and Parochial Council, when the question of providing a residence at Mosman for the Clergy was discussed, and it was decided that a determined effort be made to provide the necessary accommodation before the arrival of the newly-appointed Clergy. The Wardens and Council expressed their appreciation of His Lordship's interest in affairs of the Parish, and congratulated him upon the appointment of Clergymen in "full orders," assuring him of their best endeavours to help and promote the interests of the Church in the Parish and Diocese.

On Tuesday evening the Bishop delivered a lecture on his recent overland journey. The attention with which the audience listened throughout was an evidence of their appreciation. At the conclusion, a hearty vote of thanks was accorded the lecturer. Many remained behind at the close of the address to inspect the sketches and photographs of some of the places of interest on the way. During his stay at Mosman, the Bishop met a number of the Parishioners privately, and made himself acquainted with the varied conditions and fortunes of the sugar planters in this part of his Diocese.

On Wednesday morning His Lordship returned to Port Douglas, and delivered his lecture on his overland trip in the evening.

On Thursday evening His Lordship continued his journey by steamer to Cooktown, after spending a week amongst us, stimulating, refreshing, and encouraging us all.

DEATH OF BISHOP OF GOULBURN.

The Bishop of Goulburn died at a private hospital in Sydney on Wednesday, 13th November, from heart failure. On the last Sunday in October he met with a painful accident after concluding Divine Service in All Saints' Church, Tumut. He was proceeding from the chancel to the vestry, and knew that he had to descend a step. The step was a very narrow one, however, and the Bishop was near-sighted, and placing his foot on the edge, he was thrown violently forward, and ruptured the tendon of his left knee-cap. The Bishop was ordered to Sydney for a slight operation, which he stood capably. Indeed, although the injury was painful, and it was thought probable that a stiff leg might result, no serious effects were anticipated. On Wednesday afternoon Mrs. Chalmers was reading to her husband, who was in excellent spirits, and apparently progressing well towards recovery, when suddenly he complained of faintness. Dr. McCormick was immediately summoned, but before he could arrive the Bishop was dead. The immediate cause of death was heart failure.

Official Notifications.

The Rev. T. K. Pitt, M.A., has been licensed by the Bishop of the Diocese as Rector of Port Douglas and the Mosman.

Mr. W. M. Wilkinson, recently in charge of Port Douglas, goes to Normanton for a few weeks pending the arrival of the Rev. C. Hudson. Mr. L. F. Woolrych, now at Normanton, will then go into residence at Bishop's College.

News of the Parishes.

THURSDAY ISLAND.

Our last Notes to the Carpentarian were sent off just before Christmas. We are glad to report that the happy festival was characterised by full and hearty Services at the Quetta Memorial Cathedral. Thirty-seven communicants came to the seven o'clock Celebration; and twenty-five to the ten o'clock administration. The blessed Sacrament was also administered to two parishioners, privately, by the Vicar. Thus the total number of Communicants for Christmas Day was sixty-four—a very satisfactory record for a small parish. It was a pleasure to all to see the recently confirmed candidates partake of their first Communion on the day which celebrated the Incarnation of our Blessed Lord. All the Services were attended by large congregations. We trust that the Easter Services, at which the Prayer Book provides that every parishioner shall communicate, will be equally well, if not better, attended.

The children of the Sunday School connected with the Quetta Memorial Cathedral spent their Christmas happily. On the eve of the great festival the little ones attended Service in the Church, and sang a number of carols very effectively. The carol singers had been carefully prepared by Miss Lucy Bennett. After Service the scholars proceeded to the Melanesian Boys' Home, where a splendid Christmas Tree had been provided by the teachers. Each child was presented with some useful gift and a bag of lollies, and their appreciation was afterwards shown in a very marked manner by giving hearty cheers for their Vicar, Superintendent, and Teachers. On the Sunday after Christmas the Bishop of the Diocese distributed the prizes awarded by the Sunday School to the scholars for their work during the year.

The Melanesian Boys held their Annual Reunion in their Home shortly after Christmas. The event this year was rendered more auspicious by the fact that it coincided with the official opening of the new building, which has been added to the old Home. Several interested friends attended, and there were some thirty or more "boys" present. A splendid dinner had been provided, and there was an abundance of everything necessary to their enjoyment. Needless to say, the "boys" appreciated the good things. During the evening the Bishop, the Rev. W. P. Glover, and Mr. G. H. Bennett addressed the gathering, and the "boys" did not fail to express their gratitude for the advice tendered to them. The Home, which is now a fine substantial building, has been enlarged in order to accommodate some twenty-five men. An amount of nearly £120 has been spent on the improvements, and only a few pounds remain to be paid. We trust to receive some help from those interested in this good work.

The Japanese Christians also held a happy gathering just before Christmas. They assembled in the building occupied by Mr. Kashiwagi, the Japanese Catechist, and partook of a suitable repast provided by Mrs. Reid, who has shown a very practical interest in them at all times.

An interesting Service was held on Sunday evening, the 23rd February, at the Quetta Memorial Cathedral. After Evensong four Japanese were baptized by the Bishop. The Catechumens had been undergoing instruction for a long time, and were well prepared for the Sacrament of Holy Baptism.

A terrific thunderstorm broke over Thursday Island on January 15th. During its progress a flash of lightning struck one of the crosses on the Cathedral and shattered it to pieces. It is marvellous how the damage was confined to the cross only. The insurance company in which the Church Building is covered by fire policy generously defrayed the cost of a new cross. A lightning conductor has now been affixed to the Church, so that further damage from electrical disturbances will be obviated.

The Hon. John Douglas leaves us on March 14th for a six months' trip to the old country. We trust that he will derive the very greatest benefit from his holiday, and return to us in renewed health and vigour. Everyone in the parish appreciates the worth of Mr. Douglas as a citizen and as a Churchman.

ST. DAVID'S, MOSMAN.

The approaching departure of Mr. Wilkinson has put sadness in all our hearts, for he has won them all. Last Wednesday a valedictory address was read by the Hon. Sec., and a purse of sovereigns presented on behalf of the Council, congregation, and Mosman people generally, as a small token of appreciation. During Mr. Wilkinson's fourteen month's sojourn amongst us he has greatly endeared himself, and has won the respect of all by his exemplary life and unremitting labour amongst all classes of the parish. We all wish him every success in the future, wherever he may settle, and may he be long spared to continue in his noble work in the service of God and the Church.

The Church has been painted and looks quite an imposing little structure. Mr. Wilkinson has prepared a number of candidates to be presented to His Lordship for confirmation at Port Douglas, on March 9th. There would have been more from Mosman presented if arrangements could have been made to hold the service of "laying on of hands" at St. David's, it being very inconvenient to go into port from Saturday till Monday. It would please many parents if His Lordship can make such arrangements next time.

The Hon. Sec. and Treasurer, Mr. Raymond D. Rex, has left the parish for an extended tour to his native home in Tasmania. Mr. C. Cress will temporarily carry on Mr. Rex's secretarial work.

The Sunday School roll still continues good. Messrs. Wilkinson and Rex's departure leaves only Mr. White as teacher till the Rev. Pitt arrives. However, Mr. Jones in his usual way came forward with a helping hand.

The engagement is announced of Mr. Raymond D. Rex to Miss Gwendoline Jones.

The Rev. Pitt will receive a very warm welcome.

SALE OF WORK AT PORT DARWIN.

On Friday and Saturday, November 29th and 30th, a most successful Sale of Work was held in aid of the Church soon to be erected. For some months steady preparations had been proceeding, and the result was a fitting reward for those who worked so well for its success, especially the committee of ladies.

His Honour Mr. Justice Dashwood, in opening the bazaar, gave a brief summary of the Church's history at Port Darwin. Then he asked those present to unloose their purse strings and "Buy! Buy! Buy!" and his Honour's wishes were evidently realised, for a clear profit of £264 17s. 2d. was the net result of the bazaar.

The stalls were well stocked with useful goods and curios, which were readily bought. Through the kindness of the Commander of the "Airlie," a stock of ice and ice cream was available at the refreshment stall, and ten cases of Southern fruit, which arrived in good condition, made that particular stall very attractive. The "Guthrie" arrived from the East on the second day of the bazaar, and through the generosity of the Commander, a further stock of ice cream was obtained. By means of a shooting gallery outside the Town Hall a number of articles were disposed of, the competition in the shooting being very keen. The minor attractions—electric battery, post office, telephone, and art gallery—came in for a fair share of attention.

A special feature of Friday evening's programme was the conjuring of a very clever Japanese juggler, who was good enough to give his services for the occasion. His efforts were much appreciated, and his work very neatly done.

Through the generosity of a local resident, who does not wish his name divulged, all the children who attended on the second day were treated to a free tea.

Plenty of promenade music—piano and violin, as well as gramophone—was enjoyed by those present. The Port Darwin Town Band also played selections outside the hall. We are indebted to many friends for assistance. Afternoon tea was thoughtfully provided by the Ladies' Committee, under the supervision of Misses Edwards and Smith. The bazaar, financially and socially, was one of the most successful affairs ever held in this remote part of the Commonwealth.

The amounts taken at the various stalls were as follows:—Misses Edwards and Smith (refreshments), £57 16s. 10d.; Mrs. Waters, £76 9s. 5d.; Mrs. Pinder and Mrs. Marsh, £45 8s. 6d.; Mrs. Budgeon and Miss Stretton, £44 17s. 6d.; Misses Finniss and Tilley, £44 12s. 6d.; Bran Pie and Fish Pond, Mrs. Pett and Mrs. Pott, £16 17s.; Admission and Side Shows, £9 6s. 2d. Total receipts, £295 7s. 7d.; less expenditure, £30 10s. 5d.; leaving a profit of £264 17s. 2d.

PORT DARWIN.

Rev. H. P. Gocher arrived at Port Darwin from Adelaide by the s.s. "Chingtu" on December 13th, 1901, and was welcomed on arrival by a deputation from the Church people, presided over by Mr. Justice Dashwood. The hearty feeling which existed amongst the people was indeed an encouragement and an earnest of the work which has yet to be completed.

Upon the arrival of the Bishop on December 19th, a meeting of the Provisional Council was at once called, and a sub-committee formed, to consider plans for the erection of a suitable Mission Church upon the block of land purchased in Smith Street, kindly held in reserve by Mr. Waters.

At a subsequent date, this sub-committee reported a suitable building, and it was decided to advertise for local tenders. At the same time, a date was fixed for a meeting of the Parishioners to elect officials under the Regulations of the Diocese. This meeting was held in the Town Hall, on Saturday, January 25th, 1902, at 4.30 p.m. Messrs. Finniss and Langdon were elected Wardens; the following as members of the Parochial Council: Messrs. Stretton, Budgon, Green, Worm, Price, Herbert, Tully, Waters, Davis; and as Auditors: Messrs. Tully and Davis.

A Sunday Afternoon Service for the children was commenced on December 29th, in the form of the Dupanloup Catechism; and the way in which the children learn their work gives me the greatest satisfaction and pleasure. At present we have twenty members, which number should be increased by Church parents. Mr. C. H. Davis very kindly assists. The Choir of ladies and gentlemen has been augmented by six boys, and an extra practice during the week has been started.

An attempt to give Religious Instruction to the Chinese was commenced on January 29th, by holding a meeting for those Chinese who had attended School in the past. There were eleven present.

CHRIST CHURCH, COOKTOWN.

It may seem rather late in the day to speak of our Christmas Services, but in consequence of the early issue of the Carpentarian in January, our Christmas news was too late for publication.

On the Festive morning the Church presented a very bright appearance, many willing helpers devoting their time to the decoration of the Church on Christmas Eve. The Festive day commenced with a Celebration at 7.30 a.m.—Mattins and Celebration again at 11 a.m. During the Morning Service, which was fully choral, Jackson's Service was rendered by the Choir, also Stainer's beautiful anthem, "Sing, O Heavens." It was the common opinion that the Choir had never been heard to better advantage. The Bishop of New Guinea, who had a few days previously arrived in Cooktown (en route to England), was the preacher at the Morning Service. The number of Communicants at both Celebrations was very satisfactory, about 47 participating.

Watch-night Service was held at 11.15 p.m., when a large congregation assembled. Immediately after this service the Holy Communion was celebrated, when the largest number of Communicants at any single service for many years past partook of the Sacred Elements.

On the 10th January, the Bishop of North Queensland, assisted by the Rector, joined in the Holy bonds of matrimony the Rev. E. L. Timewell, Rector of Cairns, and Miss Graham, daughter of our worthy Pilot. We wish them every happiness. Many of the Bishop's old friends took this opportunity of having a friendly chat.

The Annual Sunday School Prize distribution took place in the Church on the 16th February, when about 35 children received prizes. A book was presented to each child of the School at the conclusion of the prize distribution. This, of course, will not be done every year unless funds are available.

Addresses based on the Sunday School lesson are given to the Teachers every Wednesday evening after Evensong. A Bible Class is also held every Monday Evening, at 7.45, in the Rectory.

To our already good staff of Teachers we welcome Miss Craig wishing her every success in her noble work. Also to our efficient Choir we welcome as new members Mrs. Trueman and Messrs. Trueman, Walker, and Guthrie.

During the last week in February the Rector was at Thursday Island attending the first conference of Clergy and Laity of the Diocese of Carpentaria. An epitome of its work will be found in this issue.

Diocesan Conference.

ABSTRACT OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE FIRST CONFERENCE OF THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA, Held in the Beauchamp Library, Bishops College, Thursday Island, and opened on February 25, 1902.

FIRST DAY—Tuesday, 25th February, 1902.

After Special Service in the Cathedral, the Conference met in the Beauchamp Library, Bishops College, at 8.15 p.m.

The Lord Bishop of the Diocese presided.

The President said Prayers.

1. The Rev. W. P. Glover was elected Secretary of the Conference.

2. The Bishop's summons was read.

3. The Roll of Members was read as follows

Rev. H. W. Curtis	...	Cooktown
" W. P. Glover, Th. L.	...	Thursday Island
" G. H. Smith (absent)	...	Croydon
" H. P. Gocher, M.A. (absent)	...	Palmerston
" T. K. Pitt, M.A.	...	Port Douglas
Hon. J. Douglas	representing	Palmerston
Mr. G. Bennett	"	Thursday Island
" H. G. Hodder	"	Croydon
" Abi Murray	"	Normanton
" W. M. Wilkinson	"	Port Douglas
" A. Kashiwagi	"	Japanese Christians

The President said that Revs. G. H. Smith and H. P. Gocher had received leave of absence from him on account of the long absence from their parishes which would have been entailed.

4. Congratulations and good wishes were received from Rev. G. H. Frodsham, Bishop of Commissary.

5. The President extended a very hearty welcome to His Excellency Mr. Le Hunt, Governor of New Guinea, and invited him to seat and voice in the Conference.

6. The President then delivered his Inaugural Address as follows:—

GREETING.

Brethren of the clergy and laity of the Diocese of Carpentaria, I greet you in the name of God the All-wise and All-merciful. I welcome you in the fellowship of that Faith which Jesus Christ delivered once for all to His Church, I meet you in full assurance of the guidance of that most Holy Spirit which the Father has promised to those that ask in His Son's name.

The first formal meeting of the clergy and faithful laity of a new diocese cannot but be an occasion of deep interest. It is ours to lay this spot the foundations of organised Church life, and it behoves us to see that we are laying them with loyalty to the traditions of the past with earnest self-devotion to the needs of the present, and with a watchful and disinterested eye to the developments of the future. While we cannot control what is yet to be, we can certainly influence and modify its growth, and we must spare no pains so to order all things on the best and surest foundations that peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety may be established amongst us for generations.

INSTALLATION.

It is just fifteen months since I was installed here in the beautiful little Church which then became our Cathedral. It was a matter of deep disappointment to us all, and especially to me, that the Bishop of North Queensland, whose anxious care for the more remote porticos of his diocese, and unwearied exertions in raising the necessary capital fund in England the formation of the diocese is due, the Bishop with whom I was personally most closely united in the ties of common work and mutual affection, was unable to be present, and I think that this Conference will do well, as one of its first acts, to pass a resolution acknowledging the human agency to which under God the formation of the Diocese of Carpentaria was entirely due. Our best thanks are due to Ven. Archdeacon Pritt, M.A., for kindly coming up from Townsville to perform the ceremony of Installation.

AUSTRALIAN AID.

It was with many anxious fears, not mingled with some bolder hopes, that I entered on my work here. The question forced itself upon me: how could such a vast area be adequately administered with such inadequate means? where were the men? where was the money to come from? Who, indeed, was sufficient for these things? It was suggested to me by those in whose judgment I had confidence that it was only by going to England for men and for money that I could hope to be successful; but after much anxious thought I determined under God to trust to Australia for both. I felt that England had already been so generous in providing practically the whole endowment of the See, that it was now Australia's duty to provide the main means for carrying on the work which she had asked the Mother Church to inaugurate for her. I believed that, when the Churchmen of the Southern and more settled States had once brought home to them the pressing needs and great spiritual opportunities of the Far North, and what their duty was with regard to its many coloured races and scattered white population, that they would neither be slack nor ingenuous in their response, and I am thankful to be able to record that my faith has been more than justified by results. Since the foundation of the See on August 24th, 1900, five earnest priests have given up work in which they were happy and contented in the South, and have come, solely for conscience sake, to service that has no attractions from a worldly point of view. Again, including the sum of £604 12s. 8d. contributed in connection with the Jubilee of the Australian Board of Missions, a sum of £1209 9s. 11d. has been given by our brethren in the South to the work of this Northern Mission of the Australian Church. Surely we have here cause for thankfulness and for hope. Personally, I cannot adequately express my sense of the kindness with which, as your representative, I was received. Whether it were the Bishops, who so often altered their own diocesan arrangements to afford me greater facilities, the clergy who gave me offertories and opportunities of preaching, or the laity who showed such a deep and generous interest in the meetings which were held, from one and all I have received the greatest kindness and the most unstinted aid. In your name I thank them most gratefully for all they have done, and especially the Australian Board of Missions, which has shown such great generosity towards this diocese. In spite of my determination not to visit the old country the Mother Church has not forgotten us, and you will observe among the items of income two generous gifts from S.P.G. and S.P.C.K., nor do these sums actually received exhaust their intended benefactions.

ACCOUNTS.

You will find on the table detailed accounts of all receipts and expenditure on the General and College accounts. You will also find an audited statement by our Hon. Treasurer, whose valuable services I most gratefully acknowledge, of those moneys which have passed through his hands. It was, perhaps, almost inevitable under the unsettled conditions of an infant diocese that much financial responsibility should be thrown on the Bishop alone, but not desiring to continue this longer than necessary I arranged that from January 1st, 1902, all accounts should be kept by the Diocesan Secretary, by whom in conjunction with myself drafts will be made on the Hon. Treasurer for all necessary expenses. You will observe that the principal item of expenditure has been the building and furnishing of Bishops College, but when we remember that it not only fulfils its original purpose but serves in addition as a residence for the Bishop and as an absolutely necessary centre of diocesan life, I think that those who have given so liberally will feel that a great deal has been gained at a cost which cannot be considered in any way excessive. Travelling expenses of clergy and lay-workers form, as might be expected, a heavy item. The grant for Melanesian and Mission work is smaller than it will probably be in the future. I have dealt elsewhere with the Diocesan School and no other items seem to call for special comment.

MEN.

More important even than money are men, and I have unfeigned pleasure in welcoming you, my brothers-in-arms, to this our first council. Rev. H. W. Curtis is the only priest who was working in the diocese early in last year, when for a short time our staff consisted of one Bishop and one priest. After years of faithful work at Croydon he has taken up less trying but equally important work at Cooktown. Our first reinforcement from the South consisted of Rev. Godfrey Smith, who has thrown himself with characteristic courage, earnestness, and devotion into the work at Croydon. The task before him was exceptionally difficult, and he has won the respect and affection of a community not too much given to ecclesiastical enthusiasm. At Thursday Island Rev. W. P. Glover has undertaken, as Vicar of the parish, Superintendent of its missionary work, Vice-warden of Bishops College and Diocesan Secretary and Registrar, a multiplicity of duties which would have given a weaker man an excuse for performing some of them ill, but I have not yet discovered which duty is the nearest to his heart. At Port Darwin, or Palmerston as it is properly called, Rev. H. P. Gocher, M.A., has revived the parochial work of the Church after a lapse of twelve years. I desire to place on record my sense of the steadfastness and loyalty with which the Church-people of Palmerston, since my visit to them a year ago, started and maintained lay services without intermission and with unfailing congregations, while at the same time raising a sum of nearly £500 towards the building of a Church. Mr. Gocher was instituted by me on the Sunday before Christmas, and will I am sure, worthily maintain the traditions of our Church. Rev. T. K. Pitt, M.A., who goes to Port Douglas, has from us all a hearty welcome on his first arrival among us, and will be accompanied by our prayers and warmest good wishes. He was to have been accompanied by Rev. C. G. Brazier, B.A., but unfortunately the state of his father's health has led him to postpone his coming to the North, much I know to his own disappointment as well as ours. Rev. W. Hudson, B.A., has accepted the cure of Normanton, and will arrive in a few weeks. I must not forget to welcome among us Mr. W. M. Wilkinson, who has been in temporary charge at Port Douglas, and whose intense earnestness, absolute devotion to duty and keen missionary zeal have won him general affection and esteem. Mr. L. Woolrych has done good work at Normanton, where I was obliged to send him pending Rev. W. Hudson's arrival, and Mr. Hall has been doing yeoman's service as assistant to Rev. G. Smith at Croydon.

AD CLERUM.

Here I should like to express to you, my brethren of the clergy, my sense of the difficulties and disappointments of your work, and my equally strong appreciation of the zeal and loyalty with which you have all faced both the one and the other. We have no "pleasant places" for our lot here. Unremitting toil, scanty sympathy, frequent disappointments, inadequate means; these things are and will be the lot of many amongst you. They are also your crown of honour, your badge of service in the forefront of Christ's battle. I know that your hearts are often sick and weary with that sickness of soul and disappointment of whole-hearted effort which is harder to bear than the burning sun or choking dust. I know well what it means to be a parish priest in the Far North, and I bid you still to be strong. Though you stand alone, yet will each of you be, I know—

"One who never turned back, but marched breast forward,
Never doubted clouds would break,
Never dreamed though right were worsted,
Wrong would triumph.
Held we fall to rise, are baffled to fight better, Sleep to wake."

A DIOCESAN COUNCIL.

Alone of the Australian dioceses we have as yet no Synod, no formal and authoritative method of expressing our will or framing our own laws; and the vast area of the diocese, our small numbers, and the practical impossibility of obtaining adequate lay representation, render it questionable whether it will be wise to form a Synod for many years to come. In the absence of any regulations of General Synod, beyond the provision that the diocese may send two clerical and two lay representatives to its meetings, the Bishop appears to be, as in a purely missionary diocese, the sole legal representative of the diocese under ordinary circumstances, and must perforce discharge alone some duties and responsibilities which he would otherwise share with his Synod. In order to avoid any injustice or any break with the past, I thought it well to authorise for the new diocese the Constitution and Canons of North Queensland, in so far as they continued to be applicable, and bearing in mind the wise words of St. Cyprian: "a primordio episcopatus mei statui nihil sine consilio vestro (i.e., presbyterorum et diaconorum) et sine consensu plebis mea privatim sententia gerere." I felt that any important deviations of policy should be adopted only after such full consideration and advice, both by clergy and laity, as time and opportunity should permit. It is with this object, my brethren, that I have summoned you, from distances which can only be measured in the nearest instance by hundreds of miles, to consult for the welfare of the diocese in an informal but none the less real Council of the Church. While, as I have said, it seems doubtful whether it would be at present wise to form a Synod, it will be for this Conference to consider whether it cannot itself be formed into a permanent and, so far as possible, representative Council of the diocese. I am anxious that our government should be as constitutional as our small numbers and scattered circumstances permit. This method of a Diocesan Council with a membership of licensed clergy and lay representatives, elected by each parish, was adopted on the formation of the Diocese of North Queensland, and continued in force for five years until the creation of a Synod. The President's address to that Conference in 1883 contains much that is worth consideration under our present circumstances.

RITUAL.

I trust that the relations between Bishop, Clergy and Laity may always continue to be characterised by mutual trust and comprehension. We have too real a battle to fight with sin and unbelief to allow our forces to be weakened by internal dissension or avoidable misunderstandings. Observation shows that these most easily arise with regard to a matter which is itself chiefly important in proportion to the stress laid upon it, and the spirit of faction which may be aroused by it. I should like therefore to say a word on the subject of ritual while we are as yet happily untouched by any disputed questions. There are, I take it, three important points about ritual: 1. It must be careful and reverent; 2. It must be loyal to our own Church and her laws; 3. It should as far as possible be uniform. Ritual breeds disputes chiefly when doctrinal significance of a doubtful character is read into it, and such significance is associated mainly with changes from the accepted order. Ritual holds a place in the economy of the Church less important than that assigned to it either by those who lay such stress on its elaboration, or by those who insist so strongly on the need of simplicity. There is a minimum without which worship becomes disproportionately spiritual. Man is not pure spirit but body and spirit; and to pretend that he should worship as though he were a disembodied spirit is to ignore facts, to disregard history, and to encourage spiritual conceit. On the other hand man is something more than body, and to establish a worship in which bodily actions take the place of spiritual truths and in which the worshipper can satisfy himself without adequate spiritual exertion, is again to ignore facts and to substitute formality for faith. It has always been the glory of the Church of England that she has held the middle way between these extremes undeterred by the fanaticism of either, that she has combined the spiritual and material in her worship just as they have been combined by God in man's nature. It is perhaps impossible to strike an absolute mean. Some men learn most by self introspection and silent communion with God. To these men the mean will seem overlaid with forms and ceremonies which do not aid their devotion, others learn most by the eye and ear, and to them the same mean will seem lacking in much that could stimulate devotion and elevate their practical life. But we are members one of another. It is contrary to Christ's law to insist only on what we have been accustomed to, or what helps ourselves to the exclusion of our neighbour's customs or needs. The service that will be most helpful to the greatest number, (for although helpfulness to the worshipper is only a subordinate element in the true conception of worship it is an element that we dare not despise) must be to some extent of the nature of a compromise, not with truth but with the various aspects and elements of truth as they appear to various minds. The ritual of our Church is no fancy of the moment; it is historic and continuous with the past; it is governed by laws which if not explicit on all points, are at least so on many points. Many things are clearly unlawful, many other things cannot lawfully be neglected or ignored. There remains a certain borderland of the permissible but not always desirable, and it is on this borderland that I ask you, my brethren of the clergy, to exercise your loyalty by working as far as possible for uniformity. I hope that time may allow of some brotherly discussion on this matter. We have an opportunity, by mutual forbearance, of preventing the rise of questions and disputes which have often grievously interfered with the spiritual work of the Church and hindered her efficiency.

BISHOPS COLLEGE.

When, after my consecration, I set myself to consider what would be the main difficulties of my diocesan work, I was irresistibly impressed by the fact that the key to the whole position lay in securing an adequate supply of clergy. These it is rapidly becoming impossible to obtain from England where the supply is steadily becoming less and less adequate to the need, and while I have to acknowledge with gratitude that there are Australian priests of high character and ability to be found willing to come and help us solely because our needs are so great, yet it is clear that they come under exceptional circumstances, and in response only to the urgency of our appeal. The heat of the climate, the opposition of friends and relatives, the loneliness, isolation and precariousness of income all militate against offers of service from any but those who acknowledge in these very things a special call to self-devotion; and although for a time the appeal may find those willing to respond to it, yet it obviously affords no secure basis for the future, in a region where life and work will in many ways always be less attractive than in other parts of Australia. There remains only one alternative, to train men for the special work of the diocese on the understanding that, in return for their training, they should devote some years of work to its service. It has been urged that such men are best trained in Sydney or Melbourne, and the advantages of large centres are undoubted. On the other hand it may be urged that for special circumstances training on the spot has many advantages, that there is no large missionary training college in the South, and that to send men to Sydney or Melbourne for training, apart from the question of expense, is to deprive them of just that element of personal knowledge and confidence in their Bishop which is of such immense value where the clergy are isolated from each other by hundreds of miles, and where it is only by keeping constantly in touch with their Bishop that they can realise to any extent that feeling of companionship in the work of the ministry, which is so essential to the maintenance of their own spiritual life and ministerial efficiency. Again we have to face the fact that those parents who can afford to pay for their son's training will only in the most exceptional cases allow them to volunteer for work in a diocese to which distance and latitude lend such fancied terrors as that of Carpentaria, hence if we are to have clergy who are trained at all we must draw on those earnest men who have the will and character to devote themselves to the work of the ministry, but not the means to pay for their training, in other words the Church must pay for the training of her clergy if she insists, as it is right she should insist, that no man should be ordained who is not intellectually as well as spiritually qualified for his work. Moved by these considerations I put these facts in the forefront of my appeal on behalf of the diocese, and in a sermon preached in St. Andrew's Cathedral, Sydney, on Sunday, September 2nd, 1900, and published under the title of "A Northern Theological College," I asked the Australian Church to give us such an Institution. The response was rapid and generous beyond my hopes. The Primate at once promised a liberal subscription; His Excellency Lord Beauchamp gave the noble gift of £150 a year for three years. S.P.C.K. gave two scholarships of £25 a year, others also contributed and in a few months we found ourselves able to make a start, and have now four students engaged on a three years' course of study, and hoping to enter for the Th.L. degree of the Australian College of Theology. A large proportion of the funds given to the diocese at the Jubilee of the Australian Board of Missions was devoted to the building of a College, S.P.G. gave a generous grant of £300 for this purpose, and on January 1st of this year we were able to dedicate Bishops College without debt furnished and completed at a cost of about £900. You will I am sure join with me in deepest gratitude to Almighty God for this result, and pray that the work thus begun may never cease. We have absolutely no endowment and are entirely dependent on voluntary subscriptions for maintaining the work of the College, which, including the maintenance of four free students, cannot by any possibility be estimated as costing less than £250 a year. I must here express my unfeigned gratitude to Rev. W. P. Glover, who has undertaken the duties of Subwarden and Tutor at a wholly inadequate stipend. Mr. Glover has thrown into his work a thoroughness, earnestness and sympathetic care which augur well for those under his charge.

MISSIONS.

Another great problem before this diocese, one of its very greatest, is its essentially missionary character with regard to the coloured races. According to the last census there are in the Diocese of Carpentaria (including the Northern Territory) about 16,500 whites, 7,400 Chinese, Japanese, Melanesians, and 35,000 Aborigines. Apart from the responsibility which lies upon us as bound by our Lord's mandate, and as dwellers in the midst of this great heathen population, their lies upon us also a special call and obligation, for the funds for the formation of the diocese were subscribed in England mainly on account of its great opportunities for missionary enterprise; and the same consideration has largely influenced subscribers in the South of Australia. I am thankful to say that these responsibilities are not ignored, but we must enter more freely into our open doors. Much good work has been done among the South Sea Islanders of Port Douglas and Thursday Island. At the former place Mr. Wilkinson has gathered together a notable class and I was much struck by the reverence and intelligence displayed by the 22 candidates that he presented for Holy Baptism. At Thursday Island not only has the good work begun so many years ago been maintained, but it has been extended by more than trebling the accommodation of the Home, where we can now put up some 30 boys.

The Japanese work has continued steadily. Much of its success is due to the faithful and unremitting efforts of Mr. Kashiwagi, Hon. Japanese Catechist, who for many years has devoted himself to the work of instruction and interpretation. I feel it right, as Bishop, to express my admiration for Mr. Kashiwagi's high character and constant zeal for the Faith. It is impossible to refer to mission work at Thursday Island without recalling the splendid services rendered by Miss Buchanan, whose name is always referred to by South Sea Islanders and Japanese with unbounded affection and respect. The Vicar has added to his many duties the care of the lepers on Friday Island in which as in all other branches of mission work a good example was set by Rev. W. M. Woods, M.A., during his incumbency.

ABORIGINES.

Above all, however, there rests on us a responsibility for the aborigines, of whom there are about 20,000 in the Northern Territory and about 15,000 in the Queensland part of the diocese. Our Church is represented in this matter in the Northern Territory by a Mission at Karpargoo, about 100 miles east of Port Darwin, supported mainly by two parishes in Adelaide. Messrs. Lennox and Gathercole have been working there with heroic self-sacrifice. In the Queensland part of the diocese we have as yet no mission. The Government of Queensland, which has shown itself laudably anxious to do its duty in the matter, has offered us a site somewhere near the Mitchell River, where the natives are still untouched by white settlement, and some aid in the way of provision for teaching and food. I have arranged to accompany the Protector of Aborigines to the east coast of the Gulf in April, and hope then to select a site. To start and maintain a mission will no doubt be a great strain on so weak and poor a diocese as ours, but it is a duty to which we are called by many unmistakable signs and which we cannot neglect without shame and retribution; and I know that I shall not appeal to you in vain for aid and sympathy in this undertaking, the difficulty of which I by no means under-estimate. While the success of the Yarrabah Mission has shown what can be done, yet it must be admitted that the aborigines have, at first sight, less to attract affection and interest than many other races. It has been frequently objected to this people that they show no signs of gratitude for anything that may be given to or done for them. On this point I should like to quote an impartial and not theologically biased witness, Professor Baldwin Spencer, M.A.: "Here we may notice a criticism frequently made with regard to the native, that he is incapable of gratitude. It is undoubtedly true that he is not in the habit of showing anything like excessive gratitude on receiving gifts from the white man, but neither does he think it necessary to express his gratitude when receiving gifts from one of his own tribe. It is necessary to put one's self in the mental attitude of the native. It is with him a fixed habit to give away part of what he has, and he neither expects the man to whom he gives a thing to express his gratitude, nor when a native gives him anything does he think it necessary to do so himself, for the simple reason that giving and receiving are matters of course in his every-day life. So when he receives anything from a white man he does not think it necessary to do what he neither does nor is expected to do in the case of his fellow-tribesman. It does not occur to him that an expression of gratitude is necessary. On the other hand, he parts with as a matter of course, and often for the merest trifle (not only what is a trifle to us but also to him) objects that have cost him much labour to produce, but which the white man has perhaps taken a fancy to."—The Native Tribes of Central Australia, p. 48. It is only by a sympathetic study and understanding of these people that we can hope to influence them for good, and when such a sympathetic understanding is combined with Christian self-devotion we shall not ever expect results in vain.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

Of public events: although we may not pass over in silence the death of our august and all-honoured Sovereign Lady Queen Victoria (sudden-seeming like the crashing downfall of some mighty oak of the forest, revealing all its greatness only in its fall) the accession of the King and the visit of the Heir-Apparent to these shores: that which touches us most closely is the Inauguration of the Commonwealth and the legislation of the Federal Parliament. I was one of those who hoped much from the wider outlook and less petty interests of the Federal Legislature, and it would be foolish and unfair to judge the future by the work of a single year; but in the one measure passed which particularly affects this diocese it is difficult to believe that there was not undue haste and a certain unwillingness to seek fuller information. While we must loyally accept and strive to make the best of the undoubted determination of the majority of the Australian people with regard to South Sea Island labour, even if we doubt the wisdom of the policy, yet we have a right, and more than a right—a duty—to protest most earnestly, in the name of right and justice, against the violent expulsion of those of our South Sea Island brethren who have dwelt amongst us as sober and respected citizens for periods of from ten to thirty years, who have been allowed to marry, acquire property and make themselves what they had every right to consider secure and permanent homes. No amount of popular sentiment can make wrong right, and it would be a thousand pities that the new Commonwealth should sully its fame by an act of oppression to a people who were too weak to effectually resent it. I would suggest that all Islanders who shall have been ten years in the country at the end of the period of grace should be exempted from deportation. Their numbers would not be so large as to be any conceivable menace, and the ends of justice would be fairly served.

DIVORCE LEGISLATION.

We are threatened with another phase of Federal Legislation in the form of a Divorce Bill, which though not a Government measure, will evidently not meet with any official opposition. I thought it my duty to write a letter on this subject to Mr. Philp, who kindly forwarded it to the Federal Premier, and it has been widely circulated in common with protests from other Bishops and Church Assemblies. Mr. Dobson, the author of the Bill, has replied to his critics with much moderation and good taste, but singularly inconclusive arguments. Briefly they are these. 1. That the marriage laws of Australia must be uniform, and therefore the other four States must conform to New South Wales and Victoria, which have two-thirds of the population. 2. His Bill gives to the wife a morally justified right to divorce. 3. Ideals must be conformed to human weaknesses. 4. Judicial separation is useless because the main object of the wife is re-marriage. 5. Sir Alfred Stephen was in favour of increased facilities for divorce. To these arguments we may shortly reply. 1. It does not follow that because a majority in New South Wales and Victoria are in favour of the Bill therefore a majority of Australia is in its favour. The majority in the two States may be so small that the majority against in the other States would more than counterbalance it. 2. Is covered from the Church point of view by judicial separation. 3. Begs the whole question, opens a wide door for abuses and suggests the question as to why we need looser laws than our fathers did. 4. It is surely at least as open to argue that the woman who has made one unhappy marriage will do well to pause before running a second risk. 5. One name, however respected, is a slender foundation for deciding a great principle. On this point Sir Alfred was notoriously at issue with other sincere Christians. I have just received a letter from the Bishop of South Tokyo, in which he says, "The standard of the sanctity of marriage is steadily rising both in the Christian communities and outside. The Government is bent on improvement." It would be a strange spectacle to see the Christian people of Australia striving to lower that sanctity of marriage which the heathen people of Japan are striving to raise.

DIVORCED PERSONS.

With regard to the marriage of divorced persons I desire to draw the attention of the clergy to the Instructions on the subject issued by the Bishops of the Province of N.S.W. In no case may a clergyman marry a divorced person (guilty or not guilty) without the special consent of the Bishop, and I may add that in my opinion circumstances would have to be very exceptional for that consent to be given. In no cases may the clergy disregard any of the prohibitions in the table of affinity in the Book of Common Prayer. In no case may the Holy Communion be administered to a divorced person, who has re-married, unless by special permission of the Bishop. The clergy must be very careful in the performance of marriages to conform exactly to the rules under which they are licensed by the State, as any widespread infringement of them may lead to the already suggested substitution in all cases of a civil marriage, the effect of which would undoubtedly tend seriously to the neglect of the religious ceremony, which would come to be looked on as an unnecessary appendage to it.

BIBLE IN STATE SCHOOLS.

In another matter deeply affecting the welfare of the State we owe a great debt of gratitude to Rev. G. H. Frodsham for his unwearied advocacy of Religious Education and his labours on behalf of the Bible in State Schools League. In spite of misrepresentations and a good deal of covert as well as overt hostility the Referendum has been taken and the result shows that an overwhelming majority of the parents are in favour of religious instruction being given. It now remains to see that effect is given to their wishes, and this will not be done unless we are prepared to press the matter firmly and continually on the attention of the Government. The matter is one of the greatest importance, and it would be unpardonable to allow the advantage we have gained by the exertions of the Bible in State Schools League to be forfeited by carelessness or indecision.

VACANT SEES.

Among the changes affecting our Church life must be numbered the loss within the last few months of three of our senior Bishops. A sudden and painless death has removed in the midst of his labours the learned and well-beloved Bishop of Goulburn. No happier end could have come to a life devoted to his Master's service. The Bishop of Melbourne has been compelled to resign by increasing age and ill-health. His sturdy common sense, deep piety, and wide sympathy have earned him general affection, and he will carry with him the earnest prayers of the Church for the peace and happiness of his declining years.

BISHOP OF TASMANIA.

Another Bishop goes home in the full vigour of life to undertake a great work as Secretary of S.P.G. We all know what Bishop Montgomery has been to the spiritual life of Australia, and how, under God, he has been the means of reviving among us the spirit of missions, when it had become largely dormant. Much difference of opinion has arisen as to whether he should have accepted the post; but the call, voiced by the Archbishops of Canterbury and York and by a Committee of the foremost Bishops in England, seemed to be clearly the Will of God; and I have myself no doubt that he was following the clear path of duty in answering to it. To go meant much of self-sacrifice that was not apparent on the surface, and sorely as I for one felt the loss to the Australian Church, I could not but feel as he did, that to refuse would have been in some sense "il gran rifiuto," save that in this instance it involved a putting off instead of a putting on of honour and dignity. I am sure that the new Secretary of S.P.G. will never forget this diocese in which as Bishop of Tasmania he showed such a deep and practical interest.

NEW BISHOPS.

Against these losses we have to set the gain of two new dioceses, to fill the Sees of which there have been elected, in Archdeacons Langley and Armstrong, well-tried and trusted leaders of the Victorian Church.

SEE TOWN.

The question has been asked why Thursday Island was selected as the See Town of the diocese. I gave the matter very careful consideration before selecting it and took the best advice I could obtain. The conclusion to which I came and which has been confirmed by experience was that it was geographically the most central point in the diocese. It is quite true that it is 400 miles from the nearest parish, but we measure all our distances between parishes here by hundreds of miles. So long as the main traffic of Northern Australia is by sea, and that will probably be the case for a very long time indeed, so long will all northern shipping make Thursday Island their port of call. All lines of steamers converge there, and from no other point can each parish be reached with equal speed. In addition to this, though I know that I am here on very dangerous ground, I believe it to be at least as cool and healthy as any town in the diocese.

DIOCESAN PROPERTY.

Before my Installation, and with definite reference to the selection of Thursday Island as the See, a public meeting of parishioners was held there, and it was resolved that all the land at Thursday Island should be vested in the Synod of the Diocese when formed, for such diocesan, episcopal and parochial purposes as the Synod might decide, subject to the use of the Cathedral for parochial purposes, and provision for residence for the clergyman in charge of the parish. Since the above arrangement was made the parochial interest in the old Rectory, now incorporated in Bishops College, has been purchased for the sum of £205 and the building is now the property of the diocese. The deeds of this and other properties are held in trust by the Synod of the Diocese of North Queensland, to be handed over when we are in a position to accept them. At present, having no Synod we cannot hold property except on the unsatisfactory basis of private trusteeship, and all fresh lands should still be vested in the Synod of the Diocese of North Queensland in trust for the Diocese of Carpentaria. This, though a somewhat cumbrous, is the safest method of procedure. A terrier of lands so held by the Diocese of North Queensland is on the table.

CATHEDRAL.

All the buildings on the Thursday Island property are in good condition. After last wet season, which was an exceptionally heavy one, following on a very long and dry season, alarm was caused by the appearance of a number of cracks in the floor and walls of the Cathedral. These all appeared at once, but careful measurement has disclosed no further movement during the last twelve months, and by the advice of the architect drains have been dug which will, it is believed, obviate any danger to the walls in the future. The damage done is in itself insignificant. The advice of the architect was also taken as to whether it would be possible, if needed, to enlarge the design. He has given an informal opinion that transepts could be added without loss of effect. The building (at present holding 250) would then when completed seat about 400, an accommodation which would probably always suffice for the size of the Island, unless the garrison should at any time be very largely increased. The completion of the last bay of the nave would accommodate about 75, and the transepts about the same number. The spire, which would be seen as a finger pointing to God above from land and sea, we can scarcely hope for except as a gift from some individual benefactor. We have, of course, retained unaltered the name of "Quetta Memorial," and with its present wider sphere of usefulness it is to be hoped that some of those who gave originally to its erection will see their way now to help in the completion of the Church. The arrangements for the Cathedral parish are simple and satisfactory. The Bishop is Dean and titular Rector of the parish, and appoints a Vicar to the charge of the parish. This office will be merged in that of Sub-dean when our organisation is a little more advanced.

BISHOP'S INCOME.

Here I may say a word about my own position. It was thought that the sum of £10,000 collected for the capital would, if invested wholly or in part in Australia, form a sufficient endowment for the See, but the determination of the authorities of the Colonial Bishops Fund, that the amount must be invested in England, though in view of the heavy endowment loss in other Australian dioceses its wisdom cannot be disputed, has had the effect of reducing the estimated income to £300 a year. I find that with care this sum is just sufficient for episcopal purposes, but it is not sufficient for the many diocesan expenses and benefactions, which a Bishop is sometimes able and glad to personally defray. As Warden (and Lecturer when opportunity allows) I occupy rooms at Bishops College when at Thursday Island, and I do not think that it is advisable at present to erect a separate Bishops House, which the income of the See would not enable him to maintain.

THURSDAY ISLAND.

Before leaving the subject of the See Town, there are some names which I should like to recall in connection with it. The Quetta Memorial Cathedral will always be associated with the name of Rev. A. A. Maclaren of the New Guinea Mission, who, after taking an active part in the rescue of the survivors of the "Quetta," and attending to their necessities, suggested the erection of a Church as a Memorial to those whose lives had been lost and as a Thank-offering on behalf of those who had been saved. I wish we had some permanent memorial here of that noble and self-sacrificing life.

The first President of the Building Committee we have happily with us still to-day in the person of the Hon. John Douglas, the bearer of an honoured name that will always be associated with the history of Thursday Island, and on whose deep interest in all that has tended to the glory of God and the welfare alike of white and coloured inhabitants during his long tenure of office I have no need to dwell. To the Rev. W. Maitland Woods, M.A., first Rector of the parish, I have already referred. One name, not of our own communion, I desire to record with respectful admiration, that of the Rev. W. Chalmers, of New Guinea, a frequent visitor and worshipper here, whose brave life and martyr's death have endeared him to so many.

VISITATIONS.

During the past year I have been almost constantly travelling. I visited Cooktown, Port Douglas and the Gulf country twice, Burketown and Georgetown once, and Port Darwin three times. Confirmations were held at Cooktown, Croydon, Normanton and Thursday Island, and 19 males and 41 females, in all 60 persons were confirmed. I was glad to find at Cooktown that Rev. H. W. Curtis had inspired the parishioners with such zeal that they entirely renovated the Rectory at a cost of £100 for materials, giving all the time and labour themselves. At Croydon a comfortable and convenient Rectory has been purchased and steady efforts have been made to reduce the debt, which is I am thankful to say the only one in the diocese. At Port Darwin a site for a Church has been purchased in the main street, and it is hoped that a small Church, for which the greater part of the funds are already in hand, will be shortly erected. I thought it right during the year to be absent for some months on a journey through the central parts of the diocese. In addition to the privilege of ministering to those who had been for years without any religious services, I had many opportunities of studying the condition and treatment of the aborigines, while the journey, in the course of which I travelled 1,300 miles by buggy and horseback, has been useful in calling attention to the vast extent of our diocese, measuring as it does more than a thousand miles at its extreme points both from North to South and from East to West.

THE "CARPENTARIAN."

Our little quarterly diocesan paper, the Carpentarian, the accounts for which you will find on the table, although it does not yet pay its way, amply compensates by its usefulness for the loss on its working. I would urge on the clergy and others the great importance of seeing that every Church family in the parish takes the diocesan paper. Its object is to disseminate information and to stimulate interest in the work of the Church, and its results, even as regards the parish, more than repay the time and trouble expended in securing its proper circulation.

DIOCESAN SCHOOL.

Amid much of progress it was perhaps too much to hope that there would be nothing of failure; and this element has been supplied by the ill success which has followed our attempts to establish a Diocesan School for Girls. For that failure I must accept full responsibility as it was by my strong desire that the effort was made. At one time it seemed as though the experiment would be successful but a variety of causes combined against it, and the attempt was finally abandoned. As certain funds had been put at my absolute disposal I felt justified in devoting to the attempt to establish the school a sum of £40, but I must admit that the scheme has proved itself premature. At the same time it is only just to say that the effort was not necessarily foredoomed to failure, and would probably have succeeded but for circumstances which could not have been foreseen.

COMMISSARIES.

I desire to record our great indebtedness to Rev. G. H. Frodsham, my commissary in Brisbane, for his unflinching devotion to the interests of the diocese and his many efforts to promote its welfare. Not we alone but the whole Church in Queensland will be heavy losers by his departure. He has set a splendid example of a wide churchmanship, which, without compromise of principle, embraces all spheres of life in its activities. I have asked him to act as additional commissary in England during his stay there. My present Commissary in England Rev. E. Harris D. D. gives us the full benefit of his Australian experiences, and his wide knowledge of men. Lord Beauchamp continues to show the warmest interest in the diocese, and has pleaded for us eloquently at many meetings in England.

PROVINCE OF QUEENSLAND.

One important matter that will come before you is the question as to whether this diocese should join in the formation of an ecclesiastical Province of Queensland. The proposed conditions of union, which have already been assented to by the dioceses of Brisbane and Rockhampton, are in your hands and, should they meet with your approval, I see no reason why we should wait for the formation of a Synod to signify our assent. The provisions have been arrived at after very full discussion and consideration, and seem to me eminently just and fair. You must nevertheless give them careful consideration, as the step proposed is an important one and cannot be retraced.

PAROCHIAL FINANCE.

Another matter is a scheme of Parochial Finance, which I hope to lay before you. Of this I will only say that while I believe it would tend enormously to strengthen the financial position of our Church, it will be sure, like all disciplinary measures, to meet with a great deal of criticism and opposition, and unless you are prepared to carry it out thoroughly, consistently, and patiently, you had better leave it severely alone. In any case, I must ask you to give it the most full and careful consideration.

THE MORAL STANDARD.

A third subject for discussion is the moral standard of our people. This is no academic subject but one of deep practical importance. It is the people who make the Church, and the very existence of the Church, and in the long run of the people, depends on a right attitude towards morals. It is to you, my brethren of the Clergy, that the people look for the enunciation and maintenance of a right standard. Where the moral tone is low, the work of the parish priest is doubly difficult, since he is not supported by public opinion, and has to create the standard to which he appeals. This standard the Church must not lower for any temporary advantage. She can only maintain respect and usefulness by unflinching adherence to those great unchanging laws of right and wrong which she inherits from her Divine Master. I have to acknowledge, with deep thankfulness, instances which have come to my knowledge where the Clergy have made a brave stand for a higher ideal in the face of public apathy or adverse pressure. It is only so that the Church can justify her existence. If we were to live by tolerating a low standard among our people we should deserve as well as earn their lasting contempt.

DIRECT GIVING.

Connected with this subject is the question of the means by which it is lawful to raise money for Church purposes. While recognising that it is perfectly lawful for persons to convert their gifts of voice and handiwork into money by means of concerts and sales of work, and that much good and generous service has been rendered in this way to the Church, it may still be said that broadly speaking money profits the Church most in proportion to the directness with which it is given. Raffles, lotteries and dances held in connection with any concert, or other gathering for the purpose of raising money for any church purposes whatever, I believe to be utterly wrong and contrary to Christian principles, and I cannot allow them to be thus held in any parish in my diocese.

QUIET DAY.

You will have observed that one of the days of our Conference has been set apart for purposes of devotion. It is vain to devise elaborate plans for the well-being of the Church unless we place ourselves unreservedly under the influence of His Spirit from Whom all good counsels do come. It is vain to energise about multitudinous activities without that spirit of prayer which alone can bring them to issue in the glory of God. I regard this opportunity of common prayer and meditation as the most valuable part of our Conference, and I am sure you will all assist me to make it for us real opportunity of spiritual growth.

CONCLUSION.

And now, my brethren, it is time to bring my address to an end. I assure you of the deep pleasure it is to have every one of you around me, brothers, fellow-workers in Christ. We are but a few men; we have neither wealth nor other power than that of those whose whole heart is devoted to that which they believe to be true. We lay no claim to freedom from errors and infirmities. We are simply ministers and laymen of the Church, resolved to do all we can of our duty, met in the name of God to consult loyally for the good of the Church, and relying on the guidance of that Holy Spirit, which is not denied to those that ask in Christ's name. May He be with us in all that we say and do, fanning the flames of brotherly love, checking each motion of uncharity, quickening slow thoughts and loosing stammering tongues, inspiring high resolves, opening the gates of good counsel. May He be in our hearts and on our lips, to think as He would have us think, and speak and do only what is well pleasing in His sight.

7. A vote of thanks for the President's Address was proposed by Hon. J. Douglas, seconded by Rev. H. W. Curtis, supported by His Excellency Mr. Le Hunte, and carried.

8. Rev. W. P. Glover asked: "Is the Bishop of the Diocese disposed to recommend the use of the R.V. Bible in the public services of the Church in this Diocese, instead of the A.V. Bible?"

9. A number of notices of motion were given.

10. The President announced the order of business for next day, and the Conference adjourned until 10 a.m. on Wednesday.

SECOND DAY.—Wednesday, February 26, 1902.

1. The President took the Chair and read Prayers at 10 a.m.

2. The Minutes were read and confirmed.

3. The Bishop replied in answer to question by Rev. W. P. Glover: "I am not disposed to recommend at present the use of the Revised Version instead of the Authorised Version in the Public Services of the Church in this Diocese."

3. A return of religious statistics of the Diocese was laid upon the table. (See Appendix C.)

4. The subject of missionary work in the Diocese was introduced by the Bishop, who advocated the establishment of a Mission to the Aborigines on the Mitchell River. Revs. W. P. Glover, H. W. Curtis, T. K. Pitt, and Mr. W. M. Wilkinson spoke on the subject.

5. Moved by Rev. W. P. Glover, seconded by Rev. H. W. Curtis: "That this Conference, recognising the duty of the Church to the Aborigines within the Diocese, hereby pledges itself to support the Bishop in his endeavours to establish a Mission on the Mitchell River for the evangelisation of the native population." Carried.

6. The Bishop introduced a draft copy of Diocesan Regulations relating to marriage, diocesan fees, buildings, burials, diocesan assessments, &c. These were discussed in committee and amended. (See Appendix B.)

7. Rev. H. W. Curtis moved, and Rev. T. K. Pitt seconded: "That the Diocesan Regulations be agreed to, except the diocesan assessment, which should be postponed for fuller discussion." Carried.

8. The Conference adjourned until 4 p.m.

9. On resuming, the subject of "The Moral Standard" was introduced by Rev. H. W. Curtis and discussed by all members of the Conference. It was decided to deal with the subject in detail under the following heads:—

1. Gambling;
2. Relation of the Sexes;
3. Home Life.

The discussion was adjourned.

10. Hon. John Douglas moved, and the Bishop seconded, a vote of thanks to the Bishop of North Queensland for his splendid work in connection with the formation of the Diocese of Carpentaria. Carried.

11. Rev. W. P. Glover moved, and Rev. H. W. Curtis seconded: "That this Conference expresses its gratitude to Almighty God for the successful initiation of the Diocesan work, and congratulates the Bishop on the completion of the first year of his Episcopate, and records its appreciation of his untiring efforts on behalf of the Diocese." Carried.

12. Rev. H. W. Curtis moved, and Hon. J. Douglas seconded: "That this Conference desires to express its gratitude to Almighty God for the completion of the College scheme; to felicitate the Bishop on his efforts in establishing the College; and to express the hope and prayer that it may be of lasting blessing to the Church in training candidates for its sacred ministry." Carried.

13. Proposed by Mr. W. M. Wilkinson, and seconded by the Bishop: "That this Conference tenders to Lord Beauchamp its warmest thanks for his generous aid towards Bishops College, and also its appreciation of his unfailing and practical interest in the Diocese generally." Carried.

14. Rev. W. P. Glover moved, and Mr. W. M. Wilkinson seconded: "That this Conference records its sense of gratitude to Rev. G. H. Frodsham for the valuable assistance which he has rendered the Diocese as Bishop's Commissary in Brisbane." Carried.

15. The Conference adjourned till 8 p.m.

16. On resuming, the matter of Church Property was fully discussed, and adjourned.

17. The Financial scheme introduced by the Bishop was discussed, and referred to a committee, consisting of Revs. H. W. Curtis, W. P. Glover, and Mr. G. H. Bennett.

18. The Conference adjourned at 10 p.m.

THIRD DAY.—Thursday, 27th February, 1902.

The Conference met at 10 a.m.

1. The President read Prayers, and the Minutes of the previous day were read and confirmed.

2. Hearty votes of thanks to S.P.G. and S.P.C.K. and all others who had contributed towards the maintenance of the work of the Diocese were moved and passed.

3. It was resolved in reply to a letter from the Secretary of the Adelaide Church Congress asking for opinions on the proposed programme to suggest the subject of a Church Review for Australia.

4. Moved by Rev. H. W. Curtis, seconded by Mr. W. M. Wilkinson: "That this Conference expresses its sense of the need of Missionary effort among the Japanese of Thursday Island and the Chinese of Port Darwin, and respectfully recommends that the Bishop should take such action as he may think necessary and possible for their instruction in the Christian Faith." Carried.

5. Conference adjourned to 4 p.m.

6. On resuming it was moved by Rev. W. P. Glover, seconded by Mr. Abi Murray: "That each Parish or District within the Diocese shall pay annually to the Church Management Fund such sum as may be from year to year assessed by the Diocesan Council, provided that such sum shall not exceed eight (8) guineas nor be less than four (4) guineas." (See Appendix B.) Carried.

7. Proposed by Mr. A. Murray and seconded by Rev. H. W. Curtis: "That the Bishop of the Diocese be asked to hold in trust any properties which may be acquired by the Church in the Diocese until such time as a Diocesan Synod is created." Carried.

8. Proposed by Mr. Abi Murray, seconded by Rev. H. W. Curtis: "That in the opinion of this Conference it would be convenient that a local Diocesan Treasurer should be appointed." Carried.

9. The subject of Sunday School Lessons was introduced by Mr. G. H. Bennett and adjourned.

10. Moved by Mr. G. H. Bennett and seconded by Mr. H. G. Hodder: "That the members of this Conference view with alarm the spread of the gambling evil in Australia, and hereby pledge themselves to condemn the practice to the utmost of their ability, believing as they do that it is inimical to the highest interests of Australian manhood." Carried.

11. Moved by Rev. W. P. Glover, seconded by Rev. H. W. Curtis: "That this Conference views with satisfaction the action of the Federal Postmaster-General in putting into force the clauses of the Postal Act with reference to letters addressed to the promoters of sweeps and lotteries." Carried.

12. Moved by Rev. T. K. Pitt, seconded by Mr. G. H. Bennett:—"That this Conference is of the opinion that the home life of a community is intimately connected with its moral standard. The authority and control of parents on the one hand, and the obedience and honour of children on the other, are the absolute condition of the permanent well-being of the family and the State. The Conference would therefore take this opportunity of emphasizing the need of clear, definite, and systematic instruction on the part of clergy, teachers, and others, concerning these primary principles of morality in the home and the nation." Carried.

13. Moved by Rev. H. W. Curtis, seconded by Mr. G. H. Bennett: "That this Conference respectfully suggests to the Bishop of the Diocese that the report on the subject of Purity, drawn up by the Lambeth Conference in 1888, and again commended by the Conference to Church people in 1897, should be commended to the Church people of the Diocese, and that the report be printed and circulated in the various parishes of the Diocese." (See Appendix D.) Carried.

14. The Conference adjourned to 8 p.m.

15. On resuming, a congratulatory telegram was read from the Bishop of North Queensland.

16. The subject of Provincial Action was introduced by Rev. W. P. Glover and fully discussed by the members of the Conference. Moved by Rev. W. P. Glover, and seconded by Mr. H. G. Hodder: "That it be a recommendation from this Conference to the Bishop of the Diocese that his Lordship should signify the consent of the Diocese of Carpentaria to the Provincial Scheme, and further that the Bishop be asked to obtain, if possible, such modifications in the proposals as may be deemed necessary in the interests of this and other Dioceses of the Province." Carried.

17. Rev. W. P. Glover moved a series of resolutions with regard to the Diocesan Conference, which were received.

18. It was resolved to consider them in Committee, and Mr. G. H. Bennett was elected Chairman.

19. The resolutions were reported with amendments and adopted on the motion of Mr. H. G. Hodder, seconded by Mr. Abi Murray. (See Appendix A.)

20. The Bishop nominated Rev. W. P. Glover as a Clerical, and Mr. G. H. Bennett as a Lay member of the Diocesan Council. Revs. H. W. Curtis, T. K. Pitt, M.A., and H. G. Smith were nominated as Clerical members, and Messrs. A. Murray and H. G. Hodder as Lay members of the Diocesan Council.

21. The Conference then adjourned until 8 p.m. on the following day.

FOURTH DAY.—Friday, February 28th, 1902.

1. The day was spent in devotional exercises, conducted in the Cathedral by the Bishop of the Diocese.

2. The Conference resumed at 8 p.m., and was opened with prayer by the President.

3. The Minutes were read and confirmed.

4. Moved by Rev. W. P. Glover, seconded by Rev. H. W. Curtis: "That this Conference desires to express its conviction that Direct Giving is the most Scriptural as well as the most effective means of raising money for Church purposes, and that the practices of raffling and other questionable methods of obtaining Church funds should be absolutely avoided." Carried.

5. Moved by Rev. H. W. Curtis, and seconded by Mr. W. M. Wilkinson: "That this Conference desires to express its strong protest against the injustice which would arise through the expulsion from the Commonwealth of the Pacific Islanders who have been domiciled in the colonies for some time before the passing of the Pacific Islanders' Act. It therefore trusts that the Federal Government will not resort to forcible deportation in those cases where wrong and injustice would clearly result from such a proceeding."

6. Amendment proposed by the Bishop, and seconded by Hon. J. Douglas: "That this Conference, being convinced that a grievous wrong would be done were the deportation clauses of the Pacific Islanders Act to be put into force with regard to those Islanders who have been for a long time domiciled in Queensland, requests the Bishop to keep himself so informed of the probable action of the Federal Government that it may be afforded an opportunity of timely protest should such action be actually contemplated." The voting resulted in an equal division. The President then gave his casting vote for the amendment. The amendment was then put as a motion and carried.

7. The committee on the Financial Scheme submitted their report.

8. A ballot was taken for two Clerical members of the Diocesan Council, and resulted in the election of Rev. H. W. Curtis and Rev. T. K. Pitt, M.A.

9. Proposed by the Rev. W. P. Glover, seconded by Mr. H. G. Hodder: "That this Conference desires to place on record its sense of appreciation of the eminent services which Hon. John Douglas, C.M.G., has rendered to the Church in this Diocese. It would also take the opportunity of wishing him a thoroughly enjoyable trip to the Old Country, and of expressing the hope that by God's good providence he may be spared to return to Thursday Island to carry on the useful work which he has performed during the last 17 years."

The motion was warmly endorsed by the Bishop and carried by acclamation.

Rev. H. W. Curtis proposed a vote of thanks to the Secretary. This was seconded by Mr. Wilkinson and strongly supported by the Bishop, who said that much of the success of the Conference was due to Mr. Glover's exertions.

Proposed by Rev. T. K. Pitt, and seconded by Rev. H. W. Curtis: "That the thanks of the Conference be tendered to the Bishop and Miss White for their hospitality at Bishops College." Carried.

It was resolved that the question of printing the proceedings be left to the Diocesan Council.

The Bishop then said: It is with feelings of devout thankfulness to Almighty God and hearty acknowledgment of His good hand upon us, that I bring this Conference to a conclusion.

I cannot sufficiently express my sense of the earnestness and sincerity of purpose with which both Clergy and Laity have spoken and worked to such practical effect. No time has been wasted, no subject slurred over, and nothing left undone.

The resolutions with regard to a permanent Conference and Diocesan Council will, I am sure, be of great practical service, alike to Bishop and Diocese; and the almost unanimous acceptance of the Provincial Scheme shows that you are willing to look beyond your own borders.

The resolutions you passed with regard to the standard of morals are, I think, wise and temperate.

I am glad that the Conference has confirmed the opinion which I expressed in my address, that a serious wrong would be done should the Federal Government put into practice the deportation clauses of the Pacific Islanders Act.

The Conference owes a deep debt of gratitude to the Hon. Secretary, Rev. W. P. Glover. I feel that a very large proportion of its success is due to his practical experience, his deep interest, and unwearied labour on its behalf.

I feel greatly encouraged by this Conference. The Clergy have thrown themselves heartily into the work, and the Laity have given the readiest and most valuable assistance.

Much, of course, remains to be done in the way of Diocesan organisation; but I think our Conference has been a real step in advance, and I cannot but feel that our prayers have been answered, and that the guidance of the Holy Spirit has not been withheld from us.

The Minutes were then read and confirmed, and the Conference closed with the Te Deum and Benediction, and was adjourned sine die.

Special Services were held in the Cathedral on Sunday, March 2nd. The preacher in the morning was Rev. T. K. Pitt, M.A., and in the evening Rev. H. W. Curtis. The congregations were large and the services most hearty. On Monday morning the Bishop held a meeting with the Clergy, and in the afternoon a meeting of the Diocesan Council was held. On the following day the Bishop left with Rev. T. K. Pitt for Port Douglas, and Rev. H. W. Curtis returned to Cooktown. The Bishop hopes after holding a Confirmation at Port Douglas and instituting Rev. T. K. Pitt to go on to Yababah in order to visit Rev. J. B. Gribble and confer with him relative to the proposed Aboriginal Mission on the Mitchell River. Mr. W. M. Wilkinson will proceed to Normanton by the next boat. Rev. W. Hudson, M.A., is expected shortly after Easter.

APPENDICES TO REPORT OF CONFERENCE.

[Appendix A.]

DIOCESAN CONFERENCE.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY THE CONFERENCE.

1. That this Provisional Conference of Church Workers in the Diocese of Carpentaria affirms the desirability of holding Diocesan Conferences until such time as a Diocesan Synod is constituted.

2. That the Diocesan Conference should consist of all the Licensed Clergy within the Diocese, and one Lay Representative from each Parish or District.

3. That the Conference meet at least once in two years.

4. That a Standing Committee of the Conference be appointed, such Committee to consist of three (3) Clergy and three (3) Laity; one-third of whom (of each order) shall be nominated by the Bishop, and the remaining two-thirds elected by the Conference. The Committee so elected shall hold office until the meeting of the next Conference. The Standing Committee shall have power to fill any vacancy which may occur in the Committee.

5. That the Standing Committee of the Conference be known as the Diocesan Council.

6. That the Diocesan Council meet at least once a quarter.

[Appendix B.]

DIOCESAN REGULATIONS.

Issued by the Bishop with the approval of the Conference.

TABLE OF FEES.

The following are payable to the Registrar of the Diocese on behalf of the Church Management Fund:—

Consecration of Church	2	2	0
Affixing seal to any document not included as above	10	6

The following are payable to the Rector of the Parish:—

Copy of Baptismal or Marriage Certificate ...	2	6
Burial Fee	10	6

BUILDING REGULATIONS.

Plans for the building or alteration of Churches, Church Rooms, and Rectories must be submitted to the Bishop for approval before any contract is entered into, but such approval does not imply any Diocesan responsibility for the cost of the same.

No alteration may be made in any consecrated building without a faculty from the Bishop.

MARRIAGE REGULATIONS.

1. The clergy are recommended to the Registrar-General by the Bishop that they may be registered for the solemnization of marriages, and no clergyman may solemnize marriages until so recommended and registered. This registration gives the clergy no right to celebrate marriages otherwise than as the customs and laws of the Church allow.

2. No marriage may be celebrated otherwise than by banns or by Episcopal license.

3. Clergy who hold the Bishop's leave to issue his licenses are termed Surrogates.

4. No Surrogate may issue a license for, or any clergyman celebrate the marriage of, any divorced person whatsoever without reference to the Bishop, and permission obtained from him.

5. No marriage may be celebrated otherwise than in a Church or accustomed place of public worship except by express permission of the Bishop; provided that in urgent cases, founded on special circumstances, when reference to the Bishop is practically impossible, the clergyman shall act on his discretion, and forthwith report the circumstances to the Bishop.

6. Surrogates may not issue licenses for the celebration of marriages in Churches other than those within their own parishes or districts. But where the clergyman of a parish or district has not been licensed as a Surrogate, application must be made to the Surrogate appointed to issue licenses for the celebration of marriage within that parish or district.

7. The authorised fee for the Bishop's license is £3 3s. The Surrogate is authorised to retain for his own use this fee, with the exception of 10s. 6d., which is payable to the Church Management Fund. Where only £2 2s. or a smaller sum is paid, the Surrogate is authorised to retain three-fourths of the fee paid.

8. Quarterly returns must be made of all marriages celebrated, and the fees due to the Diocese must be transmitted at the same time.

9. No fee may be demanded for marriage by banns, and if any free-will offerings are made in such cases they may be entirely retained by the clergyman.

BURIAL REGULATIONS.

Where the office for the burial of the dead may not be used the form authorised by the Bishops of Australia and Tasmania should be used. It may be obtained from the Diocesan Book Depot.

In the case of baptised infants and young children the following service may be used—Sentences: St. Matt. v. 8; St. Luke xviii. 16; St. Matt. xvii. 10; Is. xl. 11; Psalms xxiii. and cxiii. Lesson: Rev. vii. 9-17, or II. Sam. xii. 15-23, or I. Cor. xv. 20 to end.

Sentences at grave: Jer. xxxi. 15-17, or Rev. vii. 16, 17. Collects for Holy Innocents and Easter Eve.

Where the ground is unconsecrated the following prayer shall be said before the body is laid in the grave:—"O merciful God, who hast taught us in Thy Holy Word that the bodies of the faithful are members of Christ and temples of the Holy Ghost, and that having been sown in weakness they will be raised in power; we humbly beseech Thee to sanctify this grave to be a peaceful resting-place for the mortal remains of this our dear (brother) here departed: and grant, O Lord, that we, with all those who are departed this life in Thy true faith and fear, may attain to the resurrection of the just, through Him who is the Resurrection and the Life, Who died and was buried and rose again for us, and who now liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost, one God, world without end. Amen.

SPECIAL PSALMS.

The following special Psalms are allowed to be sung in Church in place of the Psalms for the day, where the consent of the Ordinary has been previously obtained:—Psalms i. and xv., xix, xxiii. and xxiv., xlii., xlv. and xlvii., li., lxxv., lxxii., lxxiii., lxxvii., lxxx., xc, xcix. and c., cxiii. and cxiv., cxxix. and cxxx., cxxxv., cxlv., cxlv. and cl.

BIGOTRY AND TOLERATION.

Bigotry, says "Ian Maclaren" in The Sunday Magazine, can be distinguished from conviction, because the one rests on prejudice and the other on reason. When one has made any province of truth his own by patience and reverent search, he is bound to be humble and tolerant—humble because he has learned how vast truth is, of which he only possesses a minute part; tolerant because his neighbour may very likely possess some other part. But if one claims some province which he had never conquered with his own hand, and which he had never seen with his own eyes, then is he sensitive and jealous to the last degree about his possession, and ready to go to war about it, just because he holds it by so doubtful a tenure.

Toleration springs from a sense of intellectual and spiritual security; bigotry is generally the fretful and nervous temper of one who is doubtful about his title deeds and resents any inquiry. When a man knows whom he has believed, and is persuaded, he possesses his soul in patience, and also in sweetness. When one only knows what he has believed, and does not know why he has believed, he is full of suspicion, and keeps sleepless watch upon his frontier.

And a bigoted person can always be detected by this unfortunate attitude towards his fellow men, that he hates those with whom he disagrees. If one be spiritually persuaded concerning any truth, then he must regard his brother who has not been so persuaded, with compassion, because being blind, very likely through no fault of his own but through the force of circumstances, he is missing the glory of the sun and the beauty of the flowers. But if one is merely filled with notions about truth, then it is natural that he should be very indignant with his brother who regards them as foolishness, and should wish to teach him some salutary lesson for his impertinence. Truth itself, see you, is no man's monopoly, but is the birthright of us all, and it is pitiable if my brother has lost his heritage; but theories—ah! they are my own, and when you deny them it is a personal offence.

It is a historical fact, and one of the most lamentable in morals, that bigotry, which the church has counted almost a virtue and of which very few people repent, has been the cause of larger misery to the human race than any other sin, than the love of money, or the lusts of the flesh.

The Bishop's Diary.

May 3rd.—Left Thursday Island in the "Melbidie," with Dr. and Mrs. Roth and Mr. Jackson, at 2 p.m. Ran out to Black Rock and anchored. Went ashore on Friday Island. Fine beach, with unlimited oysters. One of the blacks from the boat speared a fine mullet.

May 4th.—Left soon after 6 a.m., and about 7 a.m. struck heavily on one of the banks projecting from Prince of Wales Island, about five miles from shore. The tide was very nearly full, and our position an uncomfortable one. We lay about one hundred yards from the edge of the bank, which was very level to all appearance. As the newspapers say, "there was no panic among the passengers," and the crew worked hard to retrieve our misfortune. An anchor was got out, and the boat's head got round, and then all sails were re-set, and we tried to force our way out. At first we did not move at all, but gradually an imperceptible motion began, which at its quickest did not exceed a foot in a minute, not an exhilarating rate of speed, when you know that the tide is beginning to fall, and that it will not rise again for twenty-four hours. Inch by inch we made our way, and happily the tide fell very slowly, and after four hours we reached the edge of the reef, without any deepening of water or increase of speed, until we slid down into deep water amid a general cheer. We had to keep far out to sea after this, and had a rough passage, making the land again soon after daybreak, and reaching the mouth of the Batavia River about 11 a.m. The land is very low, and the opening about two miles across, expanding into a fine bay, some seven miles in diameter, into which the Batavia River runs. The river is navigable for some twenty-five miles, and there is no bar of any kind. Some day it will probably be a much-frequented harbour.

The Mapoon Mission Reserve occupies the southern headland, and is situated in a sheltered bay, with a most beautiful beach. The superintendent, Rev. N. Hey, kindly offered hospitality to the whole party, which was very welcome, as the vessel had to be careened and cleaned. The Mission Station has been in existence for ten years, and it is practically the work of one man, Rev. N. Hey. Originally he had with him his brother-in-law, Rev. J. G.

Ward, but since his death, some six years ago, Mr. Hey has had no assistance whatever save his wife, sister-in-law, and one South Sea Islander for part of the time. The soil is sandy, and the natural advantages very few indeed. Both Mr. Hey and Mr. Ward were Moravians, but the Mission is under the auspices of the Presbyterian Mission Board in Brisbane.

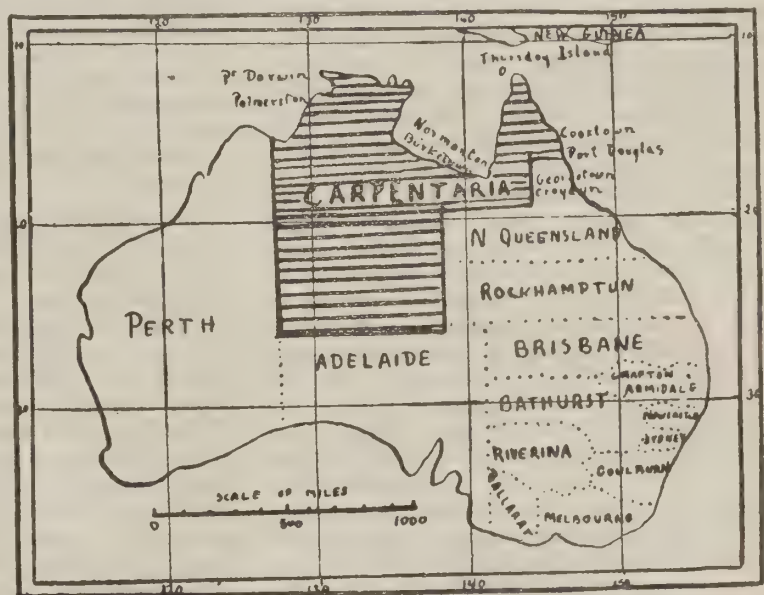

The work accomplished by Mr. Hey and his few helpers, both in regard to material adaptations and influence on the natives, is simply marvellous. Comparison with Yarrabah is immediately suggested, especially as the Missions have been started about the same time. I cannot believe that any work can be more astonishing than that done at Yarrabah, but I am open to confess that it does not exceed what Mr. Hey has accomplished, when we remember how much fewer the natural advantages have been, and that he has had no white assistant. At the same time, we must not forget that Mapoon had Government assistance financially from the first, which I believe was not the case at Yarrabah. Each Mission has its own strong points and its own lessons. Speaking very broadly, I should say that the great success at Yarrabah has been the spiritual transformation of the people by an intensity of sympathy and example of self-denying, earnest work, and the full development, as far as straitened means allowed, of the great natural resources. At Mapoon we have a superintendent with the most careful practical training for his special work, of equally absolute devotion, inventing and contriving with marvellous skill to produce all that did not naturally exist, and winning the natives by calm common sense, and ruling by the most minute thought for every detail. Many of the contrivances in use at Mapoon are not needed at Yarrabah, where more supervisors admit of less system and less mechanism, which is undoubtedly an advantage, as tending more to self-reliance and self-help. I regard Yarrabah more as a self-governing (though carefully controlled) community; Mapoon is more paternally and more exactly governed in minutiae. On the whole, I think that the Yarrabah system is the highest; but although both must depend much on the personal character of the founders, it would probably be easier for an ordinary man to continue to work Mapoon with success than Yarrabah.

Both Stations alike are a complete answer to the foolish statements that have been made about the impossibility of inducing the aborigines to settle down to any steady work. There are some 150 aborigines living permanently on the Station, about twenty married couples, in good houses, a number of young and old men, and the boarded children. Most of the young men go beche-de-mer fishing, and earn a few pounds. All their money is put into a common fund, and they are supplied with tools, &c., as they want them. Before a man can marry, he has to give six months' work on the garden, or at timber getting and cutting, and a house is then built for him.

The hours of work are four in the morning to four in the evening, and the men work well and steadily, though slowly. All the timber is got, and sawn and dressed by the blacks, almost without direction.

Great precautions are taken to ensure the safety of the children, especially the girls, when not under supervision. The gardens where they work, play-sheds, and dormitories, are all surrounded with wire netting, so that no one can get in or out, and all the doors are controlled by wires from the Superintendent's house. The children, and indeed all, seem as happy as the day is long.

The soil of the garden has all been made by sea-weed manure, carried from the beach with incredible labour. It is now very productive.

I was amazed at the proficiency of the children in the school. The English was perfect, and the writing, reading, and arithmetic exceedingly good. A geography lesson was given, and I doubt if any white class would have answered so well; they could not have done better, for out of some 100 questions on the geography of South America and Australia, there was not one mistake, in fact, I only detected one wrong answer in the whole lesson, which covered the whole world.

No difficulties are experienced with the men in any way. In the only two instances which occurred of men annoying married women, a public meeting was called, and the offenders warned by the other men that they would see them punished, a warning which was not neglected. For minor misconduct, the punishment is to cut down and bring in one, two, or three trees of a certain size, and is not resented. Mr. Hey's control of all is amazing.

The social organisation is much less complete than Yarrabah, but it is striking enough when we remember that it is only ten years since Mr. Hey landed under police escort among perfectly wild and apparently intractable savages.

The beaches are very beautiful, and are covered with lovely, and sometimes rare, shells, in the most bountiful profusion.

Nothing could exceed the kindness and hospitality of Mr. Hey and his party. The day after our arrival was made a holiday, and the sports excited the most lively interest.

We left Mapoon in the "Melbidie" early on the morning of Saturday, May 10th. There was scarcely enough wind to take us out of the harbour, but it gradually freshened, and we ran down the coast about two miles from the shore, passing the mouth of the Pennefather River about mid-day. About sunset we anchored to the north of Duyfhen Point. There was a heavy swell which made the boat ride uncomfortably. The land is all low. Standing well out from the land to avoid shoals, we made an early start, and stood across the bay, which is about seventeen miles wide, nearly to Pera Head, and then up the southern shore, towards the mouth of the Embly River, which we reached about 4 p.m. The entrance is difficult, as sand-banks stretch on either side of the narrow channel, up which we had to tack against a stiff breeze. The captain felt his way in over the uncharted banks with great skill. Fortunately the tide was running in, as the channel just at the entrance is only about 100 yards wide or less. Inside it widens to half a mile or more, and the river is over a mile wide. In the deepening twilight we tacked up for about twelve miles, and it was quite dark when we reached the junction of the Embly and the Hey Rivers, where we were to meet the Mission cutter, the "J. A. Ward," which had left Mapoon the day before we did, and arrived a few hours earlier than we. We had to fire a gun to ascertain their whereabouts, but finally succeeded in getting a light, and anchored under a low red cliff. As soon as we were anchored, we had Divine Service on board the "Melbidie." Including Mr. Hey, the captain and mate, and captain of the "J. A. Ward," we were a party of ten, and the service was most hearty. The hymn, "Eternal Father," was an appropriate ending to the exciting navigation of the afternoon.

At daylight on Monday we transferred ourselves to the "J. A. Ward," as the "Melbidie" drew too much water to go up further, and was to return to Mapoon to fetch Mrs. Roth. The wind was light, but the tide was with us, and we drifted and sailed up "the river" for about five miles until the tide turned, and we had to anchor. The river is about a quarter of a mile wide, with high mangrove-covered banks. When we were at anchor, a native came alongside in a bark canoe, attired in a piece of string. These canoes, of which we saw several at Mapoon, are made of a single sheet of bark, with a triangular piece cut out of each end, and sewn up. A couple of sticks are tied across, and the canoe is complete, save for a shell to bale with. The paddle is made out of the stem of a mangrove, with the natural spread of the root for blade. The man had been employed in shelling, and spoke a little English. The lobe of the ears was cut out in the centre, and distended into an enormous loop, capable of holding a small Van Houten's cocoa tin. When not thus ornamented, the loop is hitched up round the top of the ear.

We got under way again about 3 p.m., and floated up the river until dark, when we ran upon a shoal, and Mr. Hey, Mr. Russell, and myself took the dingey and rowed up the river by moonlight for about six miles, to the Weipa landing, where we fired a shot, to attract attention, and were met by Mr. Brown, in charge of the Station, which is about three-quarters of a mile distant. Here we spent the following day, the "Ward," with the Doctor and Mr. Jackson, arriving early in the morning.

Weipa Station has only been opened about four years, and is far less advanced than Mapoon. The blacks seem to be much more migratory and less under any settled influence. Some six acres are under cultivation, but the impression is somewhat disappointing, after Mapoon. I cannot but think that it was a mistake to put it so far inland. Mr. Brown is an English Moravian, and the Mission is, like Mapoon, under the Presbyterian Board of Missions. The staff consists of one lady teacher besides Mrs. Brown and two South Sea Islanders, who are paid £5 a month.

In the evening, at the request of the Superintendent, I held Service at the house for the whites. Including our party, we were nearly a dozen, and we had a very hearty Service, using the Bush Services authorised for use in the Diocese, in which the Prayer Book Office is printed with references and directions, which render it easy for those who are not accustomed to it to keep their place.

Two of the men from the Moreton Telegraph Station came to meet us with horses, and we left Weipa about 9 a.m., and travelling through good cattle country, very green, in spite of the drought elsewhere, passed York Downs Station at fourteen miles, and camped at Fox Creek, ten miles beyond. We got a good start next morning, and rode through very fair country, still green, and with very long grass, to Moreton Telegraph Station, on the Upper Batavia River, a beautiful and always running stream. We passed a good many fine creeks, and altogether the country was very much better than the average country further south. It seems to me that there must be further settlement on this eastern side of the Peninsula, with its fine permanent water and navigable rivers. As it is, we only saw about twenty head of cattle the whole way.

The Moreton Telegraph Station is ingeniously built to resist attack. The whole exterior is of iron, and the buildings are on piles about ten feet high, in the form of a square, enclosing a small courtyard. A space of a few inches is left between every few sheets of the iron enclosure, so that the courtyard and space under the building command all the country round by a series of loop-holes. The windows are fourteen feet above the ground. The stairs open upon the interior court, so that when the entrance-gate is closed, the occupants can sleep in peace and safety, and one man could repel a large number of blacks. One operator, two repairers, and a cook form the staff of each Station. Happily, the relations with the blacks in the neighbourhood are now such as to render these precautions no longer necessary.

In the morning we visited the blacks' camp, and saw one very tall man, six feet three in height. These blacks go down to the east coast, which is said to be not more than thirty miles distant, though no one has been across.

After breakfast, we set out to visit the telegraph master from the Mein, who had arranged to come half-way to meet us. The country is fairly level and open, but the ground is very bad, being full of "melon holes," into which the horses are constantly in danger of putting a foot, and in the wet season it is almost impassable. We camped for dinner at a fine lagoon, which, as yet lacking a name, was named Bishop's Lagoon, in my honour. It was covered with beautiful white and blue lilies. About 6 p.m. we reached the end of the section, and met Mr. Robinson, of the Mein, who had just arrived. He was suffering greatly from fever and ague, the Mein being a very unhealthy spot. After supper one of the men rigged up a tent fly with an end of coloured blankets, in front of which were stuck in the ground two tall sticks split at the end to hold a candle, making quite a little chapel, where we had Service for the first time on this telegraph line, which does not appear to have been ever visited by a clergyman.

Next morning we set off on our return journey and camped for dinner again at Bishop's Lagoon. Here Dr. Roth showed me an interesting thing he had learnt from the blacks. Choosing a tea-tree with a narrow longitudinal bulge on one side, about six feet above the ground, he struck it with a tomahawk and a plentiful stream of water gushed out, fully half a gallon in amount. We caught some of it in a pannikin, and found it perfectly good and drinkable though it had a somewhat saline taste. Many a man is in urgent need of water when passing a dried up tea-tree swamp and few know how easily it may be obtained. We got back to Moreton about 6 p.m. on Saturday, and were not sorry to learn, after our four days' ride, that we could spend a quiet Sunday there, having been afraid that we should have had to go straight on in order to keep up to time with the arrangements that had been made.

On Sunday we had a very hearty Service and left the next morning up the line to the North. The road was better, and we reached the Ducie River, 28 miles, about 5 p.m. Here we met the telegraph master from Macdonnell, and also a large number of aborigines who had come to see the Doctor. I spoke to some of the men and found they had some of them been on the boats and seen me at Thursday Island. During the night some of the men brought in the body of one of the tribe that had been killed some weeks before. The body was wrapped in bark and seemed to be partially embalmed, being well preserved. The bark coffin was tied to a long pole and carried with the tribe. Great care had evidently been used in tying up the corpse. On the following day the rest of the party returned to the Moreton, but Dr. Roth and I, with one of the men, and guided by three blacks, set off to visit a native camp some twenty miles to the east of the line. It was a wild and lonely part of the country, and we travelled with some difficulty owing to a number of creeks, and, in some parts, thick scrub. Our guides were not prepossessing, the chief being distinguished by a bright blue forehead over red painted cheeks, and his reputation did not belie his appearance. All three were rather shady characters, but it was very interesting to ride behind and watch their alertness for every movement of the bush; each tree was scanned for a possible lizard or bee's nest, each likely tuft of grass prodded with a spear for a kangaroo rat or bandicoot, each hollow trunk searched for an opossum. They moved through the long grass with bare feet and legs and apparently little fear of snakes, though once they came on one and jumped high into the air to avoid it. We reached our destination on the eastern watershed, not many miles from the coast, and found the camp deserted, but another dead warrior reposing in a tree beside it, alone in his glory. His body was also carefully embalmed and wrapped in bark. Next day we travelled through forest country to the south-west, and camped for the night at a fine water hole. The whole of the country through which we passed was wonderfully green and well watered. I was astonished to find so much excellent country uninhabited and unstocked. I had thought that the northern part of the Peninsula was a sandy waste, but I doubt if any part of Queensland, this year at any rate, has been so blessed with rain and good grass, and it will probably one day be closely settled, as the nearness to the sea on both sides renders it practically all coast land, and it is deeply indented by fine navigable rivers such as the Batavia, Ducie, Bertiehaugh, Embly and others. Next day we travelled along a native track all day, through good forest country, back to the telegraph line near the Moreton. A very striking native camp was passed called Olbeli. It is situated right on the top of a hill in a grove of zania trees, in a carefully chosen strategic position, and different from any other camp I have seen, consisting of two or three long tunnel-like bark humpis some thirty feet or more in length. They were fully weather proof and very picturesque. About two miles further on the same native road we passed a second village—Apre-ino—built in the same way, but the tunnels were much shorter. Every hut had stones for grinding the arrowroot, as they call the zania nut, which is eaten after being soaked, to deprive it of its poison. We had not intended to be out so long, and we were very glad to see the Moreton again, with empty pack bags and hungry stomachs. Next morning, Friday, we left the Moreton with agreeable memories of the kindness with which we had been welcomed, and reached Weipa Mission Station the following Saturday evening. As we were already three days behind time we made no delay but embarked with four boys in a whaleboat, which Mr. Brown kindly provided, and leaving the landing at 10.15 p.m. had a heavy pull of 17 miles down to the mouth of the Embly. We took one of the oars in turn so as to give each of the boys a spell in turn, but the tide soon turned against us and we were very glad to reach the "Melbidie" at 4 a.m. on Sunday morning, having ridden 250 miles in ten days and ended the last day with a hard night's work, the three boys together doing about as much work as the one white man who was rowing. They were beginning to be anxious on board, as they had been waiting for us since Tuesday. We turned in for a couple of hours and managed to put about six hours' sleep into it. I was much pleased with the result of my journey, as it not only enabled me to visit and minister to the whites, but gave me an insight into the life and character of the real myall black, and an incidental opportunity of aiding the Doctor in his efforts for their welfare. We were glad to learn by wire that the Aborigines Protection Act had received the Royal assent. There have been, and still are, some grave evils in connection with the aborigines and the shelling and beche-de-mer boats, and the new Act will make it easier to deal with them. About 1 p.m. we left the anchorage and went down the river, getting on to a shoal and remaining there for several hours. About sunset we got outside the point and anchored close to the beach. We saw a large number of natives, and Dr. Roth landed to settle a dispute. It appears that a certain man had duly bought his wife and paid full value to her two brothers, who admitted that they had made a good bargain. However, a third brother turned up and demanded to be paid too, and the bridegroom objected that he had already paid quite enough. In the meantime the family removed the wife until the bridegroom should pay up, and had tried to quicken payment by spearing both the husband and the wife. A kind of court was held, and the matter finally arranged by the bridegroom consenting to pay the third brother a pint of flour.

Next day we had a strong wind in the morning but it died away in the afternoon. Anchored for the night about 10 miles from shore in four fathoms, rather rough during the night. The shoals go out very far from the land here. Next day, May 28th, we tacked in towards land, and in the afternoon sighted a fine opening, which we supposed to be the north mouth of the Mitchell. Three or four miles further we came on a second opening, and about the same distance on a fine river over half a mile wide, evidently one of the branches of the Mitchell. We thought we had now reached the southern branch, but running on off a fine sandy beach for seven miles we came, just at sunset, to a fourth large opening, off which we anchored. All the afternoon we were keeping a good look out for Mr. Gribble and the Inspector of Police who were to meet us on 28th, but could see nothing of them. In the morning the Captain and Mr. Jackson went ashore and found the inlet very shallow, and almost dry at low water. About 11.30 a.m. we sailed south for about 10 miles. No sign of the party or of any further inlet. Went about and ran up north to south of large inlet, third from north. Kept anxious lookout, but no signs of anyone. Anchored in shallow way to south of sandspit. Next morning (Friday, May 30) went ashore. No tracks of natives; only of kangaroo and other animals. Sandy soil. Went inland for about half a mile. Fair timber, mixed with patches of mangrove swamp. Returned on board and sailed north at 8.30 a.m. Anxious at no signs of party two days overdue. Up anchor and away to north mouth of Mitchell, about 10 miles. Anchored a mile and a half from shore, in 10 feet of water at low tide. Went ashore in dingey. Some difficulty in finding channel. Had to get out and pull the boat over banks to reach it. Finally found a good channel a quarter of a mile wide through the sandbanks. Four feet at low water and deep water inside. Went on shore on sandspit projecting from dense mangrove scrub which runs also down the beach. No traces of natives; country liable to inundation, flood marks in trees. No possible site for a station within view. Very calm at night.

Next morning we ran down south to the southern mouth of the Mitchell, and anchored in two and a half fathoms. In the afternoon I went ashore in the dingey, and landed on the southern point. Found only a very old fish trap and no recent tracks or marks of natives. It is evident that there are very few if any on this part of the coast; probably it does not furnish much food. No signs anywhere of the land party. The Captain says he cannot wait any longer as he has only just enough water to last us to Karumba, with a fair wind. As we may meet contrary winds it would be dangerous to wait. No possible site near the sea. We left the Mitchell on June 1st, and sailed down the coast slowly keeping a sharp look out, but no signs of our party or of natives. Many bush fires. Probably prevented by lack of water. We met with very light winds and calms, which were provoking as we were so short of water, not having been able to get any as we expected on the Embly. We kept on by night as well as day, and reached Karumba on the afternoon of June 3rd.

THE NAME "NORTH QUEENSLAND."

The Diocesan Council has sent to the Synod of the Diocese of North Queensland its protest against the continued use of the name "North Queensland" for that Diocese, seeing that the North of Queensland is contained not in that Diocese but in the Diocese of Carpentaria, and hence the use of the name for a Southern Diocese leads to confusion and trouble. We do not know what action the Diocese of North Queensland will take when its Synod meets; and it would therefore be unbecoming to discuss the question at present, but the case seems, to us at least, to be so strong that we cannot believe that the Diocese of North Queensland will not do its best to meet us in the matter. There may of course be some legal difficulties, but they should not prove to be in any way insuperable, as there are many instances on record of the name of a Diocese being changed. It might even be needful to change the name of our own Diocese if at any time in the future the Northern Territory should be formed into a separate See, although the necessity in such a case would be far less than in the present instance.

THE BISHOP-ELECT OF NORTH QUEENSLAND.

We welcome most heartily the unanimous election of Rev. G. H. Frodsham as Bishop of North Queensland. It is not needful to repeat the well-known story of Mr. Frodsham's services alike to the Church and the State in Queensland. He is emphatically a strong man, and his new sphere of work will give full play to his powers. We in this Diocese know how much Mr. Frodsham has done for us as Commissary to the Bishop, and it is an earnest of his continued interest when he has charge of the adjoining Diocese. He has been the moving spirit in the Provincial Scheme, and the fact that he will now regard it from the point of view of one of the smaller Dioceses will aid in a satisfactory solution of the problems involved. It is an interesting fact that Mr. Frodsham's thoughts were first turned to work in Queensland by a visit from our Bishop, then Archdeacon of North Queensland, in 1893. He was unable to come at the time, but as soon as he was free to do so he came out to the colony. Had he been able to follow out his original intention he would have been one of the North Queensland clergy from the first.

PEACE.

We cannot thank God too much for peace at last; peace with honour. We have only to recall for a moment the sufferings and dangers of the past two years and a half, the strong young lives cut off in a moment, the awful agonies of the wounded, the fearful havoc of disease, the bitterness, hatred and controversy aroused, the waste of money—that is of the product of human labour, the consequent increase in the cost of living, the uncertainty of business, the false excitement, the distraction from and neglect of important business, and the haunting fear lest the smouldering fire in South Africa should burst out into the conflagration of a general European war. Thank God this is now all past, and, not forgetting all the evil and the wrong, we can note amid it all much for which we can thank God with a very full heart.

1. Our eyes have been opened to much of folly and wrong. We went into war with a light heart confident in our own strength, utterly despising the enemy. We had a bitter undecieving, we were found to be unprepared, ignorant of what to do, able only to resist doggedly disaster after disaster. Our self-confidence is gone; we shall not rush into war now without a thought. We are soberer, wiser, humbler. We have had to acknowledge in a despised foe courage, patriotism, determination, resource, equal to if not greater than our own.

2. We have to thank God for the spirit in which disaster was met. It brought out a quiet courage very different from the earlier pride, a patient determination to go on and redeem failure at any cost, which has been a factor of inestimable value in the national character.

3. We cannot thank God too much for the humanity and self-restraint alike of the Government at home and the soldier in the field. Never has a war been conducted before in which one side fed the wives and children of the enemy and so enabled their husbands to keep the field. Never have all rights been so scrupulously protected and such kindness shown. This may not be war, but it is something far better and higher and will bear fruit for good in the future.

4. We have had a practical demonstration that money is not everything. Men have gone forth to danger and often death for no pecuniary reward. The whole war has been a war not for money or conquest, but for an ideal of unity and federation. Were we to be one people or not in South Africa. That has been the real question.

5. We have indeed to thank God for the marvellous drawing together of our race which this war has effected. A few years ago it would have seemed incredible, impossible, and now it is done. With the Christian ideal of universal brotherhood before us we cannot but rejoice with heart and soul at all that tends to bring us nearer to one another, at every step towards the federation of the world.

6. One result of the war has been to leave England far stronger in a military sense than before. The talk about loss of prestige is absurd. Those who have the making of war and peace abroad, know that England has now for the first time a real army, not only of approved courage, but intelligent and efficient, the only veteran army in the world. For at least fifteen years the English army will count, as it never did before, in European politics, and as we desire no war this makes strongly for peace.

Lastly, we believe that the net result of the anxieties and sufferings of the war has been to make men realise more deeply the need of God to help and direct their lives. This effect was very noticeable at the time of the Crimea war, and there are signs that the same is the case now. The King's Coronation comes aptly upon the declaration of peace. May our Nation grow stronger in the only way in which it can really do so, by truer reliance on God and a more strenuous effort to do His will.

THE BISHOP OF GOULBURN.

The enthronement of Right Rev. C. G. Barlow, D.D., late Bishop of North Queensland, as Bishop of Goulburn, on March 23rd last, is an event which cannot be without deep interest to this part of his old Diocese, formerly included in North Queensland, and for nine years under his charge. Some of us remember the storm which arose when the Synod of North Queensland, twelve years ago, ventured to elect as Bishop one of its own clergy,—one who had been ordained and had worked only in Australia. It was thought to be a dangerous experiment, and the confirmation of the election was long delayed. Time brings its revenges, and those members of the Synod who believed that they knew their own business on that occasion may now note with a smile that a Diocese of most conservative New South Wales has by its unanimous vote justified the foresight of North Queensland.

The new Bishop of Goulburn possesses, as we in the North always knew that he possessed, many most remarkable gifts, a magnetic personality, a marvellous insight into character, a deep knowledge of men, a sensitive spirituality, a grave dignity of manner, and a genuine eloquence that holds and wins. These gifts should gain for the Bishop in the South the same personal affection, wide influence, and willing attention that they did in the North, and the whole Church will be the stronger for having in its greater centres of population and influence a leader whose wise counsels and practical experience cannot fail to manifest themselves for far-reaching good. We wish our old Bishop every happiness, as we feel confident he will meet with the fullest measure of success in his new work.

The Bishop left Thursday Island with Dr. Roth on May 3rd. From the Embly River he went inland to visit the Telegraph Stations on the overland line, and then south to the Mitchell River looking for a site for an Aboriginal Mission. He hopes to secure a suitable site not far from here, but the exact locality is not yet decided. We give the Bishop's Diary in another column. The Bishop arrived at Normanton on June 4th, and preached at the Church on the following Sunday, making special reference to the conclusion of peace. The Bishop will visit Croydon, and if possible Burketown, before returning to Thursday Island. The new Rector of Normanton, Rev. W. Hudson, is expected early next month.

News of the Parishes.

THURSDAY ISLAND.

The Annual Meeting of parishioners was held on Monday evening, 7th April, in the Bishops College (kindly lent by the Bishop for the occasion.)

We were glad to see a goodly number of our parishioners present. As titular Rector, the Bishop read a brief report, referring to the relations between the Diocese and the Cathedral parish; the establishment of Bishops College, and the holding of the first Church Conference—all of which have acted and re-acted upon the Diocese and parish alike.

The Vicar then gave a resumé of the past year's work, dealing with the various interests of the parish, and laying bare the actual results accomplished, the present state of affairs, and the future requirements of the parish. Acknowledgment was made of the help rendered by the Churchwardens, Choir, Sunday School Teachers, members of the Treasury Society, and all others who had worked so loyally for the Church's interests.

The Churchwardens' Report dealt with the financial aspect of the Church's work, and revealed a very hopeful state of affairs.

Messrs. Bennett and Murray were re-elected as Vicar's and People's Wardens respectively. Votes of thanks were passed to all the honorary officers. The Vicar then entertained the parishioners at a social evening.

The expansion of our work renders a Parish Hall absolutely necessary. The Church, at present, possesses no building whatever suitable for parochial meetings, classes, social work, etc., and, as a result, our operations are greatly retarded.

An effort is now being made to erect a Parish Institute, which is to serve many purposes—all combining, however, to promote the Church's interests in this centre. The estimated cost including fencing, is some £350, and our people seem determined to raise the amount required. A direct appeal has been issued, and so far a fairly liberal response has been made. We have every confidence in asking for help from Church people, both here and elsewhere, because the Institute is an absolute necessity, and is calculated to do a great amount of good, in parish and Diocese alike.

The return of Miss F. G. Buchanan is heartily welcomed by all our people. The devoted and disinterested work of this lady has long ago won the appreciation of every parishioner, and we are all heartily glad to have her working in our midst again. May she have strength long to continue her labour of love for the Church in this centre!

During the last month or two we have had many welcome visitors, all of whom have visited the Cathedral.

Mr. Justice Dashwood, during his stay in connection with the enquiry into the condition of the pearling industry, inspected the Melanesian Boys' Home, and expressed himself as delighted with the work done therein. His Honour was particularly impressed with the intelligence of the boys and the manner in which they sang and their good behaviour. Mrs. and Miss Burns also paid a visit to the Home on a recent Sunday afternoon, and spoke a few encouraging words of encouragement to the classes, which were greatly appreciated by all. Visitors new fail to notice the marked difference between the Christian boys and those who have not been under Christian training.

A movement is on foot to establish a permanent memorial, in Thursday Island, of the late Rev. James Chalmers, who was massacred in New Guinea some twelve months ago. It is desired to erect a baptismal font in the Quetta Memorial Cathedral, permission for which has already been sought and obtained from the Cathedral authorities. The late Missionary had many friends in this centre, and it is felt that there will be no difficulty in raising a sum of £36 to obtain a beautiful marble font for the Cathedral, and thereby perpetuating the memory of one who spent his life in obedience to our Lord's command—"Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."

CROYDON.

The most important matter to note in connection with the parish is the erection and opening of the Church at Golden Gate on May 4th. It was not noticed until the Sunday's services were over that it was exactly twelve months, reckoning by the Sunday, since the first Church of England service was held at Golden Gate, when an offertory was taken up, making the first contribution to the proposed Church.

We have very much for which to be thankful to Almighty God. A neat little building, for which almost the whole amount of the cost has been collected, stands on a most central site. On the Sunday of the opening, Holy Communion was administered in the morning, and there were services in the afternoon and evening, the service in the afternoon being attended by the children. The little Church was crowded out, and the greeting from the Bishop and the sermons preached were attentively listened to. During the month of May the congregations have been all that could be desired, and we are thankful to see the service in the evening with so fair a proportion of men, who in other ways also show their interest in the "Church of their fathers," though in some cases the liturgy had been unheard for years. The Sunday School is now well organised, but there is need of a few teachers. The instruction given two mornings in the week has been well attended.

It is certainly a great comfort to feel that now Golden Gate Anglicans have their own building, in which they are taking so great an interest, so far as we can now see it will not be another year before the Church will have been enlarged. It is here indeed that a Church is needed, a place where there is much to drag down but little to uplift; we can say "only the Lord our God be with us as He was with our fathers."

During the Bishop's next visit, which will have taken place by the time this issue is published, we are hoping that the Church will be cleared of debt; it will then be consecrated, when His Lordship will be asked to name the saint to whom it is to be dedicated. The cloth for the holy table, and frontlets for the reading desk and lectern, have been provided by the special efforts of one of the congregation in collecting subscriptions. The amount necessary for the building has been steadily accumulating during the twelve months; with the exception of a £25 grant from the Diocese and £12 raised by a concert, all has been collected.

ST. MARGARET'S, CROYDON.—Last Easter Sunday saw the completion of the present Rector's first year's pastorate. The services throughout the day were well attended. In the evening the Church was literally crowded out, it being estimated the largest attendance since the opening of St. Margaret's over five years ago. The taste with which the Church was decorated was due to Mr. Hall, who also was in charge of the musical portion of the services; they were true Easter services, and must have proved uplifting to many.

The Easter Meeting was this year held on a week-night. The number of Parochial Councillors was reduced to six. Messrs. H. Bechtel and A. D. Harries were elected Wardens, the former by the Rector; Messrs. Frost, Foster, Maslen, Robinson, Greig and Armbrust are the members of the Council. Owing to the efforts of the lady collectors, a long-standing overdraft of £60 has disappeared from the Current Account, but owing to the purchase of a suitable Rectory, the Building Fund debt has been increased by over £100. A fence has been erected in front of the Church, and now the Church possesses a belfry. It is only through the generous gifts and labours of some of the Church Council that these improvements have been effected. The next absolute necessity is the painting of the building; unless the necessary money can be raised for this purpose before next wet season, the consequences to the Church must be serious.

Several changes have taken place in our Sunday School. Miss Ida Harries is our Sunday School Organist. In the ranks of the teachers we are pleased to welcome back again Miss McGregor. Messrs. Henry Chandler and James Morrison, Misses Lizzie Boynes and Nellie Usher also have each taken a class. In the departure of Miss Vera Frost for Melbourne we lose a teacher. At Golden Gate Misses Luscombe, Hackett and Jensen assist Mr. Hall in the work of the Sunday School.

At the request of Mr. J. H. Waldie, who has kindly acted as organist of St. Margaret's for the past seven months, he has been relieved of this post, Miss Robinson now acting. This is the second time in the history of St. Margaret's that Mr. Waldie has come forward to fill a difficult post when his help was much needed. It has also been appreciated. At Golden Gate Miss De Vis is the organist.

It is sad to see how disgracefully the morning service is neglected in this parish; all one's utmost efforts to convince our people of the loss to their spiritual life in absenting themselves from morning worship seem utterly fruitless.

NORMANTON.

It is pleasing to be able to report a lively interest in Church affairs with us, which, to say the least, is very encouraging. The prospect of the early arrival of a resident Clergyman in full Orders is having a stimulating effect, and there is a general desire to afford the Rev. W. Hudson and his lady a hearty greeting and a sympathetic co-operation in their labours amongst us. Looking back over the number of years we have been without a Parish Priest, it speaks well for the loyalty of those who have maintained the services of the Church and Sunday School, and encourages great hopes for the future progress of the Church.

After six months earnest and zealous work as Lay Reader, Mr. L. F. Woolrych returned to Thursday Island at the end of March to resume his theological studies at Bishops College. He has been succeeded by Mr. W. M. Wilkinson, from Port Douglas, who remains with us until the arrival of Rev. W. Hudson, B.A., who is expected early in July. The State Government having proclaimed April 17th a Day for Public Humiliation and Prayer on account of the disastrous drought, a well attended Service was held at 11 a.m. Appropriate Prayers, Psalms, Lessons, and Hymns were rendered, the Service throughout being hearty. Rev. Godfrey H. Smith, from Croydon, was with us from April 17th to 21st, and met with a cordial greeting from all. At 8 p.m. on the 18th, the annual Vestry Meeting was held, Rev. G. H. Smith presiding. The Church wardens' financial statement and report for the past year was received and adopted. The report showed a slight improvement on the previous year; and the interest manifested by those present at the meeting was most encouraging, the general verdict being it was the best annual Vestry Meeting held for many years. E. E. Hall, Esq., was appointed by the Rev. Chairman as Rector's Warden, and R. Curtis, Esq., was elected People's Warden, Messrs. R. Sherwin, B. Brown, R. Robinson, R. Harmon, R. Millar, and —. Presley, were elected Parochial Council for the ensuing year. During the Meeting a subscription list was opened to provide funds to repair and paint the Church, which met with a ready response. It is to be hoped the matter will not be dropped, as the building needs repairs and painting very badly. Rev. G. H. Smith conducted the Services, Sunday, 20th, 11 a.m., Sermon and Holy Communion, 3 p.m.; he addressed the Sunday School, after which had Baptismal Service, and preached before a full congregation in the evening, thus closing a day of hearty Services.

Our sympathies were with our organist, Mrs. Curtis, in her sad bereavement. Miss Tuffly kindly took her place for a few Sundays, and we were all glad to see Mrs. Curtis presiding at the organ at the Service of Humiliation and Prayer, and since. Much credit is due to the efforts of these Ladies and the Choir generally, for their interest and regularity in maintaining the singing portion of the Services.

We are expecting a visit from our Bishop shortly. He is now on the Peninsula selecting a suitable locality for a Mission Station for the Aborigines.

GEORGETOWN AND THE ETHERIDGE DISTRICT.

At the beginning of April Rev. Godfrey Smith started on his quarterly pastoral visit to Georgetown. The response given by the people in every place was most cheering. Services were held at Gilbert River, Cumberland, Georgetown, Charleston, Castleton and Donnybrook, and were well attended. At Georgetown the Sunday School, under Miss Gibson's superintendence, is in excellent order, and really good work is being accomplished. Other little Sunday Schools have been established in the Etheridge District. A clergyman is sorely needed for this vast district of 9000 square miles, with a scattered population of 1700. The people everywhere show a readiness to listen to the Gospel, but a quarterly flying visit from Croydon is certainly inadequate to supply the spiritual wants of this place. The Bishop is most anxious to appoint a Priest here, but the chief difficulty is a financial one, but all things are possible to the Head of the Church, and so we must pray, trust and hope.

COOKTOWN.

The season of Easter falling so near the date of the last issue of this paper, it was impossible to send any Easter news.

On Good Friday both morning and evening services were well attended, considering the stormy nature of the weather. On Easter Eve many willing helpers gave their valuable assistance to the decorating of the Church, the beautiful appearance of the sacred building on Easter Sunday well repaying them for their labours. At the Celebrations of the Holy Communion a larger number of communicants attended than last year. There were also good congregations at Mattins and Evensong. On Sunday evening, the 13th April, after Evensong, the Annual Meeting of Parishioners was held, when a satisfactory balance sheet was presented, the retiring Wardens in their report expressing satisfaction on the year's work. Messrs. Thomas, Moran (Wardens), Palmer, Evans and Boddington (Secretary) were appointed the committee for the ensuing year.

An entertainment was given on the 2nd June by several ladies and gentlemen in aid of the Church funds. Through their untiring energy the Church has benefited to the extent of nearly £27. It is intended to repeat the entertainment on Coronation Day, when the proceeds will be entirely devoted to the purchasing of an organ, which the Church is sadly in need of.

One very pleasing feature in the work here is the steady increase in the number of Sunday School scholars. There are now about 145 children on the roll, and this number will in all probability be increased during this month. This increase must be put down to the splendid staff of teachers.

The Rev. E. Gribble passed through Cooktown en route to the Mitchell River, where he is to meet the Bishop for the purpose of selecting a site for the proposed Aboriginal Mission Station. On his return Mr. Gribble intends giving an illustrated lecture on his work amongst the Aborigines at "Yarrabah," Cairns. We hope a good audience will attend.

The Bishop's Movements.

Immediately on the conclusion of the first Church Conference of the Diocese, on March 4th, the Bishop left Thursday Island with Revs. H. W. Curtis and T. K. Pitt, M.A., in the "Eurimbla." Passing through the Albany Pass he met with a curious accident. He was seated on the spar deck admiring the scenery when he was suddenly struck violently on the knee by a billet of wood. A fishing schooner had wished to send a letter by the steamer, and its boat with much daring had lain just in the track, and as it passed at full speed a man threw the letter on board tied to the wood. The steamer was doing ten knots, so that the Bishop was fortunate to escape with only a painful surface wound. We arrived at Cooktown early on Thursday morning, and had to wait till the following day for the boat to Port Douglas. The Rectory and grounds are beginning to assume a very different appearance under the care of Rev. H. W. Curtis. The weather was squally and unpleasant, and culminated, on Saturday morning, in a deluge of rain, in the midst of which the Bishop and Rev. T. K. Pitt landed in a boat at Port Douglas from the "Innaminka," at 4 a.m. They were, of course, wet to the skin. Saturday was spent in looking up the people and getting the Church ready. On Sunday morning there was a Celebration of Holy Communion at 7.30 a.m., and at 10 a.m. a Confirmation. There were five male and seven female candidates. We were pleased to notice two young men of 19 and 20 among the candidates not ashamed to confess Christ before men. The behaviour and reverence of the candidates speaks well for the careful preparation they had received at the hands of Mr. W. M. Wilkinson. Messrs. Barnard and Skillman had come to meet us the previous day with horses, and immediately after lunch the Bishop and Mr. Pitt started to ride to the Mosman. We were able to start with a gallop along the beautiful beach, but after that the rain set in again and we had a somewhat heavy ride. On arrival at the Mosman the Bishop addressed a few words to the class of over 50 South Sea Islanders which was being conducted by Mr. J. White, and arranged a service for Monday night. In the evening, in spite of the weather, the Church was full on the occasion of the Induction of Rev. T. K. Pitt, M.A., as Rector of Port Douglas and Mosman. Next day was chiefly employed in writing, as it was too wet for much visiting. In the evening the Bishop addressed the South Sea Islanders in the Church, returning next day by train to Port Douglas. Early on Wednesday morning the Bishop left by the s.s. "Nelson" for Cairns to see Rev. E. Gribble about the proposed Diocesan Mission to the Aborigines. The "Nelson" is only a small tender, and the journey against the strong S.E. monsoon was anything but pleasant. However, Cairns was reached at last, about 5 p.m., just in time to see the Bishop of North Queensland for half an hour before he left by the "Cintra." He had come up to hold a Confirmation at Yarrabah, but owing to the bad weather and other causes had not been able to carry out his intention. At his request and that of Rev. E. Gribble the Bishop consented, if possible, to fill his place. There was not much time to spare, as the "Aramac" was expected to leave for the North at 5 p.m. the following day. The Bishop and Rev. E. Gribble left Cairns at 6 a.m. the following morning in an oil launch, and in spite of the heavy weather reached Yarrabah by 8 a.m. The Bishop was received by the Rifle Corps entirely officered by Aborigines, who paraded in uniform and presented arms with most creditable steadiness and discipline. It was impossible not to contrast this landing in a fine whale boat, with uniformed and well trained aboriginal crew, with the first landing with Rev. J. B. Gribble, senior, ten years before on a pitch dark night in a leaky dingey rowed by weary South Sea Islanders, when not an Aboriginal was to be seen or heard of within ten miles of the Station.

After breakfast, the buildings were visited, and much wonderful progress noted. At 11 a.m. the Confirmation was held in the Church, and twenty-two candidates presented, some of whom had been three years under instruction. It was a most impressive sight; the reverence, devotion, and rapt attention of both candidates and congregation could not have been exceeded, not a careless attitude or wandering look was to be seen anywhere; while we have rarely heard anywhere anything which so vividly awoke the consciousness of the living power of praise, as the 200 voices which burst forth in the Te Deum, which concluded the service, into a self-forgetting and uplifting cry of adoration. An inspection of the estate followed. Sixty acres of close cultivation show how much hard field work is done daily and all day. It is a practical refutation of the statement that the aborigines cannot stick to hard manual work. They have done it here for years, uncompelled; in addition, most of the men have gardens of their own. Then we had drills, evolutions, exhibitions of club-swinging, gymnastic feats, together with a show by the fire brigade of smartness and intelligence, which white men would not easily beat. Few whites could have carried the buckets so fast and so surely. Everywhere happy, smiling faces, alert and intelligent, all, young and old, with their own work and duty. At 3 p.m., the tide having fallen, the Bishop was escorted by the rifle corps round to the Point, about a mile and a half distant. The whole population, men, women, and children of all ages, accompanied the procession, laughing and chattering. Before leaving, the Bishop said a few words to the men. He had been very glad to come. He had seen to-day that the aborigines could be as well disciplined, as obedient, as trustworthy, as reasonable, as persevering, as any other men. He had seen a community living in peace and happiness, each man working, not for his own but for the common good. They had not only made their own life happy, but were preparing happiness for their children, who were growing up under such favourable conditions. He wished them all happiness and success. As the boat pushed off, the rocks were lined with a brightly clothed crowd, who cheered and waved as long as the boat was in sight. As the launch rounded False Cape, about 4 p.m., we were horrified to see the "Aramac" coming out. We altered our course, and tried to intercept her, but although we got within less than a mile of her, we did not succeed in attracting her attention, and had to return disconsolately to Cairns. As this meant a very serious delay, the Bishop telegraphed to the A.U.S.N. Co. in Brisbane, asking whether the "Maranoa" might be allowed to call for him off Cairns. The Company most courteously instructed the vessel to do so, adding that as she carried mails, she could not delay if not met to time. The boat was due off Cairns at 7 p.m. on Saturday night, and the Bishop chartered the same oil launch, determining to start at 4.30 p.m., in order to run no risks. All was ready to start at 4.30, except the launch, which could by no means be induced to stir. The crew worked heroically, taking the machinery to pieces times without number, but all in vain. The time crept on inexorably—five, half-past five, six, but not a sign of motion. It was eight or nine miles to the rendezvous, and the launch could only do six and a half miles an hour. The case seemed hopeless. A quarter past six, and still no sign, when suddenly the machinery started off in perfect order, as if it had never sulked at all. A few seconds sufficed to cast off, and we headed out to sea at full speed. As we neared the bar, we found that it was blowing hard, and we had to hold on for all we were worth. Fortunately, we had not to wait; as we crossed the bar we saw the steamer's masthead light coming rapidly up, and a couple of miles put us in her track, when our lights were blown out. Happily, the captain of the "Maranoa" had already seen us, and promptly stopped his vessel; but we had an unpleasant five minutes—it seemed five times five—getting the lamps re-lighted, and watching the unpleasant speed with which the steamer still seemed to approach as we lay invisible in the darkness, trying alternately to balance on stern, bow, and beam-ends. However, the captain considerably put his vessel up broadside to the sea, and we managed to get alongside without difficulty. Thursday Island was reached on morning of March 18th, after a busy fortnight.

THE BISHOP OF NORTH QUEENSLAND.

The new Bishop of North Queensland is too well known to need many words. To this diocese he has rendered especial services as Commissary for the Bishop in Brisbane. We have spoken elsewhere of his Installation. Of course his own diocese will in future demand all his care, but he is a man of wide sympathies and generous breadth, and we shall still find in him one who will help us all he can. The Church in Queensland needs to be united to be strong, and we hope that the new Bishop's well known anxiety for Provincial unity may be able to carry his diocese with him. [We are glad to be able to present our readers with a portrait of the New Bishop.]

The Bishop's Movements.

On Sunday, June 15, the Bishop visited Golden Gate and held Service in the new Church, which is already exercising an influence for good. In the afternoon he addressed the children. Later in the week he travelled to Georgetown where on Sunday afternoon he confirmed eight candidates, prepared by Rev. G. Smith. The morning and evening Services were very well attended. The following day the Bishop proceeded to Cumberland, where he held Service at night, nearly all the population being present. The following day he left for Croydon, where he arrived on June 25th and the following day, at the request of the Mayor, he gave an address to the children of the town who had been gathered in anticipation of the King's Coronation. On Sunday, June 29th, a Special Service of Intercession for the King was held and the Church was filled. The Bishop preached on the text "Honour the King," and spoke at length of the duties and responsibilities of the kingly office. In the afternoon, a number of candidates for Confirmation, including six or seven adults, were presented by Rev. G. Smith, and a very impressive Confirmation Service was held, the Church being filled with friends and relatives. Next day the Bishop left for Normanton, where he met the Parochial Council and held Service on the evening of July 3rd. On Saturday he left by the s.s. "Maranoa" for Thursday Island, where he remained until the 30th, marrying Rev. H. P. Gocher on July 19th, and holding a meeting of the Diocesan Council on July 14th; examining the students and transacting other Diocesan business. On July 30th he left Thursday Island in s.s. "Rockton," and arrived at Cooktown on the morning of August 1st. A few hours later he left by train for the Laura, where he held service at night, leaving next morning by coach for Maytown. The first night was spent at Shepherds Creek, and Sunday begun by breakfast at 3.30 a.m., and a start some hours before daylight. The road lay over lofty and rugged ranges, and Maytown was not reached until three in the afternoon after nearly twelve hours travelling. Here the Bishop was warmly welcomed by the Warden, Mr. Lee-Bryce, Mr. J. Moran and others, and nearly the whole population assembled for Evensong in the Divisional Hall. The Service and singing was most hearty. It is twelve years since Maytown was visited by a priest of our Church, and fifteen since it had seen a Bishop. Next day, after an early celebration of the Holy Communion, the Bishop was provided with that one too common phenomenon of the bush, a really good horse, and spent the morning in visiting the outlying camps, where a number of candidates for Confirmation were discovered, and several children baptised. Maytown was left next morning and Shepherds Creek reached in the evening. Breakfast 3.30 a.m. and coach on to the Laura, from which train to Cooktown, arriving at 5.30 p.m. On Sunday, August 10th, the Bishop preached at the Special Coronation Service in the morning, which was attended by the Masons and Friendly Societies of the town. In the afternoon he addressed the children, and in the evening preached to a large congregation on the National Life of Australia. On Wednesday he met the Parochial Council, and on Thursday gave a Devotional Address at the Church, leaving on the following day for Port Douglas, where he preached morning and evening on Sunday, August 17th. On Wednesday a Devotional Address was given in the Church, and on the following morning the Bishop, accompanied by Rev. T. K. Pitt, went out to the Mosman, and spent several days in riding round the country visiting the settlers. On Friday evening the Bishop gave a Devotional address, and on Saturday evening he addressed some 60 South Sea Islanders. On Sunday the Bishop preached at St. David's in the morning, and in the afternoon confirmed 14 South Sea Islanders, and in the evening six whites (five males and one female); one of the men rode 30 miles to be confirmed, and was intending to ride back after the Service to be at his work in the morning.

He had ridden in the same distance the previous Sunday, having thought the Confirmation was on that day. On Tuesday the Bishop officiated at the funeral of Mrs. Richards, who had the previous day closed a life of faith with a peaceful death. Out of respect to her, the social gathering which was to have been held in the evening to bid the Bishop good-bye was cancelled at his desire, and he returned to Port Douglas, where he was laid up for a couple of days with a severe cold and chill. On Saturday he left for Townsville by the s.s. "Arrawatta," and preached at the Cathedral on Sunday evening, welcoming the new Bishop on his arrival the following morning. On Wednesday he preached the sermon at the Installation of the new Bishop of North Queensland, returning to Thursday Island by the s.s. "Airlie" on the following day.

News of the Parishes.

THURSDAY ISLAND.

All arrangements had been made for a Coronation Service on the 26th June, but the news of the King's illness greatly changed the aspect of things. However, a good congregation was present at the Intercession Service, and very earnest supplication was made for His Majesty's recovery. The Vicar gave a brief address, pointing out the lessons to be learnt from such a national visitation.

The actual Coronation was subsequently marked in the parish by special Services on Sunday, 10th August. The congregations were large and representative; and it was quite evident that our people deeply realised the significance of the event. The singing of the National Anthem was hearty and enthusiastic.

The Annual Sunday School Picnic was held on the Cricket Ground on Thursday, the 3rd July. The event passed off most successfully. Fully 150 children gathered together during the day, and were entertained right royally by the teachers and parents. At the conclusion of the day Mrs. Bennett, wife of our worthy Superintendent, kindly distributed gifts and prizes to the little ones. Cheers were then given by the children as a mark of their appreciation of the day's outing.

The scheme for the erection of a Parish Institute has met with a considerable amount of success. Our people all seem to recognise the importance of the object, and have shown their practical sympathy by contributing directly towards it. In addition to the amount thus received, a goodly sum has been realised by means of a Concert, a Japanese Opera, and a Moonlight Carnival. At present the fund stands at about £250, and it is hoped that this will soon be augmented by further contributions from interested friends and parishioners. The Vicar and Churchwardens have decided to call tenders for the Institute at once, and they are in hopes of being able to complete the structure before the wet season sets in. The necessity of the Parish Institute becomes more pronounced as our work develops. The possession of such a Hall would do a great deal towards strengthening the influence of the Church in Thursday Island. We trust that all will do their utmost to help forward the building of the Institute. Subscriptions may be sent to the Vicar, or the Churchwardens. Due acknowledgment will be made of all such help.

The Rev. H. P. Gocher, Rector of Port Darwin, paid us a welcome visit in July. His trip, we venture to believe, was fraught with great happiness to himself, inasmuch as he was married to Miss S. Grey—recently arrived from London—by the Bishop, in the Cathedral, on the 19th of that month. Mr. and Mrs. Gocher sailed for Port Darwin a day or two afterwards, carrying with them the good wishes of many friends and acquaintances.

A Ladies' Working Party has been formed in connection with the Sale of Work which is to be held at the beginning of the New Year, in aid of the Parish Institute and the Church fence. It meets every alternate Thursday afternoon at Bishop's College, and profitably employs itself in making useful articles for the purpose named. We shall gladly welcome all those who are disposed to help in this worthy work.

The appearance of the Church grounds cannot be said to reflect credit on our Church people. The need of a fence is apparent to all, and visitors invariably comment on this fact. If the grounds were properly enclosed we could set about improving their appearance by planting shrubs and trees. It surely behoves us all to bestow some care on the outward adornment of our now historic Church. The Sale of Work, mentioned above, will, we trust, realise a goodly sum, most of which will, no doubt, be devoted to the fence; but further organised effort will be necessary in order to complete the work. A few generous gifts would speedily solve the difficulty.

We congratulate the Choir of the Cathedral on its steadfast loyalty to duty. The music shows a marked improvement of late, and it behoves us all to maintain this better standard of efficiency. Unfortunately, we are losing the services of two valued members: Mrs. Murray (the wife of our popular Warden), and Mr. Chas. Riley, who has also been a helper in the Sunday School. Mrs. Murray goes South for change of climate, but we trust she may soon return quite restored in health. Will not some others come and supply the vacancies thus caused in the Choir?

It is the Vicar's intention to present a number of candidates for Confirmation to the Bishop towards the end of the year. Any who have not yet received the Apostolic rite of "the laying on of hands," but are desirous of doing so, should hand in their names at once. No age is "too old" for Confirmation, and no one need be ashamed to offer himself on that score. Girls of 13 and over, and boys of 13 and 14, on the other hand, are quite eligible for this sacred rite. We hope to have a goodly number of candidates for the classes about to be formed.

The "Chalmers Memorial," which is to be placed in the Cathedral, will take the form of a beautiful marble font. The cost will be something over £30, and towards this a sum of £27 has been promised. It is expected that the font will be placed in position and dedicated within a few weeks.

COOKTOWN.

The sad news received just before the issue of the last number of the Carpentarian of the serious illness of the King put an end to the efforts we were making (for the time being) to celebrate the crowning of His Majesty. Instead of the proposed Coronation Service, Holy Communion was celebrated, at which supplications were made to Almighty God for the King's recovery. The progress of the King's illness was eagerly watched by all people. It was a relief when news reached us that the King was progressing favourably, especially so when the date—August 9th—was fixed for the Coronation. With renewed efforts we commenced work again. Fortunately for us the Bishop, who was on his way to Port Douglas, was enabled to be present at the Coronation Service. On Coronation Day Holy Communion was celebrated at 7.30 a.m. The next day, Sunday, the Church was filled with worshippers, among whom were the Mayor, Masons, Oddfellows and Foresters, who attended in regalia. The special Service was enjoyed by all, the Choir being at their best in the musical portion of the Service, especially in the anthem,

"Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers." After the sermon, which was preached by the Bishop, Jackson's Te Deum was sung. The Service concluded with the Holy Communion, at which a large number of communicants participated. The Bishop in the afternoon addressed the Sunday School children on the subject of the Coronation. At Evensong His Lordship again preached to a large congregation. During the week the Bishop, with the Rector visited several Church workers, and on the Wednesday evening addressed the workers at a special Service held for them. On Friday His Lordship proceeded to Port Douglas.

Outside the Bishop's visit and the Coronation Service there is not much to report. It seems to be the usual thing with us to have to chronicle departures from our midst. This time we have to report our regret at the departure of Mr. Cecil Adams, who has been transferred to Herberton State School. For several years past he has been of much assistance to the parish generally, especially in the Sunday School and Choir, where he will be, and is, greatly missed. It is hoped that before long a testimonial will be sent him as a token of our appreciation and esteem. Our best wishes go with him in his new sphere of work. Through Mr. Adams' departure we have now a vacancy to fill up in the Sunday School; it is hoped, therefore, that someone will offer to fill the vacancy.

We have been able at last, through the very valuable assistance of several ladies and gentlemen, to place a new Estey Organ in the Church. We now hope very soon to hold at regular periods organ recitals in the Church, at which sacred songs will also be sung.

Unfortunately, through the havoc of the white ants, we have been obliged to replace the piles under the Sanctuary, and also to put new flooring in. We very much thank Messrs. Thomas and Palmer for their assistance in this matter. It is intended shortly, when sufficient funds are available, to form a Painting Bee for the purpose of painting the inside of the Church.

The Rector (having been connected with the Diocese of North Queensland for several years) acted as chaplain to the Bishop of Carpentaria at the enthronement of the new Bishop of North Queensland in Townsville. During the short visit, which was very enjoyable, he met several of his old Townsville friends. He has to thank Mr. Palmer for his kindness in conducting the Services on the Sunday during his absence.

During the Bishop's visit to this parish he visited and held Services at the Laura and Maytown, where large congregations attended. At the latter place several young people have given in their names as candidates for Confirmation. Mr. J. Moran (C.P.S.) has kindly consented to do all in his power for the confirmees until such time as the Rector of Cooktown can visit the place. He has also taken in hand the Sunday School, where already a large number of scholars attend. It is hoped that, ere long, regular Services will be held at the Laura and Maytown.

CROYDON.

St. Margaret's.—A Confirmation was held at St. Margaret's on Sunday afternoon, June 29th. Twenty-five candidates were present. The Church was crowded. The whole Service was most impressive. After the hymn, "Come, Holy Ghost, Creator blest," the Bishop addressed the candidates on the words, "He that saveth his life shall lose it." When the rite had been administered, those confirmed were again addressed, and the hymn, "Oh, Jesus, I have omised," was sung fervently by the whole congregation.

The ladies of the congregation arranged for a congregational "At Home" in the Foresters' Hall during the Bishop's visit. A programme of music had been provided for the evening. The Hall was very full; it gave a good opportunity to the Bishop to meet the Church people of Croydon. His Lordship addressed the gathering. During the evening the ladies handed round the refreshments. The gathering was marked by a happy spirit of unanimity; it was the first of its kind held in connection with St. Margaret's Church, and we certainly look forward to another.

The Intercessory Service in connection with the King's illness took place on the date first arranged for the Coronation Service. The Church was well filled. The Sermon on this occasion was preached by the Bishop on the words, "Honour the King." The Coronation Service was held on August 10th. The Church was amply packed. The Mayor and Aldermen, the Masonic body, the Foresters' Lodge, the Oddfellows, and other Societies were well represented. The Service was full choral and hearty.

St. John's, Golden Gate.—The Services here on Sunday mornings and evenings have been fairly well attended. The morning instruction, held twice weekly at 9 o'clock, has had good attendances of the children; the Church, being in close proximity to the public school, affords the scholars a good opportunity of attending these Services. The Church here is now quite clear of debt. We wish the same thing could be written of the Croydon Church.

Other Outside Centres have been visited during the quarter; both at the King and Tabletop Services were held. At the latter place a weekly Bible Class has been started. On this, and all other work of the Church, we ask His blessing, who said, "Without Me ye can do nothing."

Rev. G. Smith has been laid up by an accident to his knee, and the progress to recovery is very slow. He will shortly pay a visit to Thursday Island.

PORT DARWIN.

On Saturday, July 19, the Rector was married at Thursday Island by the Bishop of the Diocese to Miss Grey, who arrived from England the previous day. The wedding was very quiet, and was followed by a Celebration of the Holy Communion. The bride was given away by Rev. W. P. Glover, and the wedding breakfast was at Bishop's College. The happy pair left for Port Darwin on July 21.

An old store at Pine Creek has been converted into a Mission Church, and the attendance at the Services has been most encouraging.

The following has been received from Mr. Arniss, the hon. sec. to the Palmerston Church, under date of August 23rd:—

"I have much pleasure in informing you that the contractor is getting on very well with the building. The walls are up, and in a few days the roof will be put on. You will also be pleased to hear that we have in the Bank the sum of £450 8s. 8d., and, after paying the contractor £435, will leave us with a balance of £15 8s. 8d. We have ordered from Sydney, through Mr. Twinam, seats for the building, which will be paid out of the amount of £50 collected by him. We think it best to get things as we go along and have the necessary funds, and not have any debt. The contractor expects to be finished by the end of October, so we hope we will be able to have the Confirmation in the new building. Mrs. Jolly has presented the Church with a bell. We would have liked to have a fence round the block of land, but unfortunately we have not enough funds for that purpose, as the first consideration is the furnishing, and after the bazaar, should there be enough money on hand to have the fence put round and a vestry built, I have a few pounds to collect, and the amount from the S.P.C.K. will greatly help. I have a subscription list in Melbourne and one in Tasmania, but up to date do not know what success I will have.

NORMANTON.

Rev. W. Hudson arrived on July 25th, and is hard at work in his new parish. The Bishop hopes to visit Normanton this month for the purpose of instituting him. He speaks of the kindness with which he has been welcomed in his new work.

GEORGETOWN.

The Rev. Godfrey Smith visited Georgetown on June 11th. The candidates for Confirmation were met daily and instructed. The Services held in the Court-house on Sunday, 15th, were not too well attended. On the following Sunday the Bishop held Services and preached to full congregations. In the afternoon he ministered the rite of Confirmation to eight candidates. The Court-house was crowded. This being the first Anglican Confirmation in Georgetown for many years, much interest was manifested. May it bring a blessing both to those who were confirmed and to the place.

PORT DOUGLAS-CUM-MOSMAN.

It is now some months since any news of this parish appeared in the Carpentarian. However, the months have not been without incident. In March the Bishop arrived and inducted the new Rector, and once more the parish was in charge of a priest.

The state of St. Andrew's Church, Port Douglas, had been causing a considerable amount of anxiety for some time. Nothing had been done to it for 20 years, and a careful examination revealed a dangerous state of decay in the building itself, while the fence had entirely disappeared. The inhabitants took up the matter with much enthusiasm, however, and a Sale of Work, held some months since by the ladies, without the aid of raffles or any games of chance, resulted in nearly £150 being obtained for the renovation of the Church. The blocks under the building have been entirely renewed, a fine bell-tower 33 feet in height has been built, and many minor repairs effected; while contracts have been let for the painting of the Church, inside and out, and the erection of a handsome fence. Everyone, irrespective of creed or station, worked hard for this encouraging result.

At Port Douglas also, the inhabitants have guaranteed one-third of the Rector's stipend, and a Vestry has been again formed to manage the local affairs of the Church. Mr. T. T. Devine is Rector's Warden; Mr. H. Crees, senr., People's Warden; Mr. Phillips, Treasurer; while Mr. J. M. Coker acts as Secretary. Mr. Devine also acts, on occasion, as Honorary Reader.

We are, however, about to sustain a great loss in the removal to Atherton of Miss Blackmore, who has been most energetic in the Sunday School. The good wishes of everyone go with her.

At Mosman congregations continue good, and a Choir has been formed, which is rapidly becoming a most valuable assistance in the efficient rendering of the Service. We suffer much, however, from the lack of female voices. Men we have in abundance.

His Lordship the Bishop, on his recent visit, in August, held the first Confirmation that has been in St. David's, when 14 Polynesians and 6 Europeans received the sacramental rite of the laying on of hands. The Rector had been much helped in the work among the Polynesians by Mr. J. White, who was almost entirely responsible for the 14 confirmees. This work still flourishes in the district, classes being held every Wednesday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons in St. David's, and attended by as many as 70 or 80 "boys." At Saltwater and at Colenso, also, fortnightly classes are held on Monday evenings, and in each place some 20 islanders attend.

A monthly European Service on Sunday morning has been started with success at Saltwater, and a quarterly one is projected at the Daintree River.

Early in August the first European wedding was held in St. David's, when our organist, Miss Williams, was married to Mr. Tom Baird.

Death has not passed us by. In April Mrs. Poney, a very old resident, died at her son's residence. Then Mr. James Pringle followed her, and lastly, a few weeks ago, Mrs. Richards, the mother of Mrs. R. O. Jones, of Mosman, passed into Paradise.

THE GULF STATIONS.

Mr. Wilkinson, who has been visiting the stations in the Gulf, writes as follows:—

I left Normanton on August 1st, with only one horse, intending to get the other at Delta, by the way. Went to Karumba via Maggieville Station, arriving at Karumba on Saturday afternoon. Stayed over Sunday, and had a Service in the boat-shed in the afternoon. At Karumba there are employed 23 men, all told, on the dredge, 8 on the "Vigilant," 3 on the lightship, and 2 to attend to harbour lights and telephone, besides 3 women (wives), and only 2 children; 41 souls all told. Could not hear of any trace of or visit of religious representative there before. Monday retraced my steps to Maggieville, which led to a camp out for the night, and got to the station 10 a.m. next day. Stayed and rested. Next day to Midlothian Station, the property of Mr. A., who resides at the station at Midlothian. Met Mr. M., of Lochingbar, near Mitchell River, and as Mr. B., of Rutland Plains, is still in town, had no thought of going further than Delta on that route. At Midlothian both Mr. A. and his manager are single men; they, with a stockman, comprise the whole employees about the place. Leaving Midlothian went to a selection owned and worked by a Mr. B. Here is a very fine garden on the bank of the Smithburne River. Mr. B. is married, with 6 or 7 children. The same day went on to Delta Station. Mr. E., the manager, had been married a few days before at St. Peter's, Normanton. Here, making enquiries for the other horse, they could not find him, but promised to make an effort before my return. The next day to Stirling, an outstation from Vanrook. Here found but the Chinese cook, and made it the resting place for the night, starting the next morning (Saturday) for Vanrook, the head station of the properties of the Bank of N.S. Wales, under the management

PRAYERS FOR RAIN.

The first thought that comes to many minds when prayers for rain are spoken of is this: Is it any use, or even right, to pray God to alter the course of nature? Has He not fixed all such matters by natural laws, with which He does not interfere, and with regard to which it is mere foolish presumption in man to think that they can be altered for his benefit?

Now, it is quite true that the weather is governed by strict, though little known, laws, and that the weather to-day or to-morrow is the necessary result of certain antecedent causes, going back many days or even weeks; but we must not forget that every law of nature is being constantly modified by other laws. The law of the weather is dependent on the action and inter-action of a hundred causes, and the exact balance of many and ever-shifting forces. A very slight influence introduced at a certain stage will have the most far-reaching results. Even men can thus affect the weather. In different parts of Europe, for instance, tens of thousands of pounds are annually expended, not indeed in the actual production of rain, but in the protection of the vineyards by means of detonating instruments, which, by the disturbance of the equilibrium of the air, convert the dangerous hail-bearing clouds into harmless showers of rain. Has God, the Maker of earth and its laws, less power than His creature man?

But there is another thought which we shall do well to bear in mind. To God, past, present, and future are one. He knows, without in any way forcing our free-will, what we shall do, whether we shall pray or not pray, pray earnestly or in mockery; and can we doubt that God can so order the complex laws which lead to the production of rain that some movement begun long perhaps before we have begun to pray will result, if He so wills it, in that for which we pray! We are constantly limiting God by our own limitations. We say, for instance, that God cannot be expected to alter the weather to suit one person or persons, forgetting that it is within the power of God's infinite wisdom to harmonise perfectly things which are to us incompatible; to make a special providence for the individual, and yet preserve the working of His general laws quite unbroken. It does not, however, follow that because God can grant our prayer for rain, that He will therefore do so. To do so might fatally contradict some higher end. Even droughts subserve some good ends. Taking the country as it naturally is, without the disturbing element of our settlement, we can see some of these purposes.

(a) Droughts answer the purpose of frosts in colder countries; they secure for the land a period of lying fallow, without which it would soon be exhausted.

(b) They destroy millions of grubs and vermin of all kinds, which would otherwise so increase as to make the land uninhabitable for the higher animals.

(c) They secure animals themselves against degeneration of type by eliminating the weakly and thus preserving the race in strength and vigour. Were food always easily obtainable, the standard would rapidly diminish.

(d) Were there no such natural check on increase, the animals would so multiply that there would be not enough food for any. As it is, some die that the rest may live, a law—mysterious as it is—which runs through all nature, including man, and which we must not condemn merely because we do not understand it. Hence we can see that droughts have a meaning; and it is quite open to question what right we have to expect that God should alter laws which are, on the whole, beneficent because we have introduced new conditions, and because in not a few cases we have overstocked country which past experience might have told us is liable to recurrent droughts as a natural part of the laws of its existence.

If we do expect an answer to prayers for rain, it must be because in the first place the prayer is the real prayer of the whole people; secondly, because the prayer is one of real faith, not a mere experiment or last resource; thirdly, because it is accompanied by a general confession of sin, and real humiliation of soul. When we remember how very seldom these conditions are to any extent fulfilled, can we wonder that our prayers win so little response? On a late day of prayer for rain, when a public holiday was proclaimed to allow men to go to Church to pray, the response was in startling proportion to the number of those who came: an earnest of what might have been had faith and prayer been more widely real.

THE CORONATION.

Now that the Coronation has been at last safely accomplished, to the relief and satisfaction of the whole Empire, it may be well for us to enquire something of the meaning of the Kingship of which it is the seal.

No one can study the elaborate ceremonial of the Coronation without being impressed by the fact that it is primarily a religious Service. It has the closest affinity with the Service for the consecration of a Bishop, and is obviously intended in the most solemn way to convey a Divine authority and a spiritual grace.

The Divine Right of Kings does not consist in any right to claim the Throne independently of the will of the people; but in the Divine grace and authority, given in accordance with the previously expressed will and desire of the people that it should be so given. It does not consist in any right to rule with arbitrariness or self-will, but in the Divine commission to govern according to "the Statutes in Parliament agreed on, and the respective Laws and Customs of the People of Great Britain and Ireland, and the Dominions thereto belonging."

In a word, the King is regarded as a man with a great and solemn responsibility, and in the Coronation Service he is given a Divine commission to perform that office as from and as unto God, and given a Divine grace to assist him in his arduous work.

Of course a King may show himself utterly unworthy of his vocation and ministry, just as a Bishop and a priest may prove false to his vows and his calling, but just as we nevertheless honour the office of a Bishop or a priest until the occupant of it has clearly proved himself unworthy, so is it right that we should honour the King and his office unless there be very grave reasons indeed to the contrary.

It is sometimes assumed that constitutional monarchy is incompatible with true democracy, but this is surely a mistake. As a matter of fact the President of a Republic, such as the United States, has far greater power in his hands than the King of England. It is far more possible for him to act in an unconstitutional manner, and yet he represents not the whole people without respect of party, as the King does, but only that part of the people who happened to be successful at the elections, perhaps only a bare majority of the nation, perhaps owing to election manoeuvres not even a real majority. If we have to face the occasional possibility of an unworthy King, we have the even greater danger of an unscrupulous President elected by a party machine, and of the two the latter can do infinitely more harm. On the other hand, we must remember that the King is a man who has been all his life in training for the special post he has to fill, and we are saved from the periodic Presidential election convulsions which distract the continuity of the national life, and cost infinitely more money than the maintenance of the most expensive Court. It is probable that in no way can greater freedom and justice be secured to the great mass of the people than by our system of limited and constitutional monarchy.

It may be worth while to consider what we, in our Empire, mean by the word King; what it stands for and connotes to us.

1. The King stands to us for a symbol of the continuity of the past history of our race. In eight hundred years our Kings have been anointed and crowned with the same Service in Westminster Abbey; for six hundred years they have sat in the same King Edward's Chair with which is bound up the ancient history of both Ireland and Scotland. When we consider the wonderful way in which our nation has been formed, the blending of Dane and Saxon under Alfred, the fusion of English and Norman under the Williams, the admixture of the old British element under the Edwards, the inflow of many nationalities under the Tudors, the union with Scotland under James, the fierce conflicts in Ireland, the French Huguenots and the Flemish weavers, the German influx under the Georges we seem to find in the English Throne a symbol of that continuity of national life and persistence of national character which has managed to exist through it all. Just as the most precious sword blade is not made of pure and virgin ore, but of fragments of old iron of all ages and kinds, possessed of all possible varieties of tension and stress, so it has pleased God to mould and fashion our nation out of many discordant elements; just as the blade, however often it be re-fashioned and re-welded, must preserve the original form, so through our history there has been preserved in our monarch a form and mould of national life under which the various elements have arranged themselves often with much heat and flame of fusion, into an efficient and well-balanced whole.

2. The King is the symbol of Justice. We all know how there has grown up throughout the great Empire a wonderful system of appeal from local wrong to the judgment of the King. His Private Council sits and deals impartially every day to suitors from every corner of the habitable world. From New Zealand and Canada, from South Africa, from India and Burmah, from Jamaica and Bermuda, from Borneo and Singapore, come questions for settlement before a judge whose absolute impartiality has never yet been questioned. It is, I think, to be regretted that we in Australia have by our own act, so much curtailed this right of appeal, the grandeur of which has never been equalled since the days when St. Paul, the Roman citizen, was able to utter those words:

words, "Appello Cæsarem," before which his judges cowered into silence.

3. The King is the symbol of the need of obedience and subordination to lawful authority. There is a tendency in the present day to resent all rule, authority, and discipline. True freedom, however, does not consist in lawlessness, and it is only by obedience that a man becomes really fit to rule. Only one who has obeyed knows the full meaning, extent, and results of a command. All civil life must have a head, one who can command in such a way that obedience is recognised as reasonable and right, because for the public good. No doubt we can conceive cases where resistance is justifiable because the command is wrong, but in our modern life, at least, such cases are very rare.

We must remember that, of all men, the King is probably the most under commands, the least free to do as he likes. He is bound in countless matters by the Constitution, and in countless others by honour, custom, and the sense of responsibility for the welfare of his people. His life is a constant round of work, and of ceremonies and receptions, which are the dullest kind of work. He has to put a check on every word and act, lest it should be misinterpreted for evil. His own life has to be an exemplification of that order and discipline of which his office is a symbol.

4. The King is a symbol of the unity of our Empire, which has extended over the world far beyond the limits of our own race, which forms the dominant but numerically smaller part of it. We have a world Empire greater than that of imperial Rome, containing nations the most varied and most mutually antagonistic, united in peace by a common loyalty to the Throne. When Queen Victoria lay a-dying the Mahomedans, Parsees, and Hindoos of India assembled in their thousands and prayed for her with a fervour and earnestness which was unsurpassed in England itself. To the Eastern mind, Government can only present itself under the personal form. The personality of the ruler is the one real bond of union between so many nations. They accept hereditary sovereignty as of immemorial custom and antiquity. For the ruler to be changed every few years would seem to them a sign of incredible weakness and vacillation. We cannot change the unchanging East. If we are to govern it at all we must govern it in the way it has ever been governed.

Although we Westerns do not, like the Easterns, regard the Empire from the personal point of view, yet still to us, too, the King is a great symbol of unity, and perhaps more than a symbol, a bond of whose strength we are not fully aware.

5. Lastly, the King is a symbol of our national responsibilities. To him look up many millions of what we call the lower races, to him they appeal as their Supreme Ruler and Father, and through him to us, with whom, and not with him, lies the real power of right or wrong, of care or of neglect. Do we fully realise our national responsibilities for the millions of India, Africa, Burmah, and the islands of the sea that God has given into our hand. Do we realise that the "white man's burden" is a very real thing? that God will call us to account, as a nation, for the use we make of our opportunities? Can we regard with perfect equanimity the fact that we spend £100,000,000 on strong drink for £1,000,000 that we spend on teaching them that knowledge of God which has given us all that is best in our national character?

Then there is our great national responsibility for the peace of the world. Thank God we have learnt a lesson, and we are not likely to seek war with a light heart. Can we doubt that we are a greater factor in the world, a greater factor, too, for peace, that we speak through our King as one people, that the world has seen thousands of loyal men come from the ends of the earth to lay down their lives for the old battle-cry of King and country?

Finally, there is our national responsibility for righteousness. There is a spirit of selfish unrest abroad in the world. Each nation is striving to be rich, no matter how, and to get land, no matter if justly. China would probably have already been portioned out had not Great Britain stood up for the open door to all. There is a tendency to throw aside all religious and moral restraints; to laud materialism and self-interest as the guides of life. A careless Court might do more evil to-day than it did even in the days of the degenerate Charles II. Thank God we have had for sixty years the example of a pure and God-fearing Court, and we have no reason to believe that there will be any break with the honourable traditions of the past, especially when the great Queen has been succeeded by one so justly respected as the King and so universally loved as our Queen.

The Coronation will tend to deepen, both in Prince and people, that sense of responsibility which is of such great importance to the prosperity of the State and the happiness of the people.

of Mr. W. H. On arrival at Vanrook found only Mr. H. at home. Here I was a bit disappointed, as I expected to find a survey party located, but they were all some miles away. Spent a quiet day with Mr. H., and on Monday went on to Miranda Downs. Here was surprised to find a comfortable family circle. Tuesday returned to Stirling, my journey forming a triangle. Wednesday to Delta. Rested on Thursday with the hopes of getting another horse, but was disappointed, as it was nowhere to be found, nor been seen for three months or more. As the animal is old there is a probability of his being dead. Friday, as I was just ready to start, Mr. E. said if I stayed a day he would let me have a pack-horse. So decided to do so, and came through to Normanston on Saturday; but, unfortunately, the horse took bad, and had to be left about five miles back. Expect him in this evening to be ready for start for Burketown on Wednesday.

I have been in every way pleased with the journey, and believe the people appreciate the visit. The fact that the Church is taking an interest in those outside people will more than compensate for trouble. On all sides received the greatest kindness, and a promised hearty welcome for any future visitor. All went well; nothing but cordiality and good feeling was shown.

After visiting Burketown I hope to proceed to Nicholson River and Lawn Hill, arriving at Normanston about the middle of October.

THE MITCHELL RIVER.

It will be remembered that in our last number an account was given of the Bishop's visit to the mouth of the Mitchell River to select a site for an Aboriginal Mission; and that no signs were seen of the Rev. E. B. Gribble and the police party after waiting four days beyond the appointed time. Much anxiety was felt until, nearly a fortnight later, news was received of the safe return of the party to Palmerville. It appears that they arrived on the beach about 14 miles south of the main mouth of the Mitchell just in time to see the "Melbider" sailing away and the smoke of their signal was not observed owing to a heavy bush fire just behind it. They had reached within five miles of the coast on the appointed day but came on a deep river which they could not cross and which took them three days to head, hence the delay. Just before reaching the coast the party had a narrow escape from the natives, who came to the camp in the afternoon and although unable to speak a word of English seemed very friendly, bringing in firewood and pointing out a good camping place, which was nearly surrounded by scrub. Before dark they returned apparently to their own camp about two miles away, and the party were about to turn in without setting any watch when one of the trackers asked leave to go down to the neighbouring lagoon to shoot a duck. He returned shortly after in great terror to say that the camp was surrounded by natives who were creeping on it from every direction. The three white men crept out a little way from the camp and found that this story was true and that a large body of armed natives had surrounded them. A volley was fired into the air—the natives finding they were discovered promptly retreated, but the escape was a close one. It is a happy thing that none of the natives were hurt, as it would have formed a bad beginning for the Mission, which will evidently have to be fairly strong in numbers until the confidence of the people is gained. Mr. Gribble examined the country very carefully and is of the opinion that it is eminently suited for a reserve, being full of game and native food, yams, lilies, wild rice, arrowroot, etc. The natives are extremely numerous, no less than sixty-five lighted fires being found in a single camp. They are of fine physique, some of the women being six feet in height and all apparently strong and healthy. The Bishop has applied to the Government to have the delta of the Mitchell River proclaimed as an aboriginal reserve for the purpose of a Church of England Mission; but a reply has not yet been received. A large reserve is urgently needed, as the managers of stations strictly resent the presence of the natives on their runs, while the natives must have some place to live and that a place where food and water are abundant. For bare justice, if from no higher motive, it is needful that the reserve should be proclaimed. It may be mentioned that the Bishop walked inland some distance unarmed through the scrub not very far from the scene of the attack on the police party and of course in ignorance of it, so that we have reason to be thankful that he was not interfered with. Should the reserve be granted, the Bishop is in hopes that it may be possible to start work after the wet season. The Mission will of course be a great tax on the resources of such a small and poor diocese, but it seems to be a work that is laid on us clearly by God, and we trust that He will provide the means to do His work. It is quite possible that we may also be called upon to undertake another and even greater missionary responsibility; and, if so, we feel that we must not shrink, that those things are a test of the reality of our faith, and that perhaps they are God's way of arousing the whole Australian people to a deeper sense of their responsibility for their use of the Gospel of Christ.

"WHAT IS CHRISTIANITY?"

This has been justly described as an epoch-making book. It consists of lectures delivered to large and learned scientific audiences in Berlin, and has excited the deepest interest throughout the civilised world. The author is an earnest and impartial seeker after truth, hampered by no predispositions, ready to follow wherever his convictions may lead him. What does such a man, learned beyond the usual run of learned men, keen of intellect, powerful of personality, able to gather and hold for fifteen lectures some of the keenest intellects in Germany—what does such an one think and say of the Gospel of Jesus Christ?

It is, of course, clear that Harnack falls far short of the teaching of the Catholic faith. His conception of our Lord's personality, though inconsistent with any representation of Him as merely man, is equally lacking in any clear recognition of His Divine nature, and he regards the Gospel as a message from God to the individual, practically ignoring the social side of the Gospel and the corporate life of the Christian Church. But when all this has been said (and we must remember he speaks with severe self-restraint, under-estimating perhaps his own faith lest he should burden those of little faith), while we deplore the lack of much that is very dear and vital to us, yet we cannot but acknowledge that his is a mighty voice, the voice of a Prophet in and according to his generation, calling men back from the world to God. As we read his words of deep, solemn conviction, quiet, fearless strength, and grave irony, we are scarcely disposed to question the statements of Dr. du Bose, that "Such clear-speaking and far-reaching testimony to the eternal within the transitory, and the Divine in our human life cannot but strike a chord of universal assent," and that "seldom, if at all, in our time has an answer to the question, 'What is Christianity?' appealed with so much force to the independent and thinking mind of the world." It is the sound of a voice that knows, and it behoves all men who care for truth at least to listen. Nor is it difficult to see why the voice is great. It is because the speaker is singularly permeated with the very spirit of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. While we may doubt whether he has carried out the lessons to be deduced from the Gospel to their fully right conclusions, we cannot doubt that he has steeped himself in its spiritual light, and that it is to him, and in his belief for all the world, the very Word of Truth and Life, the revelation of the Father of Light.

The Lectures naturally divide themselves into two parts: (a) The Gospel; and (b) The Gospel in History. We will consider, first, the Gospel, as being by far the most important. Our interpretation of the Gospel in History may be modified or amended, but the Gospel itself is either true or false in itself, and admits of no such treatment.

In the first place, we may take it for granted that criticism will now question no more the genuineness of at least the first three Gospels. As Harnack says, "Criticism to-day universally recognises the unique character of the Gospels." "In their essential substance they belong to the first, the Jewish, epoch of Christianity, that brief epoch which may be denoted as the palaeontological." Of course this does not mean that critics do not reserve to themselves the right to pick and choose, and reject here and there, as Harnack himself does; but it does mean that even the most hostile critics have been compelled, by the logic of facts, to admit that the Gospels do contain a genuine report of Christ's life and words, and reproduce for us the impression which he made upon his contemporaries. To use Harnack's words, "they offer us a plain picture of Jesus' teaching in regard both to its main features and to its individual application; in the second place they tell us how His life issued in the service of His vocation; and in the third place they describe the impression which He made on his disciples, and which they transmitted."

Some people, says Harnack, have tried to evade the force of the Gospel by "entrenching themselves behind the miraculous stories related by the Evangelists," and declaring that these justify them in rejecting it, but, apart from the fact that Jesus nowhere lays stress on his miracles, but rather the reverse, there are grave reasons against rejecting the Gospel on any such grounds. In the first place, the miraculous is a characteristic not of the Gospels only, but of that whole age. It occurs in secular works of the time as much as in the Gospels, and can in no way be quoted as an evidence of later date, for miracles are, in secular history, constantly recorded of eminent persons during their actual life-time, sometimes the very same day. It was, to some extent, merely a way of expressing what was wonderful and strange. In the second place, we must remember that "it is characteristic of every higher religion to be conscious of the ability to escape from the power and service of transitory things, and this is felt, with truth, to be a miracle whenever it occurs," and lastly, "though the order of Nature be inviolable, we are not yet by any means acquainted with all the forces working in it and acting reciprocally with other forces." "Miracles, it is true, do not happen, but of the marvellous and inexplicable there is plenty. In our present state of knowledge we have become more careful, more hesitating in our judgment."

The thought of the Gospel naturally divides itself into two divisions—the Person of Jesus and His message. On the first point Harnack says but little, and what he does say is not very satisfactory. He holds that the human sonship of Jesus towards God was so complete and perfect as to be an expression and revelation of the Divine fatherhood of God, that Jesus so realised in Himself the Kingdom of God that He Himself was that Kingdom of God which He represented. He admits that "this Jesus who preached humility and knowledge of self named himself, and himself alone, the Son of God," that He alone brought a perfect and absolutely complete message from God, that "He Himself stands behind all that He said," that He claimed to be "the way to the Father, and as He is the appointed of the Father, so He is the judge as well," and that His claim has not been disproved. He asserts that "Jesus is no mere factor connected with the Gospel; He was its personal realisation and its strength, and this He is felt to be still." He asserts unequivocally that the one absolutely new element in the Gospel was the Personality of Jesus Himself; but here he says all research must stop, and that we cannot know what the real relation of Jesus to the Father was or is. It seems strange that Harnack should go so very far and no further, for the position he assigns to our Lord is absolutely unique, and apparently utterly inconsistent with any mere humanity.

When we turn from Harnack's conception of Christ's person to his conception of His message, the case is very different. Rarely, if ever, in modern times has the spiritual reality of the Gospel and its entire applicability to modern life and conditions been put with deeper earnestness and more telling force. The captious difficulties and insincere objections by which men would fain evade its stern, yet loving message, are brushed aside with a massive strength. He takes the Gospel as dealing with four great departments of life—the world, the poor, law, and work. It is no creed of asceticism or world denial. Jesus himself lived in the world and shared its joys and sorrows, but in the world there are three foes which we are not merely to flee but to fight to the death. They are Mammon, "worldly goods which try to get the mastery over us and make us as tyrants over others"; care, which "makes us timorous slaves of the day and of material things; the care through which, bit by bit, we fall a prey to the world"; and selfishness, the antidote to which is not asceticism, but "self-denial and self-renunciation to a much greater extent than we like to think."

With regard to the poor, Jesus was no mere praiser of poverty. His life was an effort to counteract poverty and the suffering that sprang from it. He complained of an abnormal state of things that He had not where to lay His head. The intense value attached by Him to each human soul was intolerant of a condition of contentment with the hard lot of the poor. "The fallacious principle of the free play of forces, of the 'live and let live' principle—a better name for it would be the 'live and let die'—is entirely opposed to the Gospel."

The question of the relation of the Gospel to law has been lately brought into prominence by Tolstoy, and many are glad to welcome the assertion that Gospel forbids all positive injunctions or resistance to wrong as a proof that it is impracticable. Harnack points out that to the Jews law meant something very different to what it means to us, and that our Lord's words have a very real application as far as the individual is concerned. It is true that Jesus bid His disciples disarm by gentleness; but do we not apply the same rule in the circle of our family and friends. Could the family exist if each pursued only his own rights, and did not learn to renounce even when attacked; and is not this quite compatible with the pursuit of just right and the conscientious administration of justice? That the Gospel cannot be fitted into the claims of a forcible socialism is true. Its spirit is higher.

Lastly, the complaint has been made of the Gospel that it does not sympathise with modern civilisation, with strenuous self-progress, with art and science, and the love of work for its own sake. Harnack answers that there is something higher than work. Labour is not an absolute good. He points out how hampered the Gospel would have been had it been identified with any phase of civilisation. Each phase comes and goes and leaves its successors cold. "The man of any deep feeling will thankfully receive anything that the development of progress may bring him, but he knows very well that his situation inwardly—the problems that agitate him and the fundamental position in which he stands—is not essentially, nay, scarcely even unessentially, altered by it at all. When a man grows older and sees more deeply into life, he does not find, if he possesses any inner world at all, that he is much advanced by the external march of things, by the 'progress of civilisation.' Nay, he feels rather where he was before, and forced to seek the sources of strength that his forefathers also sought. He is forced to make himself a native of the Kingdom of God, the Kingdom of the Eternal, the Kingdom of Love, and he comes to understand that it was only of this Kingdom that Jesus Christ desired to speak and to testify."

What, then, according to Harnack, is Christianity in its essence? It is, he answers, primarily a matter between the soul and God. This relation is supremely realised in the person of the Man Christ Jesus in a threefold form:—

1. As a Kingdom of God present and within us.

2. As the Fatherhood of God with its correlative of the infinite value of the human soul.

3. As the Higher Righteousness or the commandment of Love.

Christianity is not the mere announcement of these truths. It was produced, as Harnack abundantly shows, by the following facts:—

(1) The death of Jesus and the absolute conviction of His resurrection.

(2) An absolute faith in the atoning significance of His death and resurrection.

(3) A living relation to the risen Jesus.

Harnack shrinks from any explanation as to the objective reality of these beliefs, or as to how it was that the Personality of Christ was the essence of His message, but he records the facts with irresistible weight of proof and sincerity of conviction; and though we wish he had gone further, we are grateful for the truth he so strenuously upholds. An account of his views of the Gospel in History must be for the present postponed.

NAME OF THE DIOCESE OF NORTH QUEENSLAND.

On the vacancy of the Diocese of North Queensland, our Bishop forwarded a request to the President of the Synod of North Queensland, that the question of a change of name should be brought up, as the name North Queensland was no longer accurate and was liable to cause confusion. The Diocesan Council afterwards forwarded a resolution to the same effect. As these communications were not considered by the Synod of North Queensland, being apparently not laid before it, the Bishop forwarded the following formal protest to the Primate:—

"I, the undersigned, Gilbert, Bishop of Carpentaria, do hereby protest against the consecration of any Bishop under the name and title of Bishop of North Queensland, unless it be on the understanding that the title will be altered as soon as possible after the consecration. I make this protest on the grounds that the name North Queensland is no longer applicable to that Diocese, that it claims a jurisdiction which does not correspond to fact, that it is a source of confusion and misunderstanding, and that precedent, as in the case of the Diocese of Australia, is in favour of a change of name."

Before a reply was received, the Bishop-Elect of North Queensland arrived at Thursday Island on his return from Japan, and the matter was fully discussed. As it was obvious that the matter could not be settled without a meeting of Synod which could not then be held, it was mutually agreed that the Bishop of Carpentaria should withdraw his protest on the understanding that the matter should be brought before the next session of General Synod by mutual consent; and the Bishop wrote the same day to the Primate withdrawing his protest. A letter was subsequently received from the Primate declining to entertain the protest on the following grounds:—

1. "I consider that the matter is one for diocesan intercommunication and agreement and not one for the Primate to settle suo arbitrio."

2. I do not consider that the alleged 'confusion' arising from the name of 'North Queensland' being retained by the Diocese is sufficient cause for altering the title.

3. I do not consider that the Diocese by retaining the name claims any jurisdiction beyond that which by agreement belongs to it.

4. Because alteration of the name would break historic continuity and cause needless perplexity.

5. Because to change the name would involve many legal difficulties as regards property and trusts both in England and in the Diocese."

This reply of course in no way affects the previously made agreement which resulted in the withdrawal of the protest, and indeed it expressly repudiates authority to decide the question. The Bishop of North Queensland in his first Synod address, states that he recognises the difficulty and has recommended that it be referred to General Synod. Here the matter rests for the present, but we still hold that the name of North Queensland is misleading and prejudicial to this Diocese, and shall be glad when the question can be authoritatively settled. We have been charged by the Northern Churchman with ingratitude in raising the issue, but scarcely think the accusation fair, and we fully realise that it is very hard indeed on the old Diocese. Still it is in no way our fault that the facts are as they are.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION.

It is impossible to restrain a feeling of deep disappointment at the action of the Queensland Government in issuing regulations to admit of religious instruction in response to the wish of the vast majority of the parents of children, and then almost immediately withdrawing them on the grounds that they had no authority to issue them. We are supposed to be a Democracy, and the Government declares itself unable to carry out the will of an overwhelming majority of those who in this matter have the best right to be heard. We are informed that the latest statement of the Government is that they want to be fortified by another Referendum (of all voters this time), that they cannot do anything without it, and that it will cost too much money to take it in these hard times. The plain English is that politicians think that religious people will do less to enforce their convictions than their opponents, and can safely be ignored. Those who plead for religious education are regarded simply as people with a troublesome fad, to be kept quiet and put off until the matter is forgotten. The matter must not be forgotten, and politicians must be made to feel that we are in dead earnest, that we care for the children's future, and that if they don't care we will elect someone else in their places. There is one practical piece of advice to every man who realises the need and the danger. Let him write to the member for his district and tell him that he cares about this matter of religious education, and that his member's attitude will influence his vote. Nothing else will do any practical good. Let every man who cares take the trouble to show his member that he cares and something will be done. Members of Parliament are easy to convert when they see that their constituents mean business. If we sink back content with our little effort, content with the indifferent and laissez faire attitude of the Government, we shall not deserve to get what we want.

That it is for the children's sake should rouse every man. Surely there are dangers and temptations enough for them to face without depriving them of that knowledge of God which alone can strengthen them and enable them to conquer. It is a slander to say that it is a sectarian movement. Presbyterians and Wesleyans have worked for it as earnestly as Churchmen. What we do want is to help the children and give them a fair chance against the world, the flesh, and the devil. The opponents of Religious Instruction are for the most part enemies of all religions, and unhappily a large number of Roman Catholics. These last say that they have their own Schools and don't care what the State Schools are like. Surely a selfish and short-sighted position and one which does not deserve to be truckled to. The matter is not going to be allowed to drop, and if our politicians think they can safely ignore the wishes of the parents of Queensland, they may find that they have severely burnt their fingers.

INSTALLATION OF THE BISHOP OF NORTH QUEENSLAND.

With a desire to mark the sympathy of the Diocese of Carpentaria with the mother Diocese of North Queensland, the Bishop attended the Installation of the new Bishop of North Queensland, Right Rev. G. H. Frodsham, M.A., with Rev. H. W. Curtis as Chaplain and senior Priest to represent the Clergy. The new Bishop seems to be already winning golden opinions from the laymen of the Diocese, to whom his strong personality and business capacity particularly appeals. A striking meeting of business men met on Tuesday evening under the presidency of the Mayor, in the new Council Chambers, to give him a hearty welcome on behalf of the citizens, and his vigorous address was thoroughly appreciated. On Wednesday the Cathedral was full on the occasion of the Installation, which was performed by Ven. Archdeacon Pritt, M.A., and was a most imposing service. The sermon was preached by the Bishop of Carpentaria, who succeeded in riveting the attention of the laymen present for three-quarters of an hour. The Bishop said that it was an age of Democratic Imperialism, and after a trenchant criticism of democracy, he proceeded to show that a personal religion was for a democracy a matter of life and death. Various notes of encouragement were sounded, and the Bishop ended with a reference to his deep regard and affection for the new Bishop, and his prayers for the peace and prosperity of the Diocese.

KAPARLGOO ABORIGINAL MISSION. SOUTH ALLIGATOR RIVER, N.T.

Mr. Lennox writes, under date of July 27th, thanking the senders of clothing for the Mission. He says, "The garments will be much appreciated at this time of year. In summer we have cotton, with no sleeves, and a belt round the waist, for they like freedom for the arms, as the children and even the men like freedom at the knees. They are easier to make, and, I think, healthier, as we do not want to take them too much from their usual mode of living. In the winter the garments sent are excellent." Mr. Lennox has been at Port Darwin waiting for the arrival of a new cutter from Adelaide, and, in order not to waste time, he got work on the wharf, and earned enough during his three weeks' detention to buy a dingey for the new boat. This is, indeed, energy. Messrs. Roach and Gathercole are working at the station.

No. 31.—Choir edition; nonpareil; cloth boards, 2s. 4d.

No. 34.—Organ edition; long primer. 4s. 6d.

A COMBINED PRAYER AND HYMN BOOK. For strangers in Church; can be had at 6d. and 1s. These books are a marvel of cheapness. No. 300 has the Prayers in ruby and the Hymns in diamond. The binding is strong, and the advantage of having the two books in one cover is obvious

Catalogues are also issued for (1) Theology, (2) Music, (3) Presentation Books, and will be sent on application.

Customers in North Queensland can send their order to the Church of England Book Depôt, Bishop Registry, Townsville, where large stocks are always on hand.

All communications should be addressed to THE MANAGER. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to ARTHUR S. ILIFF.

NOTICE.

All communications to be addressed to the Editor of The Carpenterian, Bishops College, Thursday Island, to whom subscriptions may be sent. Subscription, 2/6 per annum, post free.

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS.

All contributions of Parish News, etc., must reach the Editor by the last day of February, May, August, and November in each year.

The Bishop's Movements.

September 7.—Arrived at Thursday Island from visit to Townsville for enthronement of Bishop of North Queensland.

19.—Left for visit to Torres Straits Islands in the "Mystic."

25.—Returned to Thursday Island.

October.—In charge of Parish and Bishop's College during Rev. W. P. Glover's visit to Gulf Parishes.

27.—Left for Port Darwin by s.s. "Guthrie."

November 2.—Consecrated Palmerston Church.

7.—To Pine Creek by train.

12.—Visited Burrundie.

13.—Visited Yam Creek.

14.—Visited Brock's Creek.

15.—Returned to Palmerston.

16.—Confirmation at Palmerston.

28.—Arrived Thursday Island.

December 16.—Left Thursday Island on visit to the Gulf.

The Bishop will return to Thursday Island on January 13th, and will leave by the "Maranoa" on February 3rd for Cooktown, where he will hold a Confirmation on February 5th. On the following day he will leave for Melbourne, Ballarat, Goulburn, and Sydney, where he will preach and speak on behalf of the Diocese until April 13th. He hopes to get a short holiday from April 14th to 28th, and he will then return to Cooktown, and visit Maytown to hold the Confirmation which had to be postponed in consequence of Rev. G. Smith's unexpected illness necessitating a visit to the Gulf in December, the date originally fixed.

The Bishop earnestly requests the prayers of the faithful for his visit to the South in search of more clergy and funds to carry on the missionary work of the Diocese. Communications may be addressed c/o Rev. E. Snodgrass, St. Mark's Vicarage, Fitzroy, Melbourne, until March 15th, and after that to Diocesan Registry, 14thurst Street, Sydney.

OUR THIRD YEAR.

With this issue commences our third year. We pray that it may be a happy and prosperous one both for our readers and our Diocese. During the past year, two fresh Priests have arrived in the Diocese, two new Churches and a large Parish Hall have been built, and one Church and one Rectory restored, at a cost in all of about £1100. In addition to this, £1500 has been raised locally for the ordinary parochial purposes, and some £600 for diocesan and missionary work, including £200 towards the maintenance of Bishop's College. The South Sea Island and Japanese work have both grown largely, and the parochial work is going on steadily. There are still three great bush districts in want of clergy, and we are still awaiting the decision of the Government with regard to the Mitchell Aboriginal Reserve, but there has been enough in the past year to give us very real encouragement and good hope for the future.

ARMS OF DIOCESE.

The following is the proper description of the Blazon of the Arms of the Diocese of Carpentaria:

"Or, on a chevron gules a Holy Lamb argent all within a bordure wavy azure charged with eleven plates."

The signification is, the Holy Lamb as set forth by the English Church is in the land of gold (Australia) where the shores are washed by the waters of the sea in which pearls abound.

The King and the Prince of Wales have accepted copies of Mr. Pascoe's "Two Hundred Years of the S.P.G.—the History of the Society from its foundation in 1701."

SOME BOOKS.

We desire to draw attention to some very powerful essays by Professor James, of Harvard University, entitled "The Will to Believe." The arguments against Pessimism and Determinism are put with most striking force and with some very remarkable illustrations. It is a book which takes some thinking about, but will well repay the effort. It is published by Longmans, Green & Co. Price, 7/6.

"The Study of the Gospels," by Canon J. Armitage Robinson, D.D. (same publishers, 2/6), is a short and powerful book which should be in the hands of all who wish to know what the very latest orthodox scholarship has to say on the problems suggested by modern criticism.

"Foreign Missions," by Bishop Montgomery, Secretary of S.P.G. (same publishers, 2s. 6d.) is a book which ought to be in the hands of every Christian man. We know of no book of the size so masterly in its grasp of the subject and so full of information which is always to the point. No one ought to open his mouth on the subject in the future without having read this book, which we venture to think will be considered the first text book on the subject.

"Luke Delmage," by Rev. Father Sheehan, gives a very interesting account of Irish life and character. The book is a self-revelation of the effects of the Roman presentation of Christianity in a part of Ireland where it has almost undisputed power. In many ways it is an attractive picture, but we should like to draw attention to one aspect of it. It appears to be in accordance with the Roman conception of most saintly conduct for a young and only daughter to suddenly leave her confiding and devoted parents without the slightest hint of her destination, and to bury herself with elaborate secrecy in a convent, leaving her parents to distract themselves over the uncertainty of her fate. It appears to be further a most saintly thing for the said young woman, in pursuance of a vow, to represent herself as something she is not, and to support the deception with repeated lies.

It must be remembered that this picture is not drawn by an enemy, but by an eloquent and careful friend, capable of much self restraint in other parts of the book. It would be well if those of our Church people who are so ready to entrust their daughters to a Convent school would read carefully this Roman idea of what is right and to be aimed at in convent life. We can only say that to us it appears utterly opposed to our English ideas of honourable and right conduct. If some of those ultra Protestants who are always shrieking Popery because of some custom or usage which has no more to do with Popery than with esoteric Buddhism were to turn their energies into the direction of pointing out the dangers of tampering with our children's faith by allowing them to attend Roman schools, we should have a much higher opinion of their common sense.

BISHOP'S VISIT TO TORRES STRAITS ISLANDS.

I left Thursday Island on September 19th on a visit to Saibai, the extreme northern point of my Diocese, being only two miles from the New Guinea coast, and to others of the Leeward Islands. As the tide did not suit until 3 a.m., I went the previous evening on board the "Mystic," a 10-ton Government yawl, in which I had been kindly invited to accompany Mr. B. on a round of official inspection. It was very still when we started, and but for the tide we should have been unable to get out, but outside Wednesday Island there was a fresh breeze, which made the little vessel dance about in the most lively fashion, more probably than she would have done with a stronger wind, and quite enough to keep me, although not as a rule a bad sailor, hors de combat all day. Davy, the Fijian boatswain, took me under his special care, made me a comfortable bed in the dinghey, and waited on me with a quite embarrassing attention. Our run was nearly north, past many islands and not a few sunken reefs and shoals, for which a sharp lookout had to be kept. Naghir, a fine pyramidal hill, has a few inhabitants, but most of them are only fishing stations. About 4 p.m. we sighted Tauan, a lofty island four or five miles from the New Guinea coast, and to the left of it the low island of Saibai. We ran in between Tauan and Saibai, and anchored in the channel between the latter island and the mainland, opposite the native village, with its mile of cocoanuts fringing the shore. Saibai is a mere ring of land about a quarter of a mile wide and thirty miles in circumference, the interior being filled with a swamp in place of a lagoon, as is often the case. We landed just before sunset. As it was low tide I was carried through a quarter of a mile or more of soft mud by the faithful and brawny Davy. The inhabitants of Saibai are mainland New Guinea natives who fled hither to escape the Tugeri head hunters, and the village is of the New Guinea type, the houses being on piles some distance above the ground. We were met by the sergeant of the native police, dressed in the smart Queensland uniform. The New Guinea system of police is adopted on these islands, i.e., two or three of the most active and influential men are appointed policemen, given a uniform and a trifle of wages, and held responsible for the maintenance of order under the mamoose or headman. The system seems to work very well, provided there is sufficiently frequent inspection. There are between 300 and 400 natives, and they are not decreasing. There is a Samoan teacher of the L.M.S. and a Government School; the mistress is, however, leaving. There was too much suggestion of fever to make it desirable to sleep on shore, so we returned to the boat. The sunset was very fine, a mass of golden light in the west, against which stood up the bold outline of Tauan, and to the east the glow of a great fire on the mainland. We went on shore again early next morning, and I made a sketch of the quaint houses and great outrigger canoes, in which the modern canvas sails look curiously out of place. Then a procession was formed and advanced singing, to present Mr. B. with cocoanuts, yams, taro, and a much subdued chicken, which was laid on the heap and severely admonished if it moved. We made some presents in return, and then returned to the boat. The people seem to be happy and contented in spite of their somewhat dreary surroundings and the almost total absence of good fresh water. The Church has been entirely built by native labour, and is a very creditable building. It is doubtful, however, whether Samoan teachers have sufficient strength for such a responsible position. The difficulties are complicated by the visits of not always too scrupulous white traders.

We got off about 11 a.m. and found a stiff breeze blowing outside, but my seasickness was gone, and I was able to enjoy the plunging of the staunch little vessel over the foaming seas. We made a smart run of less than three hours to Turnagain, a low uninhabited mangrove island some three miles in length, and found a fairly sheltered anchorage off the north-west angle, where a number of 'swimming-diving' and other boats were anchored. Just before we reached the island we passed a large sea snake, some fifteen feet in length, an ugly looking beast which took no notice of the boat save to give it a sidelong glance of its repulsive head. After dinner we went on board several of the boats. The swimming-divers are mostly natives of the Islands, some working for themselves, but mostly for a white owner. We heard a story of a mean action on the part of a regular diving boat coming on to the ground where the swimming-diving boats were and throwing overboard some meat. The boats had to cease work and leave the ground, as it was no longer safe on account of the sharks. While working, the swimming-diving boats are careful to throw nothing overboard for this reason, and dare not even kill the turtle they catch. Soon after most of the boats left for Tauan, and we continued at our anchorage for the night, as the passage to Deliverance Island is a very dangerous one, and Mr. B. did not wish to face it with a westerling sun hiding the reefs and shoals. The Saibai chicken made its final appearance for supper with some dugong steak, which when young is excellent eating. We had arranged to spend the Sunday quietly at Mobiag, but necessary business called Mr. B. to Deliverance and upset our plans. The "Mystic" is a most comfortable boat, and by this time I was feeling quite at home on her, and having got used to her short, quick motion, wondered that I felt it so much at first.

Next day (Sunday) we were up early, and at 7 a.m. all gathered in the cabin for morning prayer, the S.S. Islander crew, who belonged to our Church Home, joining heartily in the responses and hymns. Immediately afterwards we set sail. The morning was rough and boisterous, and for some distance we ran south to avoid a great reef which lay in our way. On clearing it we ran to the west before the wind over a nasty and confused sea. Our destination was, we knew, a very low island, and we expected to sight it about noon, but an hour and a-half more passed before Mr. B. made it out. It is, we afterwards discovered, 12 miles west of its place on the chart. As we approached we could see a forest of masts behind a long sandbank running to the south-west, and also behind another bank some six miles south and dignified with the name of Ker Island. The sandbank seemed endless, but at last we rounded it and ran up to the fleet, gunwale under, at tremendous speed. There were four schooners and their fleets of about 80 luggers under Deliverance, and another schooner and fleet under Ker Island. Anchored in a long line to leeward, they resembled the pictures of the fleets in the good old days of naval warfare. We anchored and went on board one of the schooners, and later in the afternoon went on shore in a whaleboat. If anyone wants an exhilarating three-quarters of an hour, I can confidently recommend an open whaleboat beating up against a strong wind, ballasted by half a dozen S.S. Islanders standing on the weather gunwale and sailed by a fleet captain who is conscious that he is the cynosure of all eyes. It cannot be described as either monotonous or dry. The island is inhabited by a civil old German, a regular Robinson Crusoe. He has been there for twelve years and has not even a boat, although he sometimes is six months without a visitor. His family consists of five dogs, a dozen Muscovy ducks, and eighty cats, for whom he daily kills a turtle. He seems quite happy and contented, although in the north-west season the low island, only a few feet above the water, must be almost swept by the waves. I had hoped to have had an opportunity of holding service at night, but unfortunately I had hit off an awkward time, as a labour difficulty had reached an acute crisis, and the evening was occupied with conferences and consultations, which I hoped tended to peace, but are outside my province. I dined and spent the night on board the schooner, which was like solid land after the wild rolling of the "Mystic," which her master would not desert. We had hoped to make an early start, and I was up at daylight, but we were delayed by more conferences. Work began on the schooner soon after 6 a.m. with opening and cleaning the shell with which the decks were covered. The smell was rather ancient and fish-like, but everything was perfectly clean and orderly. The wind had been raging and howling ferociously all night, and to tell the truth I was not altogether sorry to give it a chance to lull a little before we had to face the long beat to windward through the rough waters and bewildering reefs. The crews of the luggers are almost entirely Japanese, S.S. Islanders, and Manila men; white men being unfortunately conspicuous by their absence, a thing to be deplored for many reasons. It was curious to see the great whaleboat, weighing a full ton, hoisted up to the schooner's davits. Whatever the coloured men lack, they are not deficient in strength as they pull to a monotonous chanty. The weather was for the time of year amazingly cool, too cool in fact at night for pleasure. The schooner was one of those in the great hurricane at Cape Melville. She weathered the gale with the loss of her masts.

We did not get off until 10 a.m., when we ran north-east in a stiff wind until close to the coast of New Guinea, which is here low and uninteresting. About five miles from land we stood to the south, and an hour or so later had an anxious time among the shoals and banks which run north-east from Deliverance to Boigu. The water was so thick that it was impossible to see a shoal until you were on it, and the lead had to be kept constantly going and the course frequently altered. It was a relief to get into deeper water about 3 p.m., although as we went south the sea got worse and worse until we ran north-east again and got into rather quieter and shallower water, where we had to anchor in the open, as in looking for the shelter of a reef in the dark, we might have got on to the top of it. We did not have a very pleasant night, as the sea was high, and it was still blowing next morning when we again stood to the south over what the chart describes as "unexamined coral reefs." It was 10 a.m. before we sighted our destination, Mobiag Island, some ten miles to windward.

but tide and sea were against us, and it was nearly 6 p.m. before we succeeded in beating up to the dangerous reef, about three miles from shore, and which we had only just barely light to traverse, while it was long after dark when we anchored close to shore on the north-east corner of the island, having been two days in beating some forty miles to windward, a long time for such a fast little boat. We were not sorry to get in and be able to enjoy the luxuries of being dry again, and being able to let some air in down below. Mobiag is surrounded by numerous islets, which give it a picturesque look from every point of view. We passed a quiet night, and were glad to make up for the previous night's lack of sleep. We went on shore early and walked about half-a-mile to the village, which is situated in a large plantation of coconuts on the shores of a fine but shallow bay. The natives are of the New Guinea type, but the houses are built on the ground. A couple of white traders live on the island, and there is a white Government school teacher, and an L.M.S. Samoan teacher. We were met by the Mamoose and native policemen. There is a little concrete lock-up, and a big, strong woman was doing hard labour (stone-carrying) for the crime of adultery, her hair being also shaved on one side of her head. These punishments are inflicted by the native court, and are not interfered with by the Government. The village is very neat and clean, and one might have mistaken the scene for a suburb of Colombo. The population is over 300, and not decreasing. The native rights are protected by the Government, and no land is sold to whites. After breakfast we again went on shore and visited the school. There are eighty children, and their progress during the two years that the school has been established has been wonderful. I was particularly struck by the writing, which even in quite young children has a character and individuality of its own, very different from the "made-to-order" writing of the ordinary white child. The colour of the water on the reefs round the island is simply amazing, and changes every few minutes.

We got under way shortly before 2 p.m., and ran out by the eastern passage, having to beat up a long distance to avoid a huge reef. The tide runs very strongly and raises a very big sea when it goes to windward; the "Mystic" behaved splendidly. Once round the reef we ran across to Mua, and soon got into more sheltered waters, only to find a new difficulty in the shape of a sandbank, on the top of which we balanced for a few moments before drifting off on to the right side. Fortunately we had been reduced to very short sail in view of this possibility, and so no harm was done. The passage between Mua and Badu is two or three miles wide and very beautiful, but so full of reefs as to be only practicable to an experienced and capable sailor in an easily handled boat. We had to run down the eastern side between the central shoal and some curious rocks standing up out of the water just like huge pebbles without any apparent connection with the adjacent shore or anything else; then cross over by some beautiful little islets, and run back along the opposite coast to the village, about a mile from which we anchored at dusk. From the anchorage the scene is extremely beautiful. In front is an open reach of smooth water almost entirely surrounded by islands, Mua with lofty hills and beautiful valleys to the east, a dozen or more little tree-covered islands to the south, and the long sweep of Badu to the west and north. Only on the north-east was the open water visible. Were it only deeper and more accessible it would be a commodious as it is a beautiful harbour; however it may rage outside it is calm and protected here from every wind. The navigation, however, is enough to make the novice's hair stand up. We went ashore at Badu after breakfast. The village is a new one, and not nearly so picturesque as Mobiag, and the population is smaller, there being about 50 children in the school. While we were there a fine outrigger canoe came sailing in, laden with half a dozen women and a big load of vegetables, besides the crew. The canoes are made on the Fly River, and are wonderfully seaworthy. The view is entrancingly beautiful; island after island reaching away to the south in subtlest gradations of colour and tone. The people are of the same New Guinea type as Mobiag. There is a fine new Church and a Samoan L.M.S. teacher. We were pressed for time, and did not stay long on shore, as Mr. B. wished to reach Thursday Island before dark. We left Badu at 12.30 p.m., and passed round and over many reefs, threading our way past a number of small islands until we reached to open water north of Goode Island. We were, however, just too late for the tide, as it was running out with tremendous force as we reached the passage at dusk and had to anchor off the back of Thursday Island, where we landed, leaving the boat to be brought round later. There are evident opportunities for useful mission work among the Straits Islanders, but the need of a resident white teacher is obvious, as it is too much to expect a native teacher to bear the responsibility, not only of directing the people, but also protecting them against the temptations of the trader or pearling boat.

ABSTRACT OF THE REPORT OF THE ANGLICAN NEW GUINEA MISSION, 1902.

The Staff.—During the year there have been several additions to the staff, which now numbers 51. The arrival of the Rev. E. W. Taylor from West Australia has raised the staff of clergy to three. Miss Nowland, from Rockhampton, is an addition to the staff of nurses. A new South Sea Islander has also joined the Mission; and the number of native teachers has risen from nine to twelve, showing us that the Papuans are themselves already being taught to take the Gospel to their own countrymen.

The Bishop has been indefatigable in his labours—confirming, preaching, travelling. At one time he was "stuck up" at the mouth of the Mambare for three weeks, waiting for the coastal steamer, almost without rations and protection from the weather. On another occasion, while on a long overland trip in that wild, swampy country, he was nearly drowned by the upsetting of a boat at the mouth of a river. In December he left for England, and was, we are sorry to read, in a low state of health. He has gone to raise funds for the endowment of the Bishopric and to pay off a large overdraft at the bankers.

Religious Progress.—During the year two Confirmations have been held, at which 72 natives were confirmed; and 112 adult natives have been baptized. A very noteworthy event was the baptism of 69 adults on the First Sunday after Easter at a large village, Boianai, where for a long time the natives had held back from embracing the Gospel. These men and women had been influenced by the life and teaching of a South Sea teacher, now some years dead. Apparently he worked with little visible success, and now, long after his death, the seed he faithfully sowed has borne abundant fruit.

It is gratifying to learn that at stations only recently opened in districts where the tribes were living in their old heathen state of inter-tribal warfare and cannibalism, men and women are asking to be admitted into classes for instruction about the Faith.

New Stations.—Two new stations have been opened during the year, one at Hioge, and the other at Uiaku, on Collingwood Bay.

Schools.—At all the stations one of the great features of the work is the school. At the head station the school is regarded as more advanced than the ordinary village school, and the apter pupils are passed on to it. Native pupil teachers assist the white missionaries in these schools. The scholars learn the three R's, and receive instruction in religion and singing. At Dogura, geography, English, more advanced arithmetic, and simple algebra are also taught. Surely quite a sufficient curriculum for the children of savages, ignorant of reading and writing!

Industrial Work.—Another important side of the Mission is the industrial work. Some of the staff have their special duties in putting up the various buildings required on a Mission station, and in repairing the boats needed in a country where communication with other places has to be made by water. These members of the staff are assisted by native workers. The Mission schooner has a native crew who work under a white captain; the cutter has a native captain as well as crew; and the whaleboats are rowed by natives.

The Mission has its own printing press and printer, who is assisted by native compositors.

The new station at Hioge is being made a large coconut plantation, and the adult natives who have settled there do the work of cultivation.

Work among White Settlers.—Samarai, the commercial centre of British New Guinea, is outside the district assigned for Mission work to the Anglican Church, but the white settlers are not forgotten. English Services are held by the Clergy when in Samarai, and are much appreciated by the residents. Two ladies are stationed there to conduct a school at which the children of the white settlers are educated. An inspection of the school was made by the Rev. W. R. Mounsey, who gives the teaching an excellent report. Services are also held at Tamata, the mining centre on the Mambare.

Finance.—The reports of the General and various Special Funds are given. We regret to see that the Mission Revenue does not yet meet its Expenditure, and hope that the study of the Report will stir up Churchmen in Australia to wipe off the large overdraft the Mission has had to draw.

A VITAL MATTER.

The Premier of Queensland has promised to introduce, early in next session, a Bill to authorise the taking of a referendum on the question of religious teaching in State Schools.

We want all our readers to realise how vitally important it is that the Bill should pass, for, if it does not, the matter will be indefinitely shelved.

There is always a disinclination among politicians to touch a thorny subject out of which they can gain no immediate advantage, and therefore we may take it for granted that, left to themselves, a majority of the members of the Legislative Assembly will not vote for the Bill. On the other hand, it is equally certain that they will not undertake the responsibility of depriving the voters of an opportunity of expressing their opinions if they are convinced that a number of their constituents take an interest in the matter. All really depends on this. Are those who care for religious education apathetic, or will they take the trouble to let their representatives know that they care about the matter?

We claim that, even on merely political grounds, the people should be consulted. When a referendum was taken of the parents, over 20,000 voted for religious instruction, and only 1400 against. Is it just to ignore such a solid expression of the wishes of the parents, of whom at least half are voters? Yet if the parents are apathetic it is certain that nothing will be done.

The parents of the children are so practically unanimous in desiring that their children should have a religious training in the State Schools that it is not perhaps necessary to insist again on the reasons for it, but it should be clearly understood what we want.

We are not asking for some mere experiment. We are asking for something that has been well tried and tested, namely, the New South Wales system, the official Report of the working of which we subjoin:—

OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE WORKING OF THE NEW SOUTH WALES ACT.

(Brisbane Courier, October 22nd, 1898.)

OFFICIAL REPORT.

Section 7 of the Public Instruction Act provides that general religious teaching shall form part of the course of secular instruction. This religious teaching is placed on exactly the same footing as geography, grammar, or any other subject; at the annual inspection of schools the failure of any class to reach the standard in Scripture would tell against the teacher, just as satisfactory work would tell in his favour. In the junior classes, when children are unable to read, all lessons are given orally in the form of lectures, and generally cover a complete course of Old and New Testament history. In classes above the second, the Irish National Board's Scripture lesson-books are regularly read. There are two volumes of Old and two of New Testament which have to be gone through. The standards, pages 34 to 43, under the heading Scripture, show how the lessons are distributed. All teachers, irrespective of creed, are required to teach these Scripture lessons, and in no case has any refusal to do so taken place, nor has any complaint ever been made to the Department that the lessons have been ridiculed or made light of. Section 18 of the Act and 118 of the Regulations allow a parent to withdraw his children from all religious instruction by notifying his wish in writing to the teacher. As a matter of fact, such notifications are so few that for statistical purposes they may be said not to exist. The general outcome of the instruction is that all pupils receive a substantial knowledge of Scripture history, and are made acquainted with the moral teaching contained in the Bible.

Outside this "general" religious instruction, section 17 of the Act provides for what is called "special" religious instruction. Any recognised clergyman or other teacher authorised by his Church has the right to give to the children of his own denomination one hour's religious instruction daily. Unlike the general instruction, this may consist of worship and purely sectarian teaching. It is given during the ordinary school hours, and where two or more clergymen of different denominations visit, the teacher, the clergymen, and the School Board find no difficulty in making arrangements to suit all concerned. As a rule, no teacher of special religious instruction visits more than once a week.

There are no sectarian difficulties in working the clauses providing for general or special religious instruction, because the system has always formed a part of the school routine of the colony, and probably only a small percentage of parents would like a change made unless it were in the direction of giving more and not less religious teaching.

A copy of the Act and Regulations is appended. Attention is invited to clauses 7, 17 and 18 of the Act, and to Regulations 109, 111, 112, 117, 118 and 119.

Department of Public Instruction, Sydney.

We must not allow any red herrings to be drawn across the track. We must insist on the referendum being taken on the straight issue—Do you wish the New South Wales system or not?

Parents must rouse themselves and make clear to their members that they are in earnest. We should suggest that each voter write a short letter to the member for his electorate asking him to vote for the Religious Education Referendum Bill. If they show no interest the Bill is doomed. It is simply a trial balloon to see whether the parents are in earnest. If they show that they are, the Government will move slowly towards giving effect to their wishes; if not, they will gladly leave things alone.

For the children's sake we earnestly appeal to parents not to be apathetic, to see that they and their children are not deprived of their rights. Democratic Government is a farce if the majority cannot enforce their will in a matter of this importance, and yet, if they are flouted, who is to be blamed but the people themselves, because they would not take the trouble to let it be seen that they really cared? If you can make your members feel that you care, the thing will be done. To merely express your wish and not trouble whether it is carried out is utterly futile.

THE WEAKENING OF FAITH.

When the Bishop of Rochester, in his late sermon before the Northampton Church Congress admitted the existence of a general sense of discouragement, a feeling that religious faith is not on the flow, but possibly on the ebb, a fear lest we may be entering on a stagnant and uninspiring period of religious history, he only emphasised a fear which has of late been put forward in many forms.

The fact, if it be a fact, is all the more remarkable, because, in the first place, there never was a time when religious activities were so many and so diversified, when drones were so little tolerated, and earnest work so ungrudgingly recognised, and, in the second place, because intellectual assaults on the faith have comparatively almost ceased. "In the last generation," as the Bishop remarks, "the swiftly disclosed fascination of natural things, the recognition of law and uniformity, the apparent insufficiency of nature to explain herself, seemed to leave no room for God; a popular Materialism paid Him no heed, and His believers were baffled and puzzled to say where they found room and place for His work. It is different now. Science is reverent in the presence of mystery which she has helped herself to reveal. The inadequacy of merely materialistic explanations is recognised. Matter itself has almost lost substance, and reality under the ever-advancing power of analysis; it has lost the solidity which could exclude God; the spiritual side of things is felt to be at least as real. And this means not that there is a place for God somewhere, but that there is room for Him everywhere.

Why, then, when religious activity is so great, and science more ready to acknowledge God than ever before, should religious zeal run low, candidates for ordination and for confirmation be decreasing in number, pious customs and wholesome restraints be increasingly neglected, public worship be decreasingly observed? Why should faith be apparently declining when apparently it ought to be increasing?

The answer may be partly, as the Bishop hints, because the Church has not as a body responded to the particular message and duty laid upon her in this generation, the "duty of meeting, interpreting, and expressing those instincts which cry aloud for a bettering of social order, for a more real and effective brotherhood, for faith in motive forces higher than those of gain or glory." It may be that the Church has been too anxious to secure maintain, and advance her material position, too little ready to risk all for the poor and suffering; too little ready to follow her Master's example and to spend and be spent for the lost sheep at home and abroad; too ready to erect spiritual fences round her own little folds; too much afraid of eating and drinking with publicans and sinners; and that the inevitable result of spiritual exclusiveness and selfishness has been a weakening of earnestness and a loss of faith. Yet, there are some other facts to be remembered also. In the first place, we must remember that if there be an ebb-tide of faith just now, there is no reason to suppose that it is any more than a temporary phase, such as those which have always marked religious history from time to time—such as indeed marks also the most religious lives. We seem to have reached for the moment, a period of exhaustion, not only in religious but also in all other matters. A great prophet or teacher overtops his fellows in the world of literature; no new philosopher points to wisdom; no great poet or painter opens men's eyes to new wonders; no great statesman sways the hearts and alters the thoughts of men. It is a time of dearth and respectable mediocrity, a time when no one listens for great living voices, and a time, therefore, of special danger for faith. No doubt, in some ways, it is better to live in heroic days among the great men who uplift us by their living example; but yet, with men, as with the fields, it cannot be always fruit time, the seed must be sown and wait unseen awhile beneath the darkness of the clod. It has been said that there is no present, that what we call the present is but the disclosure of what has come to be in the past. No great man or great movement is suddenly, however suddenly it may be revealed. The real influences which make men what they are worked probably five or twenty years before in the young man's plastic soul. We are not so much concerned, after all, with what the particular attitude of our time may be, as with the foundation we are laying for the times that are coming.

Granted that there is a pause—an ebb, if you will—for the moment, in the tide of faith and zeal, it is a cause not so much for discouragement, for, as we have said, it reflects not real the present but the past, as for wise and careful preparation for the future which we are making, that when the tide begins to flow again it may be carried on so far that no second ebb will carry it back to the same place, we must see that the advance, if not continuous, is always real.

We do not think that thought will ever tend back towards intellectual materialism; for science, as Bishop Talbot points out, is ever more and more emphasising the spiritual element in nature. Men will not deny God in the future, but there is a real danger lest they should interpret Him according to their own inclinations, acknowledging His lower law of instinct and ignoring His higher law of the triumph of the spiritual over the merely natural.

In the meantime, our course is a clear one. It is to recall men to the spiritual. Some of the modern lack of earnestness has sprung from the very progress we have made. We are all more tolerant, more kind, more large in our hopes and sympathies. It seems to many as though there were less call to be strenuous. We need to emphasise the fact that a mere vague acquiescence in God's natural order and an intelligent appreciation of His cosmic wisdom are not sufficient to counteract certain very real tendencies to evil in man. We have to remind men emphatically that God Himself thought the life of man was so tainted that it needed a stupendous remedy and the infusion of a New Life. We have to repeat that all forms of Natural Religion are inadequate to the facts and real stress of life, and that the Revealed Faith is not a beautiful addition to the belief in God, but the one only adequate means of comprehending Him.

The task of our generation is to bring back to this great truth a great multitude of well-meaning people who have been blinded, not by Atheism, but by a false opinion of the adequacy of a vague Theism, to satisfy the needs of the human soul.

The remedy for want of enthusiasm in religion is to bring men back to the Living Christ; and if we should find that the Living Christ looks somewhat coldly on some of our present ways of showing our devotion, and reminds us of some plain but forgotten truths of social duty, why, then, we may be sure of this, that not only our own but others' enthusiasm will be fired in proportion as we strive after a more exact and more loving obedience.

A LEGEND.

It is always an ungrateful task to expose the baselessness of a harmless legend which may become venerable by mere lapse of time, but truth compels us to protest against the statement which has somehow become current that the Bishop laboured with his own hands at the erection of Bishop's College. The Bishop is indeed an expert carpenter, and would doubtless have found recreation in such an employment, but as a matter of fact he had no time for any such thing, being fully occupied with more directly episcopal work. As the legend has already found its way into at least two serious books, it is time in the interests of truth that it should be if possible scotched before it becomes so firmly established that it will be vain to deny it. A recent book states that our students are men of more than ordinary ability. This is a reputation which they have never claimed, nor has any one claimed for them. They are plain men, of, we hope, ordinary ability, who desire to devote whatever gifts they have to God's service, but we do not desire to sail under any false colours.

News of the Parishes.

THURSDAY ISLAND.

During part of September and October the Vicar of the parish was away in the Gulf country, visiting Normanton, Croydon, and Burketown. The Bishop was in residence at Thursday Island, and took duty at the Cathedral on the Sundays named.

The marriage of Mr. E. J. Hennessy with Miss L. E. Langman was quietly celebrated at the Cathedral on Saturday evening, October 11th, by the Bishop of the Diocese. Both Mr. and Mrs. Hennessy are popular young residents of the Island, and we wish them many happy years of wedded life.

The Hon. John Douglas has returned to the Island after a trip to the Old Country, and once more assumed his position as Government Resident and Police Magistrate. We heartily welcome Mr. Douglas' return. His interest in Church matters and in all that affects the welfare of our people makes his presence a real power for good amongst us.

We also note the return of other friends to the Island, among whom is Mrs. Reid, whose valuable help in the Choir, Society of the Treasury, and the Japanese work is of great assistance to us.

The great event of the quarter has been the Laying of the Foundation Stone of the Parish Institute. This happy ceremony took place on Saturday, November 8th, in the presence of a large assemblage of our people. A special Service was arranged for the occasion, during which the stone was placed in position by Mr. Douglas, who used the following words:—"In the Faith of Jesus Christ, we lay the Foundation Stone of this Parish Institute in connection with All Souls' Quetta Memorial Cathedral, Thursday Island: In the Name of God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost. Amen." Addresses were then given by the Rev. W. P. Glover, Messrs. Douglas, Bennett, and Murray, during which offerings amounting to £42 19s. 9d. were placed upon the stone. The Service closed with the "Grace," after which the Vicar and Churchwardens entertained those present to afternoon tea in the Church grounds. The laying of the foundation stone was a most happy event, and one which shows how earnestly our people desire to further the work of the Church in the parish. The exact state of the Parish Institute Fund to date is as follows:—Amount promised, £327 4s. 1d.; cost of building, £310. Deducting incidental expenses, we are thus left with a credit balance of some £10, which will go towards the cost of furnishing the Hall. It is confidently anticipated that further subscriptions will be received, so that the expense of furnishing—say £40—will be covered in due time. We heartily congratulate the parishioners on the splendid response which they have made in connection with the building of the Institute.

The Marble Font, which has been erected in the Cathedral as a memorial to the late Rev. James Chalmers, of New Guinea, by his friends at Thursday Island, was dedicated on Sunday evening, the 9th November. There was a crowded congregation, and all seemed interested in the solemn Service of Dedication. The Vicar preached on the occasion, and made special reference to the font as the symbol of belief in the Holy Trinity; as a constant reminder of the Church's Mission; and as a fitting memorial of one who had spent his life in the devoted cause of Missionary enterprise. The design of the font is in keeping with the architecture of the Cathedral, and forms a beautiful addition to the furnishings of the Church. Its cost is £40, of which amount over £37 have been subscribed by our Church and townspeople.

A handsome Altar Prayer Desk, partly subscribed for by the children of the Sunday School, has been given to the Cathedral. It bears the following inscription:—"In Memoriam, Herbert Curwen Gale. Died 12th January, 1901. Blessed are the pure in heart." An Altar Prayer Book also accompanies the memorial.

The idea of beautifying the Church with gifts for use therein is a very beautiful as well as a very practical one. All Church furniture has a certain symbolical meaning, emphasizing certain great truths in the economy of redemption and the beauty of worship. It is a sacred duty, therefore, to adorn God's House with the best and most fitting furnishings, for not only do such things remind us of God's dealings with us in grace, but they enable us the better to render an acceptable worship unto Him. The solemn dedication of all Church ornaments witnesses to another great fact—that what our Heavenly Father desires is the dedication of ourselves, our souls and bodies, to His service. The more, then, we adorn our Church the more real should become our worship.

We have had a busy quarter with the "boys" in the Melanesian Home. Numbers of them have recently come from the South in search of work on the boats. The Home has now become a centre for the Melanesians from all parts. The night classes are always well attended. Miss Buchanan has been busily engaged teaching the "boys" Christmas hymns during the last few weeks.

Final arrangements have been made for the "Arcadian Fête" which is to be held in January, in order to provide funds for the erection of the Church fence. The Fête will take place in the Parish Institute, which will, no doubt, add to the auspicious ceremony of its official opening. We earnestly trust that the efforts of the ladies who have worked so hard in the interests of the Fête will be rewarded by the realization of a sufficient amount to accomplish the fencing of the Church grounds.

CROYDON.

St. Margaret's.—Since our last, we have not been allowed to go to sleep; changes and interchanges have followed closely one upon another. The accident to our Rector, Rev. Godfrey H. Smith's knee, referred to in October issue, proved more serious than was at first anticipated. He started overland, intending to meet the steamer at Cairns and go to Thursday Island for a short rest, but the knee became so troublesome on the journey that he returned to Croydon, when his medical adviser told him that it had become imperative that he take at least three months' absolute rest, and that it would facilitate his recovery to get away to the more genial conditions of the South, whereupon Mr. Smith decided to go to his home in Melbourne, where everything would be done to promote a speedy recovery. On the eve of his (Mr. Smith's) departure, at the close of the monthly meeting of the Wardens and Parochial Council, Mr. G. Bechtet, Churchwarden, on behalf of the Parishioners, presented the Rector with a purse of sovereigns as a token of good-will, also expressed, in a few kindly words, the sympathies of the inhabitants generally at the unfortunate position in which the Rector found himself. Others also testified as to his zeal and earnestness, also of the influence for good of his life and example in the community, all wishing him a prosperous journey and a speedy return in health and strength.

At the beginning of October we were favoured with a visit by the Rev. W. P. Glover, the Diocesan Secretary, from Thursday Island, who spent ten days in the Parish, conducting Services at St. Margaret's and St. John's (Golden Gate). The visit was greatly appreciated by the Parishioners; the only regret being that it was too short.

On Sundays, November 9th and 30th, the Rev. W. Hudson, M.A., of Normanton, came to us, administering Holy Communion and conducting Services at St. Margaret's and St. John's, and was welcomed by appreciative congregations. We feel grateful to the Rev. W. Hudson, coming to us in the absence of our Rector, at so great inconvenience to himself.

A few days before Rev. Mr. Smith left for the South, Mr. W. M. Wilkinson arrived, to help on the work of the Parish, thus freeing Mr. F. C. Hall to proceed to Bishops College, Thursday Island, to enter upon his College course and training for ordination. Mr. Hall left on November 28th, after fifteen months' zealous, earnest work in the Parish, taking with him the good wishes of all for his future advancement and success.

The annual exodus from Croydon for the summer months has taken some of our workers and thinned the congregations. Some, we hear, go not to return. Amongst these is Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Watson and family, who have always taken a lively interest in the affairs of the Church. We wish them God-speed and every happiness in their new surroundings. We shall miss them greatly.

It is very gratifying to be able to state that St. Margaret's Church has received its much-needed painting. In response to an appeal by the Rector, the matter was taken up with much interest, the necessary funds collected, and the contract let in a short space of time.

St. John's, Golden Gate.—The Services here are being maintained with fluctuating interest. Much credit is due to those earnest, faithful workers, who refuse to be discouraged. May they keep on; they will assuredly be rewarded in due course. When will those who make the general depression and bad times an excuse for lack of interest in the Church of God come to know that the Church is God's channel, to supply strength and encouragement, and meet our every condition. The work has been almost solely under the charge of Mr. Hall, who has also been superintendent of the Sunday School, and gone out twice a-week to give religious instruction to scholars, before attending day-school.

PORT DARWIN.

The Bishop of the Diocese arrived here on Thursday, October 30th, and on the following Saturday he met the members of the Parochial Council, to complete the legal arrangements for the consecration of the new Church. In the morning the children performed a Fairy Operetta, before His Lordship, the Resident, and a full house, in the Town Hall.

On Sunday, November 2nd, the Church was consecrated. The Bishop, attended by the Hon. Lay Readers, Messrs. H. Wilson and C. H. Davis, was received at the Church door by the Rector and Wardens. Mr. W. C. Langdon read the Petition for Consecration, then the procession moved up the aisle to the Sanctuary, while the Choir sang the opening psalm. Mr. F. J. H. Ferriss read the Deeds of the Church, and the Rector the sentence of Consecration. Afterwards Tours' Choral Communion Service was sung, and a very impressive address given by the Bishop. All our Communicants were present, and the Church was filled with a reverent and attentive congregation. The building was tastefully decorated with pot plants and the Altar with cut flowers, provided by the ladies.

On Thursday, November 6th, the Bishop delivered in the Town Hall a lecture on "Some Modern Difficulties in Religious Belief." There was a very fair attendance of men.

On Friday, November 7th, the Bishop visited Pine Creek, and on the following Sunday conducted a Confirmation Service in the Mission Church at 10.30 a.m. In the afternoon he addressed the Sunday scholars and distributed cards for regular attendance. In the evening there was again a good congregation. During his visit the Bishop gave an illustrated lecture, with views from the Bible, and a selection of the English Cathedrals. The lecture was greatly appreciated. After visiting all the inhabitants, the Bishop took the 8 a.m. train on November 12th for Burrundie. There he held a Service and stayed with Mr. Beckwith. On the following day he was driven twelve miles, to Yam Creek. Here he conducted Service at Mr. Roberts' house, and gave a lecture. From Yam Creek he drove twelve miles to Brock's Creek, and held a Confirmation Service for a candidate.

On Saturday, November 15th, he returned to Palmerston, and at 8.30 p.m. conducted a Service of Reception into the Anglican Church for nine of the Confirmation Candidates.

On Sunday, November 16th, a very impressive Confirmation was held. There were twenty candidates (eleven males and nine females, sixteen being adults). This was the first Confirmation ever held in Palmerston, and the way the Service was conducted left nothing to be desired. The candidates were reverent and very attentive, and the choir sang the hymns in perfect feeling with the occasion. The Church was decorated with flowers, and we believe the recollections of the Service will long remain in the memory. In the afternoon the Bishop was present while the children of the Catechism (St. Sulpice method) were examined in their work since last December. They also sang very nicely some special M.S. tunes. The Bishop afterwards spoke some words of encouragement. We were glad to see so many parents present.

On the following Monday the Bishop gave an address to mothers on the responsibilities of training children, and spoke in praise of the Mothers' Union. Perhaps we may be able to form a local branch of this most excellent Society.

On Wednesday, the 19th, all the lately confirmed and several others attended a Service of Preparation for the Holy Communion.

On Thursday, the 20th, the Bishop presided over a representative meeting of parents and friends interested in Higher Education, to enquire into the possibility of supplying such for the children of this District. An influential committee of ladies and gentlemen was constituted to make enquiries and obtain information from the various educational centres, and if necessary, issue a prospectus.

On Friday, the 21st, the Bishop conducted a "Quiet Day." Holy Communion was celebrated at 7 a.m., and addresses given from 9 to 11 and 2 to 4.

On Sunday, 23rd, there were twenty-nine Communicants at 7.30 a.m., when most of the newly Confirmed received their first Communion. The Bishop preached at 10 a.m., and also Evensong. At the latter Service, he expressed his great satisfaction at the progress that had been made by the Church at Palmerston. It was less than two years since his first visit, and they had now a Church and Clergyman of their own, and no parochial debt. He was especially pleased at the spirit of self-help shown by the people. The Bishop also referred to Religious Education and Divorce, and concluded by urging the people to show their Christian faith in a practical way in their lives.

NORMANTON.

The Rector went to Croydon on Sundays, November 9th and November 30th, to celebrate the Holy Communion, in the absence, through illness, of the Rector, Rev. G. H. Smith.

A sum of £90 has been collected for the enlargement of the Rectory.

An Entertainment was, by Mr. Millar's kind permission, held at his house. It was a great success, and resulted in £33 for the Rectory Fund.

The Rectory is being lengthened by the addition of two rooms, and an additional verandah at the back.

Church work is progressing steadily and quietly under the diligent care of the Rector.

PALMERSTON CHURCH.

The people of Palmerston are to be most heartily congratulated on the erection of their Church, which was consecrated by the Bishop on November 2nd. It is less than two years since the work of the Church was revived at Port Darwin, after the lapse of all Church ministrations whatever for twelve years. It has been emphatically a case of people helping themselves. Lay Services were commenced immediately after the Bishop's first visit, and carried on until the arrival of the Rector, a year later. In the meantime the people were hard at work collecting funds and preparing for a most successful Sale of Work, carried out without any aid from illegitimate means of raising money. A site in the main street, and overlooking the harbour, was bought, together with a quantity of building stone, for a sum of £230, and Mr. Andrews generously undertook to design and superintend the erection of a Church. This was built of yellow sandstone, with concrete floor and mullions, and the result is a remarkably handsome building, erected at a cost which, we fear, must have left the contractor on the wrong side, but that he appears to be quite satisfied with, regarding his part as contributing to the general effort. The interior measurements are 45ft x 22½ft., and the Church seats, comfortably, 130 people. The contract price was £450, and the seats and fittings have cost about £50 more, so that the total cost is £730. Everything has been paid for, and funds are in hand towards the erection of a fence, and other additions and improvements. Mr. Andrews, at some cost to his architectural feelings, has introduced four double doors on each side of the building, with the result that the Church, which stands exposed to the sea breeze, is the coolest place to be found in the town. We were especially pleased to see the large number of adult candidates (10 male and 10 female in all) who presented themselves for Confirmation. It means a good deal for so many prominent business men to come forward and kneel humbly and publicly to receive the Church's blessing; and we are sure that the good effects of their conscientious determination will not soon pass away. The Rector of the parish, Rev. H. P. Gocher, must have been much cheered to observe the fruits of his faithful advocacy of the Church's methods.

THE GULF PARISHES.

At the Bishop's request, the Rev. W. P. Glover visited the Gulf territory during September and October. Mr. Glover reports concerning his trip:—Leaving Thursday Island by the "Maranoa" on Tuesday, 23rd September, I arrived in Normanton on the following Friday. Here we had a Service in St. Peter's Church the same night, during which the Rev. W. Hudson—the newly appointed Rector—was inducted to the charge of the parish. The Service was hearty, although the attendance was not so large as it would have been had the local District Court not been sitting at the time. Mr. Hudson has already actively entered upon the work of his cure, and signs of new life are distinctly apparent in Church matters. On the Saturday morning I took train to Croydon, and on arrival there was met by the Churchwardens and Parochial Councillors, who warmly welcomed me to the parish. For two weeks or more I relieved the Rev. Godfrey Smith, who had gone to Georgetown and district. During my stay in Croydon I was enabled to meet many of the Church and townspeople, and also to visit Golden Gate. At the latter place a small Church has been built, and of a Sunday evening a fairly good congregation assembles to worship therein. The building is free of debt. Mr. and Mrs. Andrews take a lively interest in the Church at the Gate, and their valuable help is undoubtedly a source of encouragement to all concerned. At Croydon itself much progress has been made despite many drawbacks. The Church is a very fine cedar building, and it is now undergoing repairs and improvements in the way of painting, etc. The evening congregation is good, but the same cannot be said with respect to the morning attendance. The Sunday School is well attended, and good work is being done therein by a devoted band of teachers. The Rev. G. H. Smith and his assistant, Mr. F. C. Hall, have, I should say, greatly changed the aspect of Church life in this parish, although there yet remains a vast amount of work to be developed. On Monday morning, the 6th October, I was on my way back to Normanton, in order to take boat to Burketown. At the former place I attended a Parochial Meeting, and was glad to learn that the Church folk were bent on improving their Rectory. All seemed desirous of raising sufficient money for this purpose by direct means—a sign, indeed, of an ardent desire on the part of our people to fall in with our Bishop's principle of avoiding questionable methods of gathering Church funds. A two days' trip in the "Dugong" brought me to the Albert Bar, where I was transhipped to a lighter, on which I remained a whole day with the men in charge. Then in the evening the "Water Lily" came out for us and towed us up the Albert River, landing me at Burketown Wharf about five o'clock on Thursday morning. Mr. and Mrs. A. S. L. Wells kindly offered me hospitality, and for a week I was able to visit the people of this remote town. It was my privilege to look up almost everyone in the place, and all were zealous in affording a welcome to me. Burketown is by no means an undesirable district to live in; its climate is somewhat warm, of course; it is also isolated; but it possesses certain advantages which atone for these drawbacks. The district, however, has been sadly neglected by our Church in past years. In fact, until our own Bishop visited it two years ago, the people had not seen a clergyman of the Church of England for some fourteen years. Mr. W. R. Wilkinson had visited the place a short time before my arrival, and when another representative of the Church came upon the scene in the person of myself, many began to think that the prevailing drought had driven us from other parts to seek relief in the more favoured district round the Albert River. To illustrate the isolation of some of the people in these parts, one might mention the following: One good woman informed me that she had only been to Church once in her life. Moreover, she had hitherto seldom seen a clergyman, and expressed the greatest surprise at the sight of a clean-shaven representative of the Church of England. It is difficult to realize some of the things one sees and hears in the remote parts of a Diocese like our own. There can be no doubt that our Church should have its representative stationed at Burketown. The district is, I believe, capable of partly supporting a man, and if the Diocese could see its way clear to do its part, the difficulty would be solved. But, after all, the question resolves itself into this—"Whom shall I send? Who will go?" That is the real difficulty which confronts our Bishop at all times, and effectually bars the Diocese from doing its duty to its scattered people. However, let us hope that some strong helper may soon be found for work in our bush centres—especially in and around this district.

I had only one Sunday in Burketown, on which we held three Services in the Divisional Board Hall, kindly placed at our disposal by the members of the Board. At eight o'clock in the morning we had a Celebration of the Holy Communion, with five communicants; in the afternoon a Children's Service; and in the evening a goodly congregation of men and women. Miss Frostick keeps up a little Sunday School at Burketown, and her self-denying efforts have already been rewarded by happy results in the way of the children's progress. We found much sickness in the district; many people suffering from fever. In this connection one cannot withhold an expression of appreciation of the good offices of both Mr. and Mrs. Wells, who, in the absence of a doctor, do all in their power to relieve the sufferers and succour the distressed.

There seems to be a large number of blacks round Burketown, and many of them are employed by the residents to perform certain household duties.

An interesting feature of my trip was a visit to the Meat Works, close to which an old tree stands bearing the inscription: Dig 2ft. N. It is a relic, I am told, of the relief party sent out to search for the ill-fated Burke and Wills' exploration party. I was fortunate enough to secure a photograph of the tree, which has now been enclosed by a fence.

The return trip by the "Water Lily" was something not to be forgotten. We left Burketown on the Wednesday night and did not get on to the "Maranoa" till Saturday afternoon. The full distance travelled in that time was not more than 30 odd miles, so that most of the time was spent at anchor in a rolling sea. When I mention the fact that the "Water Lily" has no accommodation whatever for the travelling public in the way of cabins, beds, etc., some idea will be gained of the inconvenience of travelling in the Gulf waters.

One can sympathize, indeed, with the difficulties of the Bishop, who, in the exercise of his episcopal functions, must necessarily be in "journeyings" often in these parts.

I arrived at Thursday Island on Tuesday, October 21st, after a month's absence, which was profitably, I hope, and not altogether unpleasantly spent.

ILLNESS OF REV. G. SMITH.

We are extremely sorry to have to report the illness of Rev. G. H. Smith. Mr. Smith injured his knee on the way to Georgetown, and made it worse by his strenuous efforts to perform his duties in spite of his disablement. Finally the doctor said that the most serious effects would ensue, unless absolute rest and quiet were immediately adopted, and Mr. Smith left for Melbourne on three months' sick leave, on October 16th. We sincerely trust that he will soon be restored to health. The doctor's orders were so peremptory, that it was not possible for Mr. Smith to await a locum tenens, and much work and responsibility has been thrown on Mr. W. M. Wilkinson, whom he left in charge of the services.

A DIALOGUE.

PARSON (arriving at small bush township in the North-West, to Old Bushman, who looks as though he had been enjoying himself after his own fashion): "Good-day!"

O.B.: "Good-day, your reverence, I hope you will preach something hot and strong to-night; the people here want a lot of reforming."

PARSON (slightly annoyed): "Well, my friend, let us begin with you. Why don't you knock off drinking whisky?"

O.B. (gravely): "I do not drink whisky."

PARSON (thinks to himself that he has put his foot into it and unjustly judged by mere appearances; recollects, however, that in difficulties it is generally best to stick to your guns, and so proceeds): "What do you drink, then?"

O.B. (with a far-off look in the eyes): "Square!"

PARSON: "Why, then, don't you knock off drinking gin?"

O.B.: "Well, your reverence, I am a God-fearing man, and so I can always find someone to lend me a shilling. If I were one of your blatant atheists, I could never find anyone to trust me."

PARSON (wondering where exactly such a reason for righteousness would come in in his text books): "I see!"

has been considerably enlarged at a cost of about £120. The Bishop visited a number of Church people and left on Tuesday morning for Croydon.

Here Mr. Wilkinson has been doing yeoman's service during the enforced absence of the Rector. On Christmas Day the Bishop took an early Celebration of Holy Communion at St. Margaret's, and then drove out to Golden Gate subjects for Ordination. On Wednesday the Bishop met the Parochial Council of St. Peter's, Normanton, and on Thursday held a Quiet Day. On Saturday he left, and after a smooth passage in spite of the threatening skies, arrived in Thursday Island on the following Tuesday.

On Wednesday, Jan. 22, the Bishop opened the Parish Institute, and a meeting of the Diocesan Council was held on Saturday, Jan.

BISHOP'S COLLEGE.

The Bishop's Movements.

The Bishop left Thursday Island on Dec. 16th by s.s. "Maranoa" to visit Croydon, as the Rector was still detained in Melbourne by his injured knee. An unusually quick passage was made, the "Dugong" arriving at Normanton about 1 a.m. on 19th. He was met by Rev. W. Hudson, M.A., and was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Millar. On Sunday the Bishop preached in the morning and evening, and gave a short address to the Sunday School teachers, in which he said he was pleased to note the large increase in their numbers. The spiritual work of the parish has been carried on vigorously since Rev. W. Hudson's arrival six months ago, and the Rectory, which was very small and hot, for a Celebration there, returning to Croydon just in time for Morning Prayer and a second Celebration at St. Margaret's at 11 a.m. There was a good congregation also in the evening, when the Bishop preached. On the Sunday after Christmas the Bishop preached at Golden Gate in the morning and Croydon in the evening, and during the week he addressed the late confirmees, met the Parochial Council, and held a Quiet Day on January 1. The heat was excessive during the whole of Christmas week, registering 110 degrees in the shade almost every day. On the following Sunday he preached at Croydon in the morning and Golden Gate in the evening, and left for Normanton on the following Tuesday, after visiting a large number of Church people. During his stay the Bishop examined Mr. Wilkinson in the first half of his 31, at which Rev. W. P. Glover, and Messrs. Bennett, Hodder, and Murray were present. On Feb. 3 the Bishop and Miss White left by the s.s. "Cintra" for Cooktown, where on Feb. 6th the Bishop confirmed 13 candidates; leaving the following evening for Cairns. Here the day was spent in visiting Yarrabah Mission Station, the journey being much facilitated by the new launch, which works well. Cairns was left the same evening, and Townsville reached the next morning. In the evening the Bishop preached at the Cathedral, leaving the following day for Brisbane.

The Bishop, during his stay in Brisbane, interviewed the Minister for Lands and other officials with regard to the Mitchell River Aboriginal Reserve, and left on Friday afternoon by the "s.s. Cintra," arriving in Sydney on Sunday morning. In the evening the Bishop preached at St. John's, Darlinghurst. On Monday he attended an important meeting of the Executive of the Board of Missions, and in the evening addressed a Missionary Meeting at St. John's. On Tuesday he spoke at a meeting of lady workers at St. Paul's College, and on Wednesday left for Goulburn.

FREDERICK OF CANTERBURY.

[Communicated.]

The grand old voice is silent, and the old fighter has won his rest. Some ten years ago I asked an English Bishop whom he considered to be the strongest man in the English Church. "There is only one strong man in the English Church," was the reply, "and that is the Bishop of London (Dr. Temple)." It was strength that was the most obvious feature of the man. It came out in his rugged features, and still more rugged speech; physical strength that never admitted weariness, moral strength born of intense conviction, intellectual strength so that he feared no wit as he feared no face. Yet behind it all there was a strange tenderness which deepened with years. Even as Bishop of Exeter he was a true father to his clergy. The son of one of them, I was taken by him at the age of eleven to see the Bishop. I trembled at the stern face and could scarcely answer the few questions in Latin Grammar that he put to me without an instant's delay. He dismissed us with no promise, but I found afterwards that he had gone to some trouble to secure me a nomination for a school scholarship on which hung all my future. More than twenty years later I saw him again, and with my name he instantly recalled the matter, saying, with a twinkle of the eye, "I hope I did not frighten you." He was a typical Englishman—blunt, honest, resolute, absolutely the same to king and to workman. Perhaps his intellectual strength was not fully appreciated because he wrote little, and did not seek controversy, but his utterances had that quiet, simple, forceful character to which only great minds can attain. It is idle to bewail his loss, or grudge him his recall. It was of the essence of his teaching that each man should quietly do his very best, undeterred by failure and unshaken by prophecies of evil to come, and the best tribute we can pay to his memory is to strive to be God's men even as he was assuredly God's man in the old sense of whole-hearted service. G.C.

PRESENTATION OF PASTORAL STAFF TO THE BISHOP.

After Evensong at St. James' Cathedral, Townsville, on Sunday, February 8th, a meeting of the Guild was held to present a Pastoral Staff to the Bishop of Carpentaria, a former President. In the absence of Archdeacon Pritt, who was laid up with an attack of pneumonia, the Staff was presented by Mr. Gulliver, on behalf of the members of the Guild. The Bishop replied as follows:—

My dear old friends,

I have to thank you from my heart for the gift you have given me, one that will be of very real service, and will always remind me of you at that most solemn moment when I am called upon to pronounce, in God's name, the "blessing of peace."

Many most happy memories gather round this your Guild; happy because they recall hours of effort to understand and realise more clearly what was meant by the service of God.

I am one of those who do not believe that much permanent good can be accomplished by working on a great scale. Popular preaching, rousing missions, exciting controversies, may sometimes carry us forward a little, but I believe that the most real religious progress comes from the centre and not from the circumference. The real progress of a parish depends most largely on the little band of earnest communicants who are not ashamed to begin with themselves, to try to deepen and make more real their own spiritual life before they attempt to influence others.

Personally I believe that nothing has more practical effect than the efforts of the few sincerely believing souls who meet to watch, and work, and pray for priest and people.

Modern science has impressed upon us the power of germs; has shown us how one poison germ will multiply until it destroys the vitality of the blood; and how, under other conditions, germs of health will multiply until they overmaster those of disease.

Our Master knew what He meant when He said, "a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump," for good as for evil, and if the Kingdom of Heaven be a leaven it is to be found in those who believe most faithfully, pray most earnestly, and unite most closely in brotherly love.

I have not been able to follow the history of your Guild of late years, but at the time of which I am thinking I believe that we were at least trying to be as faithful as we could, and I know that it brought happiness to many of us. Those who have not tried it do not know, and therefore absurdly underestimate the pure happiness to be derived from community of religious effort, but I know that I need not remind many of you of the fact.

I shall, as I have said, value your gift as a reminder of the St. James' Guild, which is linked to me not only by the tie of which I have spoken, but by the memory of one who took a keen interest in your work, but who, when this was decided upon, had already passed from the earthly communion to the unseen communion of the blessed. I thank you again most sincerely for your valuable and valued gift.

The Staff is of silver and ebony, of simple but graceful design, made light in order to be easily carried about, and is contained in a handsome case.

THE NEW ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY.

The new Archbishop, Right Rev. Randall Thomas Davidson, is comparatively young, being only 55. He was chaplain to Archbishop Tait, and afterwards to Archbishop Benson. He has thus an intimate knowledge of the world-wide work of the occupant of the See of Canterbury. He is the author of a History of the Lambeth Conferences, and of a Life of Archbishop Tait.

He is admittedly the foremost of our ecclesiastical statesmen, and has governed his Diocese with firmness and sympathy. In 1900 he declared, in the House of Lords, that out of his 566 clergy, "there was not a Church which was defying the authority he had exerted . . . there was not a single incumbent who had declined to obey the guidance he had given about ritual observance." His polished and courtly manners are in striking contrast to the stern, rugged simplicity of his predecessor, but there is no reason to suppose that he will show himself a less faithful servant of the Church.

THE MITCHELL RIVER ABORIGINAL MISSION.

The Government has at length proclaimed an Aboriginal Reserve between the Mitchell and Nassau Rivers, and the way is thus opened out for the Mission to the Aborigines to be taken in hand. The Reserve proclaimed is in appearance a large tract of country, but in reality it is very much smaller than it appears, about half being taken up by occupation licenses, with which the Government does not propose to interfere. With one exception these all occupy the southern half of the Reserve, and will not interfere with the isolation of the rest of the Reserve if their positions are laid down correctly, a point which seems to be open to some doubt, as the country has not been surveyed. The northern, western, and unoccupied part of the Reserve consists of low, swampy country, forming the delta of the Mitchell. It is intersected by several arms of the river, and produces, plentifully, lily roots, wild rice, and other native food. It is, however, subject to flood, and it will probably be necessary to form a permanent Mission Station at some distance from the coast. Owing to the wildness of the natives, whose numbers are estimated by Sub-inspector Galbraith at 2000, and our ignorance of the country, it will be necessary to proceed gradually and not to attempt anything on a large scale until the country has been thoroughly explored, the confidence of the natives gained, and the country tested both during the wet and the dry season. We strongly hold that the Mission Station will be great benefit to the neighbouring settlers and station men, who are at present continually complaining of the presence of the blacks on their runs. If, however, the large numbers of natives are to be restricted to one Reserve, it is obvious that it must be of sufficient size to enable them to live, otherwise the evil will be but intensified. It is needless to say that we are in no way antagonistic to the holders of occupation licenses.

While in Sydney the Bishop met the Executive Council of the Board of Missions, and, in conjunction with the Bishop of North Queensland, who has been doing good service to the Diocese of Carpentaria during his brief visit to Melbourne, presented a memorandum on Aboriginal Mission work, which has been accepted by that body. The Mitchell River Mission will be worked in conjunction with the Yarrabah Mission; but the Diocese of Carpentaria will hold itself responsible for a considerable proportion of the expense. We hope to be able to bear about a third of it. In addition to this the Bishop has undertaken to devote a month every other year to pleading for the Aboriginal work in the South, the Bishop of North Queensland supplying the alternate years. It is hoped that if a suitable superintendent can be found an expedition may be formed in four or five months' time to break ground and enter into relations with the natives.

THE FUTURE OF PROTESTANTISM.

The Church Eclectic for November quotes an interesting article by Rev. R. M. Raab, entitled, "Will Protestantism in America survive its present policy?" The writer deprecates the intention of attacking any phase of religion, but says that he writes because he feels that the present policy of Protestantism, if persisted in, must wreck it as a system. We do not know what Mr. Raab's own position is, but he appears to be an earnest and sincere Nonconformist. His charges against Protestantism are:

"I. The Past Decade has Witnessed a Powerful Reaction among Protestants against Dogmatic Teaching.

To some this may appear to be clear gain for Protestantism. Without arguing this point in detail, two facts show that this loss of dogmatic teaching is a sign of declension rather than of gain. The first fact is this: all faiths, false as well as true, that have received wide currency among men, have been propagated through dogmatic teaching. Christ was a dogmatist; His teaching was positive and uncompromising. The other fact is this: the doctrines concerning which Protestants speak with equivocation are basic doctrines in their system. Note the pulpit utterances on the doctrine of the Cross of Christ, on the present lost condition of non-Christian men, on the hopeless loss of men dying in enmity to God.

The Church's opposition to dogma has almost wrecked the ministry; for if there is one thing religionists of our time object to it is hard thinking on religion. And dogma calls for just that thing. The moment a church or a minister takes the attitude of apology, as the one appropriate to its message (or to his message), that moment marks the beginning of defeat. The widespread contempt for religion is due, in large measure, to the temporizing, apologetic attitude of Protestantism.

II. Protestants are Seeking to Atone for a Vanishing Faith in the Supernatural by Relying on the Material.

This is common in the history of religion. The deepest declension in real faith is often accompanied by a splendid material externalism. The Hebrews were never more punctilious in worshipping Jehovah, in a formal way, than when they had inwardly rejected Him. Formalism is the device of a dead faith. Splendid church buildings, fine organs, cultivated voices, faultless sermons, delicate prayers, make up for the lack of religion among multitudes of Protestants.

III. Protestantism is Vacating its Distinction between the Church and the World.

It is a growing reproach to Protestantism that it is treating as religious men who are not religious and are known to be the opposite. This is a surrender of the fundamental doctrine of Protestantism, that religion is a matter of personal choice and experience, and can never be ascribed to a man who persists in badness. Right conduct, according to the true position of Protestants, must accompany a religious profession. The whole question of discipline in Protestant churches rests on this simple thesis. But Protestants are not standing by this thesis. In our city churches they are morally unfit to stand by it; for it is just these churches that live according to a worldly, rather than a religious standard. Surely no one desires to institute a fictitious distinction between the church and the world. The Founder of Christianity is responsible for the distinction; and it is perfectly plain that there must be a characteristic difference between a religious man and an irreligious man, if there is any reality in religion. But just now Protestants are tending to vacate the distinction, with the logical prospect before them of denying the reality of religion.

IV. Protestants are encouraging Radical attacks upon the Bible under the fictitious Name of Investigation.

Upon the surface the claim that religion can lose nothing by investigation is simple and rational. On the other hand, no true man is awakened to gratitude by the assertion that investigation has disproven an article of his faith, when he knows that it has done no such thing. Protestantism is being split to pieces by men who claim to follow the path of true investigation, but who really indulge in attack.

It is a fact, too patent to require proof, that Protestantism is doomed if the Bible is untrustworthy. The defence of Protestantism can never proceed on the ground of speculation; for speculation is oftener atheistic than theistic. The whole right of Protestantism to exist as a system of doctrine is derived from the Bible and defended by the Bible. Now for Protestants to support men in attacking the Scriptures is to lend aid to their own overthrow.

To the Bible Protestants have assigned a unique message, a unique authority. They have held that the Biblical message is final and infallible.

Criticism denies the inspiration of the Bible, in a distinguishing sense; it denies its inherent authority; it denies its finality; and, of course, rejects the infallibility of the Biblical message. But where will Protestants stand if they encourage the destruction of their own faith in the Bible?

We think that there is much to ponder over in the above words.

Our own Church is indeed saved from many of the dangers indicated above so long as her children are true to her teaching, but how many professing Churchmen are there who are ready to run into the very perils which are, as Mr. Raab thinks, ready to destroy Protestantism.

Our Church is dogmatic, but we constantly hear the cry: "No dogma! No definite Church teaching! Let us be broad-minded—and vague."

Our Church insists on the supernatural; on the mysteries of the Faith; on the grace of Order and Sacrament; on the need of Self-examination, Penitence, and Prayer. Yet are we not all only too familiar with the spirit within our own borders, that judges by popularity and material results alone, and dislikes all mystery.

Our Church lays down most clearly in the preface and Exhortation to the office of Holy Communion, that a man cannot be an open and notorious evil liver, an adulterer or a hinderer of God's Word, or one who has wronged his neighbour by word or deed, and yet be considered a religious man; but we all know how keenly any attempt at discipline is resented, and imputed as an offence to charity.

Our Church appeals to Holy Scripture as containing all things necessary to salvation; yet, unhappily, the Editor of the Encyclopædia

Biblica, which in the case of one contributor actually denies any special inspiration to the Holy Gospels, is a clergyman of our own Church.

Mr. Raab's conclusion is that

"V. Protestantism is in need of a thorough Reformation."

He does not indicate the lines of the proposed reformation, but to a Churchman they seem obviously to be:

1. A return to the great body of definite Catholic, as opposed to Roman Catholic, truth, from which many well-meaning persons have been frightened away, because, thank God! Roman Catholics have held largely to it while importing also many gratuitous and never-to-be-too-much-protested-against errors of their own.

2. A return to a simpler and more childlike, not childish, faith in supernatural power of our Father in Heaven, and His use of supernatural means.

3. A more vigorous stand for a high moral standard. The laxity with which most Protestant bodies regard divorce is a case in point.

4. A deeper reverence for the Divine purpose in the Bible. While the older and less educated cling firmly to the letter of the text, it can scarcely be denied that among the younger ministers there is a tendency to base their teaching on humanitarian and theistic rather than on Biblical grounds. Criticism, if it be true, is indeed to be welcomed, but there is such a thing as an irrational criticism, so bent on jots and tittles that it loses sight of the weightier matters of the Law.

It would be wicked to deny the splendid earnestness, the solid learning, the complete self-devotion and true zeal for God of much modern as well as more ancient Protestant Nonconformity, but these facts should not blind us to the dangers of a system which, as it stands, ignores so much of the Faith once delivered to the saints, and so carries with it the cause of its ultimate decay.

AN EARLY STRAITS MISSIONARY.

In 1866 the S.P.G. sent out a clergyman and an industrial schoolmaster, Mr. Kennet, to the newly formed settlement of Somerset. The clergyman left his post after a few months, but Mr. Kennet stayed and devoted himself to efforts to improve the condition of the Aborigines. In spite of the suspicion caused by the harsh treatment which they had met with at the hands of the marines, he succeeded in winning their confidence and opened a school with eight children, and after a while a number of adults came. In May, 1867, a deputation arrived from the natives of Prince of Wales Island, asking Mr. Kennet to come over and teach them. He accordingly set out to pay them a visit, but on the way his canoe was upset, and he had to take refuge on a small island, where three days later he was found and rescued by the Prince of Wales natives, who treated him with the greatest kindness. A great coroboree was held, and Mr. Kennet was formally adopted by the chief as one of the tribe. The numbers at the School increased, and Mr. Kennet was enabled by his influence to compose several feuds between adjacent tribes, especially one of long standing between the Prince of Wales and the Mulgrave Islanders. In August, 1867, the Government, bent on petty economies, informed Mr. Kennet that his stipend as schoolmaster would no longer be paid, and he was obliged to return to England. (See S.P.G. Records and Preb. Tucker's "Under His Banner.")

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA,
NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. III.—No. 10. Thursday Island, April 1, 1903

THE LATE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY.

A man of iron frame, iron will, and yet iron malleability under the pressure of conviction, was Frederick Temple, late Primate of All England, and first noble in the land. The son of a soldier, he had a soldier's stern sense of duty and unflinching courage. As a school-master his character is summed up by the well-known saying of the smarting schoolboy: "Temple is a beast, but he is a just beast!" While still at Rugby he contributed the first essay 'on the Education of the World' to the well-known "Essays and Reviews." His own essay was unexceptionable, but some of the others were thought, not perhaps without some reason, to be of a dangerous latitude, and when in 1869 he was appointed Bishop of Exeter, a storm burst upon his head. He went up with pale set face to be consecrated in a Church where all looked on him with cold disapproval, but he went resolutely on his way, reorganised the Church, divided the huge Diocese, and when he was called to the See of London in 1885 hardly a voice was heard in opposition; and when eleven years later he was appointed Primate of All England, it was universally acknowledged that the strongest and noblest personality in the Church had been chosen for her highest office. In earlier years he was rough and brusque in manner, and innumerable stories are told of his treatment of fashionable or fastidious clerics. As years went on he softened and mellowed outwardly, while his heart remained as warm and kind as it had ever been; and he was deeply loved by all with whom he had to do. His great power lay in a certain powerful simplicity of spiritual conviction. He feared the face of no man, and he spoke his mind with refreshing directness even to the Sovereign. He was a typical 'working man,' with a brain of remarkable keenness and a soul of crystalline clearness. Every inch a man, he moved and swayed men by strength and will; and he ever moved them Godwards. We have lost the greatest personality in the Church; one of the few remaining of the great personalities of the past generation, and we may not grudge him his rest in the Paradise of God.

THE PARISH INSTITUTE, THURSDAY ISLAND.

The official opening of the Parish Institute, the foundation-stone of which was laid on November 8th of last year, took place on Wednesday night, the 21st January. A large gathering of parishioners and others was present. The Bishop of the Diocese performed the interesting ceremony of declaring the Institute open.

The Bishop said: It is with unusual pleasure that I undertake this evening the task of declaring this Institute open for the use of the parishioners of Thursday Island.

When now little more than two years ago I met you for the first time in the School of Arts, I told you that I had selected this place as the See town on account of my belief in its present and future importance, and I ventured further to express a hope that by degrees Church life might be so developed here that Thursday Island might become in time a kind of Iona, or island centre of religious life for the adjacent parts of North Australia.

So far I have not been disappointed. We have a beautiful Church, and our Services are, I think, worthy of our Church, while this building—with regard to which, in passing, one must note the excellent work done by the contractors—is an evidence on the material side of the progress of our parochial life.

In my hopes for the future I had reckoned on one all-important factor. I believed that the people of Thursday Island were of such a character that they would respond willingly to an honest call on their aid and sympathy, whether in material or spiritual matters.

I believed that there was in this place a real appreciation of the need of religion in daily life, and a generous readiness to respond to efficient religious effort.

I think that, when we consider the size of the place, the material results which have been, and are being achieved, are most encouraging and most creditable to the members of our Church, and to those who have assisted them so liberally.

There is one other factor, which I was then unable to count upon, but which I am quite sure you would not wish me to ignore. When we consider the unflagging energy, resolute devotion to duty, and unflinching courage with which your Vicar has discharged the duties of his office, we have an example which I think we shall admit has helped us all to a more serious view of life and its responsibilities, and a greater willingness to bear our burdens with faith and cheerfulness.

I congratulate you sincerely on the completion of this splendid building, without any debt so far as the structure is concerned, and I trust that the small extra expenses incurred for seating, lighting, etc., will soon be removed, and that you will be able to complete the flooring of the verandahs, wisely left unfinished rather than incur debt upon the structure.

With regard to the Sale of Work now about to be held, it is the result of much loving labour for the Church on the part of many who could not give in money, and we desire that these gifts should be turned into money for their fair value.

The object is the absolutely necessary work of fencing the Church property, which is at present the prey of every wandering horse and goat. The Church has already so many interesting historical associations, and is an object of pilgrimage to so many visitors, that, for the credit of your town, if from no higher motive, it ought to be properly and decently enclosed.

I congratulate you on what has been already accomplished, and I am full of confidence and good hope for the future.

I now declare this building to be open by the name of the Parish Institute, for the service of the Church in this parish, and I pray God that it may be a source of ever-increasing usefulness to you and to your children.

The Hon. John Douglas and Mr. Geo. Smith also spoke, both gentlemen expressing pleasure at the successful completion of the Hall, and pointing out the facilities which it offered for the promotion of the various parish interests.

The building is 50ft. by 25ft., with a 9ft. verandah on the front and sides. It was designed by Mr. J. Hamilton Parke, of Cairns, and built by Messrs. Byres and Young, of Thursday Island. The total cost of the structure, including extras, is about £335. The furnishing, towards which more than half the cost is already in hand, will cost another £40.

LENT PASTORAL.

BY THE BISHOP OF CARPENTARIA.

My dear people—

The approach of Lent gives me the opportunity to bring before you some of the solemn obligations of our Christian profession, for it is my promised duty to warn you against sin and false doctrine, and to exhort you to stand fast in the Faith.

In the name of Christ, therefore, I warn you against the sin of drink. In some towns a very large proportion of nominally Christian men, and very many women, drink to excess, and not seldom to open drunkenness. God will not accept the flimsy excuse that the climate requires it, when the exact contrary is known to be the case. Be not deceived. No drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of God.

In the name of Christ I warn you against the sins of the flesh, which are so terribly common amongst us. God has called us to cleanness of life, and can enable us for that which He commands. No unclean person has any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God.

In the name of Christ I warn you against the sin of gambling. Money is concentrated energy, and we have no more right to trifle with it than with health or talents. God will require an account, and what shall we give Him for this. The excitement of gambling is as deadly to spiritual life as the excitement of drink.

In the name of Christ I warn you against a shallow and unreal scepticism, the product, not of earnest and strenuous search for truth, but of an unwillingness to face the claims and consequences of faith. This is hypocrisy not less mean than is an affectation of religion.

In the name of Christ I warn you against a slothful neglect of the Common Prayer and Sacraments of the Church. It is possible that he who habitually absents himself from God's House may have some sort of a spiritual life, but at best it must be a maimed and selfish one. A real Christian life is ordinarily impossible apart from God's own conditions for its maintenance.

In the name of Christ I warn you against that spurious liberality which makes so many of you ashamed of your own faith and your own Church, and ready to prefer any and every other organisation before it.

I have warned you but very briefly, but I would ask you to weigh each of these dangers carefully in view of your own individual practice. They are not imagined out of a book, but drawn from close and anxious observation.

I bid you remember that our faith is not vague theism. We believe that the knowledge of Divine truth has been made possible for us in the Divine Christ. True Christianity consists in personal devotion to Christ as the Revealer of God. It is not a mere belief to be held in the head, but something to be lived out in the life. To be a Christian is to live the Christlike life.

I bid you remember that Baptism and Holy Communion are essential and vital parts of Christ's own scheme for living the true life. They are definite means whereby God gives grace and help, and we have no right to expect that, as a rule, He will give the grace to those who will not seek it in his way. In accordance with his custom He sets good things before us but He will not force us to take them.

I bid you remember that the true object of worship is to give rather than to get. In true worship we offer and present to God ourselves, our souls and bodies, and our sacrifices of praise and thanksgiving. If you always remembered that worship is a sacrifice of yourself to God, an offering, tribute, and gift to Him, you would not surely be so slow and unwilling to offer it.

I bid you remember that St. Paul orders you to lay by each week a definite proportion of your income for God, before, not after, all other claims are satisfied. Your proportion for God is as much a debt as any other claim whatever. If you are mean and stingy towards God, what right have you to expect that He should prosper you liberally?

I bid you remember the communion of the Church Militant here on earth. If you show no special care for or interest in those who are fellow worshippers and fellow Churchmen; if you treat them as utter strangers; can you be surprised if outsiders doubt the reality of the Christian life? The Apostle bids you have a special regard for those who are of the household of faith.

I bid you remember that if you would know you must learn. If you would know the purposes of God and the mind of Christ, you must study your Bible. If you would know whether the Church is still true to her Master you must study her history. Unhappily, men are usually positive in assertion in proportion to their ignorance. There are few things that most Church-people need more than some knowledge of the history of their own Church.

Finally, I bid you pray for the peace and progress of the whole Catholic Church, that she may do her Master's will in all things, and I pray, on your behalf, that a soul-searching Lent may bring you to an understanding, and therefore joyful, Easter.

Your affectionate Bishop,

GILBERT,
Bishop of Carpentaria.

ARCHDEACON PRITT.

It is with a very real sense of loss that we record the death of Ven. Archdeacon Pritt, M.A., at Townsville. A man of singular purity of character and unselfishness of life, he had devoted himself to work among the South Sea Islanders for many years entirely at his own cost, and was repaid by the whole-hearted devotion of those among whom he laboured. He was well known in our own diocese, and came up to install the Bishop in 1900. The Bishop was with him in Townsville on the Sunday night on which he was taken ill, but had to leave by steamer the following day, two days before the Archdeacon's death.

His life was one of intense personal devotion, and his death was such as he would himself have wished it to be in the full tide of work for His Master. We condole sincerely with the Diocese of North Queensland in the loss that it has sustained.

CHURCH NEEDLEWORK.

Arrangements are being made to hold a Class for Church Needlework every Friday, from 10 to 12 a.m., in the A.B.M. Room, No. 77 Queen Victoria Markets, Sydney. Ladies wishing to join the class should apply to Miss Giblin, "Walmer," Allen Street, Glebe Point, Sydney, to whom orders may also be sent.

News of the Parishes.

THURSDAY ISLAND.

Christmas was joyously celebrated in the parish. On Christmas Eve the children assembled in the Church and sang a number of pretty carols under the direction of Miss Lucy Bennett. The Sunday School prizes were then distributed, after which the little ones, with their parents and friends, gathered together in the Parish Institute, as yet unfinished. Here we had our Christmas Tree—splendidly laden and very prettily decorated. It was, indeed, a delightful sight, and reflected credit on Old Father Christmas, whose generosity this year was unbounded. Soon all the toys and gifts were distributed, and then ringing cheers were given by the children as a mark of appreciation.

Christmas Day began with a Celebration of the Holy Communion in the Cathedral at 7 o'clock, followed by a children's service at 9. Mattins were said and Holy Communion administered at 10 o'clock; and then, at 7.30, we had Evensong. All the services were fairly well attended, although there was room for improvement, especially as regards attendance at the Holy Communion. There should have been many more than forty-two communicants at the Christmas Day Festival.

On Boxing Day we had the Melanesian Dinner, attended by over fifty boys and their wives, sons, and daughters. It was a happy gathering, and to the boys a veritable feast of good things. We thank God, as we think of Christmas and its observance, and we take courage for the future.

In connection with the official opening of the Parish Institute, an Arcadian Fête was held on Wednesday and Thursday evenings, the 21st and 22nd January respectively. The result was eminently satisfactorily, a sum of £98 4s. 11d. net being obtained for the purpose of fencing the Cathedral grounds. We are especially gratified at the success of the fête for more than one reason. In the first place, its object was a specially laudable one; and in the second, it was conducted on true moral and commercial principles. No raffling or other questionable means of raising money were indulged in—everything was sold straight out at a reasonable price. The following ladies and gentlemen presided over the various stalls:—

Sweets and Ice Creams.—Mesdames Eyre and Beor, Miss Beor, Messrs. Hindmarsh and Jardine. Result, £8 1s. 5d.

Cold Refreshments.—Mrs. Massey, Miss Fisher, Mr. Trundle. Result, £4 10s.

Tea and Coffee.—Mesdames Reid, Bebrouth, Robeson, Fry, Misses White, Sinclair, M. Bebrouth, and E. Beor. Result, £9.

Fish Pond.—Mrs. Bennett, Miss Buchanan, Misses D. and L. Bennett, Mr. Harvey Morley. Result, £14 4s. 10d.

Pin-cushions.—Mrs. Long, Misses Claes, E. Long, E. Corran, and E. George. Result, £20 3s. 3d.

Fancy Goods.—Mesdames Lamb, Shiress, Hodder, Graham, and Hauenschild. Result, £42 16s. 11d.

Japanese Tea.—Mrs. Maeshiba, Mr. A. T. Kashiwagi, and boys. Result, £1 11s. 6d.

Telephone.—Messrs. Hauenschild and Leonard. Result, 10s. 6d.

Other items of expenditure amounting to £2 13s. 6d. are to be deducted from these amounts. We are especially indebted to the lady workers who organised the fête and obtained the numerous articles for its arcades.

They are to be heartily congratulated not only on the success of their efforts, but also on the praiseworthy and exemplary manner in which everything was carried out in connection with the fête.

It is hoped to have the Church grounds entirely re-fenced before Easter. They will then be laid out neatly with trees and shrubs as funds permit.

At a meeting of young men held in the Parish Institute on Tuesday night, the 27th January, it was unanimously decided to form a Young Men's Club in connection with the Cathedral for the mental, social, and physical improvement of its members.

As we send away these notes, a fine belfry is being erected on the Cathedral grounds to accommodate the large bell recently given to the parish. The cost of the work is being defrayed by subscription.

The parish now possesses a little paper, which is published monthly by the Vicar, under the title of the Parish Gazette. It is neatly got up, and is printed locally. It has already proved of great value in stirring up interest in the Church's work by bringing people more in touch with parish affairs.

NORMANTON.

In the middle of December we had a visit from our Bishop, who spent the Sunday with us, preaching twice to good and appreciative congregations. He also addressed the Sunday School teachers in the afternoon on the value and importance and responsibility of their work. After visiting Croydon, His Lordship spent another four or five days with us. On Tuesday, January 6th, he distributed the Sunday School prizes, and had an opportunity of saying a few words to the parents and children. Thursday, the 8th, we had the privilege of spending a "quiet" day, when His Lordship, after an early celebration, gave several very helpful and instructive addresses to the few who found time and opportunity to attend on a busy day.

The Bishop met the Parochial Council during his visit, and expressed himself as highly gratified by the efforts of the Parishioners to improve the Rectory, and at the signs of life he saw generally. His Lordship was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Millar.

Our Sunday School work has been specially encouraging. Our number of teachers has doubled during the last six months. A Bible Class is held every Friday night, and so far, the attendance and interest have been good.

Our Rector has been appointed Chaplain of the Gaol, and holds Services there every Thursday afternoon. It is with satisfaction that he reports not a single Church of England occupant during the six months.

The Rectory has just been enlarged to nearly double the size, and our Rector and his family are quite comfortable, and look forward to spending some happy and useful times amongst the people who have so loyally and liberally declared their appreciation of the work and workers.

Having got the Rectory into good order, we have now to see about doing the same for the Church, which, though it is superior to much of Normanton, is far from what it ought to be, and, we trust, from what both it and the town will be in the not very distant future.

We are exceedingly sorry to lose the help and services of Mr. and Mrs. Curtis. The former has been our energetic Secretary, and the latter our enthusiastic Organist. Their places will be very hard to fill, while they carry with them our very best thanks and good wishes for usefulness and happiness elsewhere. We are also losing at the same time Mr. P. H. Browne, one of our Councilmen and Choristers, who will also leave a blank in nowise easy to be filled. But while one goes, another comes, and we have the pleasure of welcoming Mr. and Mrs. Wallin, who, we trust, will help us all in their power.

COOKTOWN.

Since the last issue of this paper nothing of any importance has occurred to alter the regular work of the Church. Outside parochial matters, the commercial aspect of the place is very quiet, there being but little business done. Want of rain has a great deal to do with this; and until rain comes we cannot hope for any material change in the aspect of affairs. From all the mining camps we hear that the drought is seriously hindering the development of the various mines, and also causing a great deal of sickness. It is the hope and prayer of everyone that rain will fall soon.

In fulfilment of a promise, the Rector visited Maytown during the month of October, and was agreeably surprised to find what was being done there on behalf of the Church. We cannot give too great praise to Mr. Moran for the work that he is doing: conducting Sunday School, Confirmation Classes, Choir, etc. It was through his kindness and valuable assistance that the Rector was able to spend so pleasant a time. During his visit Evensong was held, at which a good congregation was present, and also Confirmation Classes. The Rector visited all the Church-people in Maytown, and also those at the "Ida" and "Queen" mining camps. He hopes to be able to visit the place again in January, when he will endeavour to make a longer stay. Our thanks must be given to Mr. Montgomery for his kindness in lending and presiding at the organ, which enabled the congregation to join in the hearty singing effectively led by the Choir.

On his way to Maytown the Rector held Service at the Laura, which was thoroughly enjoyed by many people.

In Cooktown, as we at first said, nothing has occurred to alter the usual parochial work. The Rector is busy visiting all the people before Christmas Day, reminding them of their duty on that day.

The Choir still keeps up its reputation for good singing, and is now busy with the Christmas music.

We very much miss Miss R. Allan, who for many years past has been a most devoted member of the Choir and of the Society of the Treasury, and also a Sunday School Teacher, combining with that of teacher the work of keeping in order the Sunday School class registers and distribution of cards and tickets to the children. Miss Allan carries away with her our best wishes for her future sphere of work in Brisbane, with the knowledge also that her work will never be forgotten. We are glad to say that Miss D. Allan has kindly undertaken her sister's work. It is earnestly hoped that teachers will be forthcoming to fill the vacancies in the Sunday School staff.

Through the indisposition and temporary absence of the Rector of Croydon, the Bishop has been obliged to postpone the confirmations here and in Maytown until the New Year, in consequence of His Lordship going to Croydon for a few weeks. It is earnestly hoped that the Rector (Rev. G. Smith) will soon be convalescent and able to resume his work.

We wish all our people the compliments of the season.

The Rector regrets that parochial matter, intended for the January issue of this paper, was received too late for publication.

Although it seems rather late in the day to speak about the Christmas Services, still we must refer in a few words to those hearty Festal Services. During the day there were two Celebrations of the Holy Communion, when a large number of communicants participated. All the Services were thoroughly enjoyed by the many present, notwithstanding the great heat. The musical portions of the Services were splendidly rendered by the choir, to whom our thanks are due, not forgetting those also who, by gifts of flowers, etc., and willing labour, gave the Church such a bright appearance, which added much to the joyous character of the Services.

A very fair congregation attended the Watch-night Service, many partaking of the Holy Communion, which was held early in the morning of the New Year.

The Rector visited Maytown for a few days in October last. Since the Bishop's first visit to the Palmer the Church has made wonderful progress. Through the good work of Mr. Moran a Sunday School is now doing good work amongst the children; he has also gathered round him a number of candidates for Confirmation, to whom he regularly gives instruction. The Rector held Evensong in the Council Hall, when a good number attended, and also held two Confirmation Classes. While there he visited all the people in the district, promising to pay another visit at the beginning of the New Year. Unfortunately the wet season set in, which made the visit impossible. Through the closing of the Cooktown-Laura railway the Rector cannot say when he will visit the goldfield again, but the Bishop, on his return from South, will visit the place and hold a Confirmation, which was to have been held before the end of last year, but, through an accident to one of his clergy and other Diocesan matters, was unavoidably postponed. Meanwhile we hope that Mr. Moran will still continue his good work there.

Mrs. King, after a visit South, has once more returned and taken up her work in the choir and Sunday School. Unfortunately her stay amongst us will, we are afraid, be of short duration, her husband being one of the unfortunate number of employees thrown out of work through the closing of the Cooktown railway.

Very sorry are we to have to record the death of Mr. W. J. Evans (late editor of the Beacon), who for many months past had been a great sufferer. For several years he took a very active interest in Church work, being a member respectively of the Parochial Council and choir. Ever since the present Rector took charge of the parish, Mr. Evans was never absent from his place in the choir, either at Mattins or Evensong, until sickness obliged him to resign his position. These are the men the Church can ill-afford to lose. We tender our deepest sympathy to Mrs. Evans and family.

On Thursday evening, 5th February, the Bishop, who is en route for South, held a Confirmation, when 13 candidates were presented. Very impressive addresses were given by the Bishop, which were listened to with rapt attention by candidates and a large congregation.

After the Service the newly-confirmed assembled in the Rectory, where the Bishop shook hands with each one, wishing them good-bye, and expressing the hope that God would be with them always.

On Friday evening the Bishop, who is accompanied by Miss White, left Cooktown per "Wodonga," for Melbourne.

PORT DOUGLAS-CUM-MOSMAN.

On Sunday, January 11th, the First after the Epiphany, the restored Church of St. Andrew, Port Douglas, was formally reopened by the Rector, in the unavoidable absence of the Bishop of the Diocese. It was a day of rejoicing to every one; even those who do not belong to our Communion shewed their sympathetic gladness, and helped in the decoration of the Church. The Choir of St. David's, Mosman, was represented by its Choir master and head tenor, who also entered enthusiastically into all the preparatory work.

Special Thanksgiving Collects were offered at the Early Celebration; and special prayers, lessons, etc., used at Evensong, at which a large congregation was present, the Rector preaching from Psalm xxvi. 8.

The Church, which is now as good as new, has been thoroughly painted inside and out, its foundations renewed, and a handsome bell tower (35 feet high) and fence erected, besides minor repairs. Only some £5 remain owing.

Beautiful gifts have been received from Victoria in the shape of exquisitely worked white, green, and blue frontals, with a red frontlet. These are probably as handsome as anything in the north of Queensland, and have caused universal admiration and delight. Laus Deo.

A movement is to be made almost at once at the Mosman to raise funds to build the long-talked of St. David's Rectory. By the time the Carpentarian appears again we hope this may be an accomplished fact.

Since our last letter we have lost by death, Messrs. Thomson Low, H. S. Roberts (a member of the Mosman Parish Council), and Victor Carnie. All three were supporters of St. David's, and each leaves a blank.

In the Mosman Sunday School we miss an old and valued helper, Mr. John White, who has been obliged, from the changed nature of his daily work, to give up that and also his much appreciated work amongst the Pacific Islanders. We hope his absence from both is but temporary.

Since January 11th, our Sunday Services have been but desultory so far as congregations are concerned. In a little over a fortnight our rainfall exceeded four feet, representing a total fall for the district of some 325,000,000 tons of water, or nearly 75,000,000,000 gallons. And for all this no serious losses by flood are reported, while everywhere the farmers are rejoicing over the thorough soaking the cane lands have received. But for several Sundays one had to wade to Church, and Islanders formed the staple of the congregations. Yet one cannot altogether blame the Europeans. Now brighter and warmer days are coming, and we hope that many will return to give thanks.

CROYDON.

St. Margaret's.—When closing the records of parish news for last quarter we omitted to mention a pleasing send-off to Mr. F. C. Hall by the choir of St. Margaret's Church, in the shape of a "Surprise Party" at the Rectory, and a purse of sovereigns as a small token of recognition of his services as choir-master, in which he had taken much interest.

We are yet without our Rector. However, we are cheered at the prospect of having the Rev. Godfrey H. Smith with us for Easter, and all trust his leg may be fully restored for active service. Thanks to the Lord Bishop of the Diocese, who put off important engagements to come to Croydon for Christmas, and the assistance of Lay Readers, the Services have been maintained. During the fortnight His Lordship was with us he had a busy time conducting Services, visiting the parishioners, practically filling the office of parish priest. This not only in connection with St. Margaret's, but also with St. John's, Golden Gate.

The Services on Christmas Day were bright, hearty, and well attended. The Churchwardens and ladies of the congregation had gone to much trouble in procuring materials (no easy matter after the very dry season), and decorating the Church on Christmas Eve, the appearance of which repaid them for their labour of love.

New Year's Day was set apart for a "quiet day." Services were conducted at 7.30 a.m., 9, and 10 a.m., and 4 and 5 p.m. The Bishop gave a series of addresses, taking Ephes. vi. 10, 18, as his subject. The attendance was small, but those who were present must have been helped and encouraged in the spiritual conflict.

A meeting of the Churchwardens and Parochial Council was held on December 30th, the Lord Bishop of the Diocese in the chair. The all-absorbing topic of finance occupied the meeting, the chairman expressing his sympathy with the parish in the enforced absence of the Rector, and the financial condition of the district generally. The meeting closed with an expression of thankfulness to His Lordship for his interest, counsel, and practical sympathy.

Tuesday, January 6th—the Epiphany—a Celebration of the Holy Communion at 7.30 a.m., His Lordship, leaving for Normanton by the mid-day train, closed a visit which proved helpful and encouraging to all associated with the work of the Church in this parish. At the request of the Bishop of the Diocese, Mr. S. Lewis, a student at Bishop's College, came to us during the recess to assist in the parish work. We are only sorry that he could not have stayed in the parish longer, but the opening of term the first week in February demanded his presence at the College.

Services have been held at Mountain Maid, Table Top, and Croydon King as opportunity offered, and the interest manifested in these outside places creates a longing desire that they be visited more frequently. "Truly, the harvest is great but the labourers are few."

Mr. Grose, of Townsville, who has been on a lengthened visit to Croydon, has rendered valuable assistance by taking Services, a mark of practical sympathy with our Rector on his unfortunate position is highly appreciated by all.

As we write the wet season has set in, and promises to provide a more abundant rainfall than for several years past. O, that men would therefore praise the Lord for His goodness, and declare the wonders that He doeth for the children of men!

St. John's, Golden Gate.—We have but little to report from this centre. The stirring influence of our Rector is very much missed in keeping us awake to our responsibilities.

Mrs. Coles has undertaken the duties of collecting, and is to be congratulated upon her success. One pleasing feature is the work of the Sunday School. The Bishop, during his visit, expressed himself well pleased with the good work done there, which is a great credit to the small and inefficient staff of teachers. Mr. S. Lewis, from Thursday Island, has been very attentive, and all regret that he should have to go away just as he is becoming acquainted with the people.

Diocese with the Drought Relief Fund, the Townsville Cyclone Fund, and other needs, a sum of about £200 was contributed almost entirely in very small sums, and representing very widespread interest. In the matter of obtaining clergy I was less successful than I had hoped, owing to the great scarcity of men in the Southern Dioceses, consequent on the creation of three new Sees in Victoria, and the fact that the Bishop of North Queensland had immediately preceded me on a similar errand. I was, however, successful in obtaining the services of an earnest Melbourne clergyman, Rev. E. Chase, for aboriginal work, and others hope to be able to take up Diocesan work after a time. It is difficult to tabulate and accurately estimate the results of the three months' work, for they often do not appear at the time, but I am satisfied that a large amount of Missionary interest has been aroused which will bear fruit in the future. This was especially the case in Melbourne, where I had not previously had an opportunity of pleading for our work. I must acknowledge gratefully the great assistance I received in Melbourne from my Commissary, Rev. E. Snodgrass, who arranged all my meetings, etc., and in Sydney from Rev. H. Saumarez Smith, and my N.S. Wales Commissary, Rev. E. Beck. I feel that we are well represented in the South. However necessary these visits to the South may be, and they are, I fear, absolutely necessary, I return with, I cannot tell you how great, pleasure and relief to my proper work

PALMERSTON CHURCH.

LETTER FROM THE BISHOP.

MY DEAR PEOPLE—

I feel that, as it is a serious thing to be absent for three months from the Diocese and a thing only to be done from real necessity, I owe it to you to tell you something of my recent visit to the South and its results.

I was absent from the Diocese from February 7th to May 9th, a period of exactly 13 weeks. Of these, three were occupied in sea travelling, and one in a complete week's holiday at Katoomba, the first I have been able to obtain since my consecration; the remaining nine weeks have been spent, as you will see by my accompanying diary, in daily meetings, sermons, and interviews on behalf of the Diocese, combined with constant travelling from place to place, work of a fatiguing and unsatisfying character, but absolutely necessary if the Missionary work of the Diocese is to be maintained.

I met everywhere with the very greatest kindness; the meetings were, in almost every instance, well attended, and, in spite of the bad times and the clashing of the claims of the of the Diocese. My visitation of the parishes has been thrown late this year not only by my Southern visit, but by the absence of the Rev. W. P. Glover on a well-earned holiday, but I shall hope to carry it on as late as the season allows. A new anxiety has arisen in the attraction of population to the Arltunga goldfields, a place very difficult to reach from this side, and as yet of uncertain permanence. I am in hopes of being able to obtain the services of a Mission Chaplain for the more remote bush work. You will learn with great pleasure that Lord Beauchamp has generously renewed for another three years his gift of £150 per annum to Bishop's College, thus enabling this vitally important work to be maintained. A tutor has also been found for the College in the person of Mr. D. M. Jones, M.A. Matters have been put well in train for the starting of the Mitchell River Mission, and I hope to be able to visit the Reserve very shortly.

Your affectionate Bishop,

GILBERT,
Bishop of Carpentaria.

PROPOSED MISSION STATION ON MITCHELL RIVER.

The Bishop of Carpentaria addressed a meeting at the Temperance Hall, Brisbane, on Monday, May 4th, in support of the proposed new Mission to the Aborigines in his Diocese. The chair was occupied by the Minister for Lands (the Hon. J. F. G. Foxton), and there were also present—the Ven. Archdeacon David, the Rev. Canon Oake'ey, Dr. Roth (Northern Protector of Aborigines), Mr. J. Hughes (Registrar General), and a number of clergy.

Mr. Foxton said he was pleased to preside at a meeting to welcome his lordship, more especially in connection with the Mission which he proposed to establish in the neighbourhood of the Mitchell River, in the Gulf of Carpentaria. The work proposed to be undertaken was no light one. Those who went out would be from year to year removed from all civilised people, taking their lives in their hands, and they would be deserving of the very best wishes and prayers of the whole community. (Applause.) As they knew, it was a matter in which he took a very deep interest. He was never tired of impressing upon those who were so fond of crying out for a "white Australia" that there were certain black people in this State, and other parts of Australia, whom we had displaced—from whom we had taken their hunting grounds—practically the bread of life—and had in some parts of Queensland hunted from the waterholes, where they had been accustomed from time immemorial to obtain water, and at the end of the stockwhip. These were things which ought not to be. (Applause.) Cattle and sheep were all very well; but human beings, whether they had white skins or black skins, were of greater importance. The only manner in which this question of the right of either cattle or the blacks to resort to certain places for water in times of drought—with credit to us as a community—was by selecting ample reserves, on which the aboriginal inhabitants could be provided for and live without being molested. The old inhabitants would recognise a great difference between the relations of the blacks and outside settlers compared with thirty or forty years, or even ten or twelve years ago. One seldom heard of a massacre or outrage by tribes of aborigines against the whites. On the other hand, one never heard—and while he had the care of the aborigines they would never hear—of dispersals. (Applause.) He was strongly of opinion that it was very desirable that these reserves should be placed under the control of religious denominations—it did not matter to him as Minister by which denomination. He welcomed all denominations to this field of labour. At Yarrabah, on probably the best reserve to be found in Australia, there was a splendid station on which grand work was being done by the Church of England. At Bogimba, on Fraser Island, there was also a station, at which, under adverse circumstances, the same Church was doing good work. In the Peninsula, where the blacks were most numerous—being estimated at about 25,000—it was his desire that the land should be parcelled out for aboriginal purposes into spheres of influence for the various denominations ready to take up the work. The Presbyterians had stations at Mapoon and Weipa, and were contemplating a third station on the Archer River. This would fully occupy their sphere. Then came the sphere of the Church of England, extending as far round the head of the Gulf as the enthusiasm of the Church members would carry it. At the Northern Missions, besides the blacks who came and went, there were 480 permanent residents. On the islands in Torres Straits, where the London Missionary Society was at work, the natives had attained a degree of civilization that was almost incredible. At the Northern Missions, on the mainland, there were 315 aboriginal children attending the schools. There were also 340 attending similar schools on the islands, and 58 in the southern portion of the State, making about 750 in all. There was thus a great improvement, and it was an extension of this system that they were there to support. He had been in conference with the Bishop in connection with the reserve, and, though there were some difficulties, it was hoped that these would be swept away, and a good healthy settlement formed. (Applause.)

The Bishop of Carpentaria (the Right Rev. Gilbert White) said the resolution he had been asked to move ran,—“That this meeting, recognising the claims of the aborigines upon the white population of this State, hereby pledges itself to support the new mission settlement upon the Mitchell River.” He preceded his remarks by an expression of gratification in having the Minister occupying the chair, and appreciation of the attitude and action of the Queensland Government in its relation to the aborigines. At Yarrabah the work done was truly astonishing; those who had not been there could not realise it. The results could not be shown so much in figures, but in the whole change in habits and thoughts. The treatment which the blacks had received in the past arose, he was forced to think, from an idea that they were beyond the pale of humanity. The idea that the blacks were of the lowest type had received very general acceptance, even from scientific minds; but the results at Yarrabah were a complete refutation of this, teaching having called forth dormant powers and intelligence in an amazing manner. (Applause.) It proved that these persons were as capable of improvement, through missionary effort, as any other race. The Church had at present two mission stations, but both were south of the largest black population, so that there was urgent necessity of another station. Matters had been pushed forward, and the Church had now an opportunity of showing what it could do. Mr. Gribble had made a thorough inspection of the Mitchell River district, which he found most suitable. There were great lagoons with an immense quantity of waterlilies (the roots of which form a great part of the food of the tribes); wild rice, yams, &c., and game. There were also found signs of a large number of aborigines, estimated at about 2000. They were people among whom it was believed the work would be very successful. In other instances, the blacks had been contaminated by association with the lowest types of white. Mr. Gribble found these, however, a fine race, many of the women being over 6ft. high. They were at present unaware of the significance of missionary work, as was shown by an attempt made one night to attack the party. As time went on they would be brought round by disinterested kindnesses, although it could not be done all at once, and patience must be exercised. As to the land being taken up under occupation license by stock-owners, the missionary effort would be beneficial to the interests of licensees, inasmuch as the tendency of the mission would be to move the blacks from the cattle runs to the aboriginal reserves. They had got this far: Whilst in Melbourne, he put the matter before the Church people, and the Rev. Edward Chase (son of Canon Chase), noted for his missionary zeal, volunteered to give up his parish in Melbourne, and assist in the work. (Applause.) Other offers had also come in, so that as far as the men were concerned, there would be no difficulty. In a few months—depending upon Mr. Chase—it was probable a thorough inspection would be made; for, as the place was partly flooded in the wet season, it was necessary to be careful where the settlement was established. By next year they should be in a position to make a proper start. In his own diocese there were only about 17,000 white persons, so that it was incumbent upon him to appeal to the Church at large. It was a work in which a might help, the object being most worthy. He could not guarantee that the mission would be successful, or that the means would be forthcoming to keep it going; but he could say that he had it deeply at heart, and would do everything possible, so far as he was concerned, to make it successful.

Dr. Roth seconded the motion, and said he had had peculiar opportunities of seeing the work done by the missions in his annual visits. The general public had little idea of the work which the missions were doing on their behalf, and he specially mentioned the readiness with which they took over the “waifs and strays” whose welfare had been a serious problem to the Government. He had had a great difficulty with persons engaged in the bêche-de-mer fisheries, but the missions had been of great assistance to him in this connection. As the mission extended he would be able to check abuses which still existed. The influence of the missions was shown in the fact that in the district controlled by Inspector Galbraith, not a single instance of interference with cattle and blacks was reported last year, although there were so many aborigines. For his own part, his Lordship could depend upon every assistance from him. (Applause.)

The motion was carried.

Archdeacon David, in proposing a vote of thanks to Mr. Foxton and Dr. Roth, commended both for the great support they gave to the movement for protecting aborigines, and was especially gratified that the Minister had carried the administration of the Act with him to the Lands Department. Mr. Hughes seconded the motion, which was carried.

Mr. Foxton, in replying, said the aboriginal department was the one hobby which he thought he could carry to the Lands Department and relieve the Home Secretary. He thought it could also be said that in sticking to the aborigines he was not influenced by political or electioneering motives, from the fact that the aborigines had neither votes nor political influence—at least not yet. What they would attain to in the hands of the missionaries he did not pretend to tell; but in his Lordship's diocese there might be yet a cry for a “black Australia.” (Laughter.)

The meeting then terminated.

(From Report in Brisbane Courier of May 5th.)

Personal.

The Bishop has appointed Rev. Ernest Beck, A.K.C., Rector of St. John's, Darlinghurst, his Commissary for N.S.W. Mr. Beck was ordained by the Bishop of London in 1881. He came out to Australia to Bishop Barry in 1885, and has since been Rector of St. Clement, Mosman, and Military Chaplain in South Africa in 1900.

Rev. J. B. Drabble, A.K.C., who has been working in the Diocese of North Queensland for the last five years, will take up work in this Diocese as soon as his place can be filled. Mr. Drabble volunteered some considerable time ago, but delay was caused by the difficulty of finding a successor for him.

Rev. E. Chase, M.A., Rector of Yarrowville, Melbourne, has volunteered to come up for original work for a year, during which time the Bishop of Melbourne has allowed a locum tenens for his parish. Mr. Chase is the son of Canon Chase, whose enthusiasm for missionary work was very great.

The new Bishop of Melbourne is already showing himself a wise and strong leader, and we are devoutly thankful for his appointment, although the method adopted by the Diocese of Melbourne to select a Bishop does not strike us as one which, under most circumstances, would end to a satisfactory result.

Mr. D. M. Jones, M.A., has been appointed assistant tutor at Bishop's College, and is giving valuable assistance to the men in their work. There are now in residence Messrs. Lewis, Smith, Hall, and Wilkinson, while Mr. Woolyche is training for aboriginal work at Arrabah.

Rev. W. P. Glover went South for a well-earned holiday on April 21st. He hopes to return in about a fortnight's time.

Miss White, Lady Superintendent of Bishop's College, returned with the Bishop from the South, and Mrs. Robison, the College housekeeper, has gone for a short and well-deserved holiday.

Rev. T. Pitt, father of Rev. T. K. Pitt of Port Douglas, has been paying a short visit to his Diocese. Mr. Pitt has just been ordained priest at the age of seventy-one. He had spent something like half a century in voluntary ministrations to those who were out of the way in the Tasmanian bush, and within reach of his home, before his labours were recognised by this nobly-won honour.

We are rejoiced that Rev. G. H. Smith has been able to return to his devoted work at Droydon. His knee still gives him trouble, but his cheerfulness and labours are unabated.

Rev. W. Hudson, of Normanton, has suffered from a severe attack of fever, but is now, we are thankful to say, entirely recovered.

There is likely to be one entry at least from this Diocese for the Th. A. Examination of the Australian School of Theology in October. This Examination is designed for laymen and women who wish to test their knowledge of theology, and to educate themselves into some real acquaintance with a science about which too many dispute without the most elementary knowledge of their facts. We should like to see more entries. The fee is one guinea. All particulars can be obtained from the Diocesan Secretary.

Miss Paige, our faithful Hon. Secretary in Sydney, has, in addition to her other labours, undertaken the charge of a Carpentarian Stall at a Missionary Sale, to be held shortly in Sydney. A number of shells and curios have been sent down by the Melanesians and others at Thursday Island.

Mrs. Alexander, Hillside, Goulburn, has kindly undertaken to act as Hon. Secretary for the Diocese of Goulburn, where much interest was aroused on the occasion of the Bishop's visit.

DELLA GUARDIA.

We were staying at a little Italian town nestling under the mountains west of Genoa, and noticing a white building far up on a sharp peak above, we set off one day to walk towards it. Up the stony salita until we came out into the open country; there we met a peasant who told us we must go up by the casa bianca, then past the last olive orchard, and then, "sopra, sopra, sopra, sopra," raising hand and voice at each word. As we rose higher the mists began to gather. Great masses came rolling up the mountain side, stretching out long fingers and wreaths that seemed to grasp the bushes and drag up the dark heavy clouds behind them. Soon all was enveloped in a dense fog, so that one could only see a few yards ahead. The mist grew thicker and darker, and the path as it ascended led along a narrow ridge, only a few feet wide, from which the steep grass slopes fell away into nothingness. Once the red cap and sheepskin cloak of a wild bandit, like a shepherd, rose from a bush, but there was no other sign of life. Sopra, sempre sopra. Up through the darkness and gloom, and the silence as of the grave. Once the wild cry of a bird of prey, and then again the silence. At last, out through the fog loomed a great white wall, and there, on the topmost mountain peak, was a great Church, silent, and evidently but rarely used, but hung with faded wreaths and flowers, a silent witness far, far above the baunts of men.

Then came a gust of wind, and for a moment the heavy grey curtain was swept aside from North to South, and on the one side lay the great snow-clad peaks of the Apennines, clear and cold against the blue spring sky, and on the other the long stretch of coast underneath the feet with the white line of foam, the yellow sand, the white villages and towns creeping up the foothills, the grey-green olive orchards, the careful gardens and green meadows starred with jonquils and anemones, and, till lost to sight, the blue waters of the Mediterranean, with the brown sails of the fishing craft and the far off smoke of a Genoa-bound steamer.

On our return we made enquiries as to the lonely Church, and this is the tale of it. The Church was called St. Marie Della Guardia (St. Mary's of the Watch Tower). Long, long ago, the fierce Northern pirates used to swoop down along the coast, carrying death and pillage wherever they went. For a while the people suffered dumbly, flying in terror to the mountains, and leaving their goods a spoil to the enemy. Then a thought struck them. They sent a watchman up to the mountain top whence he could see 80 miles of coast, and from which he could signal an alarm on the approach of the galleys, then the women and children were sent to the mountains, from which the hardy shepherds descended to help their brethren of the town; the valuables were hidden, and the able-bodied men sallied out to battle, free from anxiety for their homes and dear ones. The pirates soon found that a hard fight, and no booty even if they were victorious, was a game not worth the candle, and shunned in future the gallant little town; and the grateful townsfolk, in gratitude to God, erected a great Church on the mountain top as a thank-offering, and thither once a year all the town still repairs and with psalm and hymn and voice and rite of praise give glory to Him who from on high protected them against their foes.

There is a true thought underlying it all. God on High watching over us, the first thing that draws our eyes when we lift them up in the sunshine and happiness of life, hidden at times by clouds and gloom as though there were no such thing at all, but all the time the same unchanged, unchangeable watching for ever over His people; a secure refuge, a hiding-place from the storm and tempest, a watch-tower against the foe; the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever.

We have no pirates, happily, at Thursday Island, but we should like to see the spire of the Cathedral rising like a finger towards heaven, the first thing to catch the sea-faring traveller's eye—the memorial of God who is with us in life and death by land and sea. It will be long before we could think of this as a Diocesan work with our greater missionary needs and claims. Our only hope is that someone to whom God has given wealth may choose this gift as a worthy offering to the Maker and Giver of all good things.

Varia.

The Bishop while in Sydney preached on Sunday afternoon in the Domain attired in his robes and assisted by the Choir of St. James' Church, who marched in procession to the spot. There was a large gathering of men, and the Bishop spoke some home truths on the subject of "a white Australia" and the white man's duties and responsibilities. He was listened to with great attention, and at the conclusion of the address a considerable sum was collected for the Aboriginal work of the Church.

A few days later the Bishop was proceeding to Newtown in a tram when a working man entered who had obviously refreshed himself liberally. He looked round the tram in an aimless sort of way, then remarked to the company in general: "No, I'm not the Dook o' York," then fixing his eye on the Bishop he continued, "and I'm not the Gulf of Carpentaria neither." The obvious reply that the Gulf of Carpentaria contained only water suggested itself too late.

The Governor-General, Lord Tennyson, is deeply interested in the proposed new Mission to the Aborigines, and invited the Bishop to a long interview with him on the subject, asking many questions and promising to aid the work in every way that lay in his power. Lady Tennyson has, through Miss White, given four large and beautiful sacred pictures for the Beauchamp Library, the South Sea Island and Japanese Schoolrooms, and for the Japanese Women's School, respectively.

During the Bishop's visit to Melbourne an amusing and good-natured skit on the Bishop's relations to his aboriginal flock appeared in the Argus; but so slow are many minds to see a joke that a venerable clergyman approached the Bishop on the subject, and on being assured that the whole alleged conversation was the sole product of the fertile brain of the newspaper man he brightened up as if the bottom had been put into the world again, and went away repeating, "I am most thankful to hear it, very, very thankful to hear it!"

The Bishop had the pleasure, in Brisbane, of attending a clerical gathering at the house of Rev. W. Maitland Woods, M.A., formerly Rector of Thursday Island and lately appointed Rector of the important Church of St. Mary's, Kangaroo Point, Brisbane. His many friends in the North will be glad to learn that Mr. Woods is looking extremely well, and is very happy in his new sphere of work.

Vol. III.—No. 11. Thursday Island, July 1, 1903

NOT GIVING BECAUSE OWING.

Some little while ago a parish was asked to give an offertory to help fellow-Churchmen who were in sore distress from the destruction of their Church by a hurricane, and refused on the grounds that it would be unjust to do so because the Church was £12 in debt.

We cannot regard this argument, which is always being brought forward in other forms, as valid. If it were it would be easy to evade every obligation with an air of righteousness by the simple process of always keeping on the wrong side of the ledger.

When a man says that he cannot pay his Church subscriptions or give to the offertory, and rather takes credit to himself for honesty, he ought, on the same principle, to refuse all food because he cannot pay for it, and to make no payments of any sort whatever until his debt is satisfied. If he does not do this, if he admits that these are necessary payments that he must make whether he is in debt or not, he gives up the whole case and reduces his argument to the more correct form that he does not consider a gift to the service of God among necessary expenses.

It is, of course, true that we have no right to give largely to religious objects while we owe money to other men who perhaps need it, but neither have we a right to spend a penny more on food or clothing or travelling than is absolutely necessary under the same circumstances.

We are not, however, expected to starve or sell our coat because we owe a small sum and cannot immediately pay it. To do so would be alike foolish and wrong, because we should thereby diminish our chances and power to pay the debt we owe; so we are not expected to starve the spiritual provision for our souls, because we thereby risk putting it permanently out of our reach from unwillingness to bear a small additional anxiety. There are certain things that a man must have to live at all. He must have food and clothing for the body, and unless he is to be no higher than the beasts that perish, he must also have provision for his soul. The one should be regarded as at least as necessary as the other; there have been those, Jesus Christ for example, who regarded it as more important. Let us at least be honest enough to call things by their right names.

One other thought is worth remembering. It is probable that no person or Church ever yet lost one penny by what they gave to unselfish uses. Let us remember the old rhyme—

"There was a man some thought him madde,
The more he gave the more he hadde," and the notable saying of the saintly Bishop Wilson, "The Lord has convinced me, by an experience of forty years, that He will be no man's debtor."

As a mere matter of fact, the rule is invariable that the more a Church gives for Missionary and other work, wherein the sole aim is the glory of God, the more liberally are its own wants supplied. "God will be no man's debtor," nor any Church's either.

IDEALS.

Our great danger seems to be lack of ideals. Without them man comes, sooner or later, to grovel in the mire, and the body drags down and enfetters the soul. Do we want a proof? We may find it in the fact that the favourite literature of our laity, women as well as men, is a notorious weekly Southern paper which employs the cleverest writers to illustrate the principle of belief in nothing. It is not merely that the paper in question loses no opportunity of sneering at religion; it sneers equally at every philosophical, philanthropic, and patriotic enthusiasm. All are equally foolish and self-seeking. It shows not one single trace of enthusiasm or respect for any single thing in heaven above or earth below.

The attitude is a slightly sordid one. We can respect Ajax in his rage and fury defying the thunderbolts of Jove, but Ajax reeling off denunciations of men, faiths, and gods at so much a line, to provide himself with a comfortable income, by what he knows will please the lowest tastes of his hearers; Ajax defying the thunder because the mob are ready to pay someone to do it for them, is not a pretty or an awe-inspiring sight. When writers say that no one acts except from self-interest they must be prepared to shoulder the consequences of their own assertions.

It is a deplorable thing that this cheap, smart cynicism should be the thing that appeals most to the average men and women, to say nothing of the still baser matter with which it is interlarded. The fault seems to lie in the lack of ideals. The Bible, which inspired our fathers, is almost a sealed book to this generation, and nothing even professes to take its place. We have no history of our own, and we have not taken the trouble to acquire the knowledge of that of our race. The only books that people will read are the lightest novels; for vast numbers the only reading is the newspaper, and though many of these honestly strive to maintain a decent level, yet we should not suspect the ordinary newspaper of even trying to inspire high ideals. It would never pay, they would say, to be too far above public opinion. We must be thankful that many do strive to be a little above it.

Yet high ideals are what we need to save our country and to save our own souls. The country that has no ideals is doomed, not only to mediocrity but to deterioration. We need prophets who will remind our young men that there are better things than self-advancement, and higher duties than self-improvement. We are not without hope that they will arise; but the first step is to acknowledge our need, and the second to look and pray for its satisfaction.

PALMERSTON CHURCH.

We give an illustration of the new Church at Port Darwin. We are indebted to Mr. J. Barnes, of Palmerston, for this excellent photograph.

BISHOP'S COLLEGE.

There will be two vacancies for students at Bishop's College, Thursday Island, at Christmas.

Scholarships covering board and tuition will be given to students who are without means.

Candidates must have passed the University matriculation, or an equivalent examination.

Application to be made not later than October 1st to the Warden, Bishop's College, or to the Bishop's Commissaries, Rev. E. Snodgrass, Melbourne, and Rev. E. C. Beck, Sydney, from whom particulars may be obtained.

A MYSTERIOUS RELIC.

Much attention has lately been given to the 'Holy Shroud of Turin,' and to the strong evidence which has convinced many men of science that the marks on it are not painted, but are a natural photograph of a human body. We do not propose to enter into the question as to whether or no it is indeed the shroud of Christ. It would be so strange that we may rightly demand the most convincing evidence, but it is quite certain, that the face is one of extraordinary dignity and interest, and there are points about it which make it difficult to think that any painter could have invented it. Roughly speaking, the face is not altogether unlike the traditional type, except that it is perhaps older, and certainly more heavily moulded. It gives one somehow the impression that you are looking at a real, not an ideal person. The mouth has a droop strangely expressive of intense pain strongly sustained. The nose is injured as though by a blow, and while one eye is entirely closed in peaceful rest the other appears to be open, an almost inconceivable representation for an artist, but perfectly possible if an actual reproduction of the dead face.

Taking the face as a whole, it is the most entirely human of any representation of Christ that we have seen, and yet the most solemn and arresting. The most prominent characteristics are not mildness and sweetness, but an overpowering impression of latent strength and dignity. A most excellent reproduction of the face, nearly life size, and entitled "La Tête de Christ d'après le Saint-Suaire de Turin," can be obtained post free from Messrs. Masson & Co, 120 Boulevard St. Germain, Paris, for the sum of 12s. 9d.; and the one we obtained arrived in perfect condition.

BISHOP'S COLLEGE.

Lord Beauchamp has generously renewed for another three years—1904, 1905, and 1906 his subscription of £150 a year to Bishop's College. Entirely unendowed as we are, and with so many claims—both diocesan and missionary—on all money contributed for the general work of the Diocese, it is obvious that this means the difference between a College and no College. We have now been working as a College for a little over two years—long enough to see of what value the College is to the Diocese. In the first place, we have four men who are pledged to serve the Diocese in the sacred ministry, and who have been devoting their time at the College, simply and entirely to fit and prepare themselves for their work. In the second place, the College has formed an absolutely necessary centre and home for the work of the Diocese. It has obviated the necessity for erecting and maintaining a Bishop's residence, and given a point d'appui for the necessary continuity of Diocesan business during the Bishop's constant absences from headquarters. In this way the College has done only less service than in its primary capacity. The income of the See is so small that were it not for these centralising facilities afforded by the College, a great but necessary burden would be thrown on the Diocese without adequate return. The continued interest in sustaining the generosity shown by Lord Beauchamp to the Diocese should call forth our warmest thanks, and stimulate us to show corresponding liberality ourselves. The College Library is in great want of theological and standard books, and any gifts of these will be thankfully received.

MONASTICISM.

By PROF. A. HARNACK (Gieszen, 1901.)

This is an interesting book. In it we have a sketch of the history and ideals of Monasticism by one who, as an extreme and anti-dogmatic Protestant, cannot be suspected of any undue leanings in favour of the systems which he describes, but Harnack is a man of learning and impartiality and he does justice to the enormous services rendered by Monasticism to Christianity. "The Evangelical Christian has," he says, "no mere historical interest in the right answering of the questions suggested by the ideals of Monasticism . . . he who depreciatingly puts it aside does not know it. He who does know it will know how much there is to learn from it." In the earlier days a belief in the imminence of the second advent kept men from worldliness, but in the second century the masses began to crowd in, and the Church, seeing before her a great opportunity as a world power, began to embrace it in spite of the protests of those who clung to the older and more spiritual conceptions. The Gospel indeed survived the union with the civilisation and power of the world, but at the cost of so much inconsistency and unreality that there was a constant harking back to the earlier and simpler ideals. In the East this took shape chiefly in the lives of hermits and solitaries, maintaining a protest against sin and low ideals, and striving to anticipate the conditions of the future life by extreme and often impracticable asceticism. This Eastern type finds its modern type and expression in Tolstoi. Other motives were a desire to find peace from the distractions of the world, and a joy in the quiet contemplation of nature and God. In the West, Monasticism was more slowly developed, but once introduced spread quickly under the influence of St. Augustine's great ideals, becoming at once far more social than in the East. It had soon to choose between mere asceticism and the limiting of asceticism by the needs of service in building up the kingdom of God on earth. It was the latter practice that prevailed.

Harnack traces four great movements in the West. First the impulse of St. Benedict, in the sixth century. His leading ideas were work and obedience, and from the first the idea prevailed of extending the spiritual blessings obtained beyond the immediate limits of the order. Gradually the spiritual impulse declined, the Popes were quick to utilise the orders for their own purposes, and by the tenth century they had become identified with the world.

Then came the Cluniac reformers whose ideas were carried out by Hildebrand. Their ideal was not merely the freedom of the individual from the world, but the freedom of Christendom to serve God in the world. The result was a renunciation of the world that the Church might govern the world, and it was a potent factor in the enthusiasm of the crusades. After a time, however, the ideal became lost and the orders became aristocratic and inoperative.

Thirdly came St. Francis of Assisi and the begging orders of the thirteenth century. It was a movement of and back to the people. St. Francis did not intend or wish to form a regular order, but was forced into it. After a time the Popes used it also for political ends and its enthusiasm died out.

The last movement was the organisation of the Jesuits in the sixteenth century. Unlike the others this was not a return to the Gospel, but a frank use of asceticism merely to support and extend the power of the Church. It is a travesty of the high aims of earlier Monasticism, a tool of ecclesiastical conservatism, and utterly foreign to the earlier spirit of Christianity, so nobly vindicated by many of the founders of religious orders.

If Prof. Harnack's estimate of the Jesuits is a fair one, it is not to be wondered at that they have often been as much disliked within their own Church as without its borders. The whole book is full of suggestive thoughts, and it would be well if more Protestants were, like our author, able to look outside their own narrow limits and appreciate the good, as well as denounce the evil, in the whole Catholic Church.

THE TORRES ISLANDS.

We left Thursday Island on the morning of May 1st with a very stiff breeze and choppy sea, and were only able to beat up as far as Yam Island before dusk. There are very strong tides between these Islands, hence the cause of our delay. Making an early start next morning we reached Erub or Darnley Island at three o'clock in the afternoon. Immediately on landing I went to photograph the L.M.S. Church. The Island is composed of basalt, which rises to a height of about 500 feet, and is well wooded and fertile—indeed it is perhaps the most beautiful island in Torres Straits. Save for rocky headlands, which separate lovely little coves fringed with white coral sand, the whole coast is skirted with groves of cocoanut palms and occasional patches of mangroves. An almost impenetrable jungle clothes the hills, except at those spots that have been cleared for gardens.

Very shortly after landing we walked along the coast to the village where the chief Booka lives, and saw Captain H——. He is one of those remarkable men one so constantly meets in out of the way places. He started in life as a middy in the Navy; owing to a disagreement with his people he resigned, and entered the Merchant Service. He advanced very quickly, and when still young obtained a command. He made two fortunes, but lost both on account of bank failures, and is at present living on this remote island along with Papuans, Polynesians, and people of other races that now inhabit Erub.

Near Darnley are some good fishing grounds, but the water is so deep as to render fishing dangerous to life, and it was on this account that the Queensland Government was led to prohibit pearling here.

We started next day and sailed down to Murray Island, where we were welcomed by Mr. J. B——, the schoolmaster and magistrate. He is the only white man on the island, and he plays a paternal part in the social life of the people. Mer or Murray Island is about five miles in circumference. The south half consists of the crater of an extinct volcano, which is breached to the N.E. by the lava stream which forms the remainder of the high part of the island. This portion is very fertile, and supports a luxuriant vegetation. It is here that the natives have the bulk of their gardens, and every portion of it is under cultivation. The most prominent feature of Mer is the long, steep hill, named Gelam, which culminates in a peak 700 feet in height. The L.M.S. has a Mission Church here, under the care of a Samoan teacher, who conducts services every Sunday.

A mile to the south of Mer are the Islands of Danar and Waier—the former is 400 feet in height, and the latter 300. They present a barren though picturesque appearance. As we were obliged to return to Thursday Island by Tuesday, the 8th, we were compelled to leave Murray the day after we arrived. The voyage home was very delightful. Reaching Thursday Island about 3 p.m., we closed a most enjoyable trip.

News of the Parishes.

THURSDAY ISLAND.

The Quetta Club has been firmly established. Its existence has already been justified by the number of young men who have become members, and the deep interest which they have taken in its meetings. The Club meets every Wednesday evening in the Parish Institute.

The Belfry has been built, and the large bell, obtained from Townsville, duly hung.

The whole forms a substantial structure and is a most useful addition to the Church property.

The Cathedral grounds have at last been properly fenced. A stout picket structure of gothic design now skirts the front and side, whilst the back is enclosed with wire and netting. The improved appearance of the Church property, thus brought about, is very marked, whilst at the same time it adds greatly to the improvement of the main street. Our parishioners are to be heartily congratulated on the accomplishment of this work.

The Japanese decided some little time ago to collect funds for the purpose of improving their School, which is built on Church property.

Their efforts met with considerable success, and as a result they have been able to spend some £30 on much needed repairs. The School building is now bright and comfortable, and is gradually becoming a more active centre of work.

Mr. Kashiwagi, the Japanese Hon. Lay Helper, deserves credit for his devoted work in connection with his fellow countrymen.

Lent was well observed in the Cathedral. Our Sunday Services were largely attended, and altogether a much deeper interest than usual was taken in the keeping of the Holy Season.

On Good Friday we had services at 7.30 a.m., 10 a.m., and 7.30 p.m. The latter was a Lantern Service consisting of some 40 views of the Passion, shown by Miss Buchanan, and explained by the Vicar. The Church was crowded, and the greatest attention and reverence were manifested.

The collections on Good Friday, amounting to £4, were given, by request of the Bishop, to the Diocese of North Queensland, for Church restoration purposes.

On Easter Eve a service of great interest was held in the Church at 9 o'clock. After Evensong five adult Japanese Catechumens were baptized by the Rev. W. P. Glover, in the presence of a goodly number of their friends. The service was intensely solemn. The Catechumens, all dressed in white, made their individual vow and profession of faith in a firm and outspoken manner. After the baptism a hymn in Japanese was sung, and mementos of the service were presented to the newly baptized. The whole service was particularly impressive. The men will be confirmed at an early date by the Bishop of the Diocese.

Our Easter Services were particularly bright and joyful. The Church had been beautifully decorated for the great festival. The arches were festooned, and the Sanctuary was beautified by flowers and pot plants. Simplicity of decoration seemed to add to the effectiveness of the ornamentation. The day began with a Celebration of the Holy Eucharist at 7 o'clock. Owing to the heavy rains, however, the number of Communicants was limited. At 9 o'clock we had our second Celebration with 22 Communicants, making a total of 41 for the day. The service of Mattins was taken at 10 o'clock. The weather by this time had cleared, and a crowded congregation was the result. The military forces, including the Permanent and Volunteer Corps, were present under Captain Anderson, Officer-Commanding troops. The Band of the Garrison Battery accompanied the troops to the Church, and added greatly to the attractiveness of the Parade. The singing at this service was particularly hearty and refreshing. In the afternoon a Children's Service was held at 3 o'clock, and then at 7.30 p.m. we had Choral Evensong.

Tour's Magnificat and Bunnett's Nunc Dimittis were sung, as also the Anthem "Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more." The service was intensely hearty, and the large congregation seemed to thoroughly enter into the spirit of it all. A special feature of the day's service was the large number of choir members present. These included five boys in cassocks and surplices who had just been admitted to the ranks of the Choir.

Easter will be remembered by one and all as a day of joy and helpfulness, for which we thank God, and take courage for the future.

The Offertory collections for the day, £24 7s. 6d., were presented to the Vicar by the Churchwardens, on behalf of the parishioners.

The annual meeting of parishioners was held in the Parish Institute, on Thursday evening, the 16th April. There was a marked improvement in the attendance over previous years.

The Vicar, who presided, presented his Annual Statement of the work which had been accomplished during the year, reviewing the operations and the present condition of the various parish organisations.

The Churchwardens read and laid upon the table their financial statements, accompanied by a report concerning the temporal affairs of the Church's life. These showed that the Parish during the year had raised some £800 for Church work, and that the year closed with a credit balance to the Current Account. The Hon. John Douglas, on behalf of the Parishioners, congratulated the Vicar and the Wardens on the reports and statements, making reference at the same time to the hearty co-operation given by the people in the matter of all Church work.

Mr. George Smith referred to the necessity of providing a piano for the Parish Institute, and after some discussion it was decided to obtain one by special subscription, Messrs. Douglas, Smith, and Mitchell undertaking to collect the required amount. Other minor matters were discussed, after which light refreshments were handed round and a pleasant hour spent in friendly chat.

Rev. W. P. Glover left for a holiday on April 21st, and has been visiting Ballarat and Tasmania. He hopes to return very shortly.

COOKTOWN

We have still to report dulness of the times throughout the Cook district. It was hoped that after the rain the commercial and mining aspect of the district would improve, but unfortunately our hopes have not been fulfilled.

Through the temporary closing down of the Collingwood tin mine, many men have left the district seeking employment elsewhere. So long as this dulness continues we cannot report much progress in Church life. Nevertheless it is very pleasing to mention that the Services on Good Friday and Easter Sunday were exceedingly well attended, it being difficult to find seating accommodation for the large attendance of worshippers at the Sunday Evening Service.

Mattins and Evensong were held on Good Friday, and the day following the Church was in the hands of the busy decorators for Easter Sunday. The bright appearance of the sacred building on that day amply repaid their efforts, many worshippers remarking, "How nice the Church looked." There were two Celebrations of the Eucharist in the morning, when the number of communicants was much greater than for several years past. Children's Service was held in the afternoon, Choral Evensong concluding the Festal Services. Throughout the day the choir rendered the musical part of the Services remarkably well.

The Annual Parishioners' Meeting was held in the Church after Evensong on the 28th April, when the reports and balance sheet were presented. The latter showed a debit balance which we trust will soon be wiped out. A good working parochial committee was appointed for the ensuing year, viz:—Messrs. Thomas, Rich, Walker, Palmer, Seagren, Patching and Bauer, with Mr. Boddington as secretary. The first two of the above were appointed People's and Rector's Wardens. With such a good band of workers we need not fear for the Church's future.

Several new members have joined our choir, and an old S. S. teacher (Mr. Clarke) has again joined our already good staff of teachers.

We are pleased to welcome back Miss Baker after a visit South; she is now again actively working as a member of the society of the treasury.

His Lordship the Bishop passed through to Thursday Island on his return from South. We hope to receive a visit ere long, when it is believed the Bishop will proceed to Maytown, where very many are looking forward to his promised visit.

The Bishop of New Guinea left here for his Diocese on the 24th May. His Lordship is looking remarkably well, having apparently recovered from his serious sickness which had taken such hold upon him when passing through en route to England eighteen months ago.

We are all pleased to hear of the Bishop's successful visit.

At the present moment many country visitors are in town for the Friendly Society's sports, &c., the Rector hoping to renew his acquaintance with them.

PORT DOUGLAS AND MOSMAN.

Rain and sickness—these form the greater topics for this issue from the southernmost parish.

Largely in consequence of the abnormal rainfall, amounting now to 150 or 160 inches since January, we have had the most severe outbreak of fever that has ever been known here. And it has been fever, too, of a very virulent type, as our list of deaths will show.

Early in March, Messrs. Crawford and Muntz each lost a child, and Mr. R. Berzinski, an old settler at Craiglie, also succumbed. The general sympathy with these families was at its height when the fever appeared in the family of Mr.

R. O. Jones, the Rector's Warden at the Mosman. Here the results were even more sad, for two daughters were lost to Mr. and Mrs. Jones within a week; Carrie, aged 18, and the youngest, Ivy, aged 5. So terrible a bereavement in a family so well known and highly respected caused universal and loudly-expressed sympathy.

We also have to record the death, through phthisis, of Mr. Percy Thomas, aged 30. He was universally liked for his readiness to enter into every social and athletic project, and he also was among those foremost in helping in St. David's Choir. For some time before his death, and up to the last, he was the guest of Mr. F. Barnard, whose family, with his own brother, nursed him with unremitting care.

Such a list of deaths, combined with the long-continued sickness of Mrs. Rose, Mrs. McLean, Mr. J. Carstens, Mrs. Pringle, Mr. Phillips, Bertie Jones, and many others, has made the past few months a sorrowful time. We are glad to say, however, that all these latter are now either recovered or on a fair way to recovery.

We welcome to our midst the new field manager of the mill, Mr. Evans, who has shown his interest in Church matters very practically at the Mulgrave.

The Rectory Fair will be held in the Mosman Show Week, and though its success has, of course, been interfered with by so much sickness, yet it bids fair to do very well. A liberal offer of £20 towards the funds has been received from Mr. A. M. Draper provided six others give £5 each. We thank Mr. Draper, and also congratulate him on his recent marriage.

Easter Meetings showed improved financial prospects at both centres. About £200 had been spent on Church improvements. The Vestries for 1903-4 are as under:—

Port Douglas (St. Andrew's).—Wardens: Mr. T. T. Devine (Rector's), Mr. J. S. D. Crees (People's). Council: Messrs. F. Buchanan, H. Crees, J. Phillips, C. and E. Poney, and S. Tannock.

Mosman (St. David's).—Wardens: Messrs. R. O. Jones (Rector's), and F. Barnard (People's). Council: Messrs. Evans, Lock, N. Pringle, Rex, Welchman, and White.

NORMANTON.

Lent has ended, Easter has come and gone, and they have left us older, and, we hope, a little wiser and better than before. Lenten teaching is acceptable only to the few in the Far North; but all can enter into the joy of Easter. Hence our Lenten Services differed little from those of the rest of the year, while at Easter they were in appearance all that the heart could wish for, and were the brightest and heartiest that we have had for many years. On Easter Eve a band of faithful and willing workers devoted the afternoon and evening to decorating the Church, and succeeded in creating a very pretty effect—indeed, setting themselves a task to surpass it in future years.

We were indebted to Mrs. Sherrin for pot plants and ferns from her green house, and to Mr. Millar for Pandanus leaves, etc., from the country. Mr. and Mrs. Millar, Mr. and Mrs. Sherrin, Miss Baker, Miss Davies, and Mr. McCombe, were deserving of our best thank for their labour and skill in beautifying the Church so appropriately for the season.

Our annual vestry meeting was likewise a vast improvement. We had the largest attendance for very many years past—indeed, a full house. The Rector's and Churchwardens' reports were most cheery and satisfactory. Besides paying all current expenses, the Wardens reported having spent considerably over one hundred pounds in enlarging the Rectory. The Rector reported that he had already in hand a substantial nucleus of a fund for renovating the Church.

The Choir and Sunday School had considerably increased both in number and usefulness.

The Rector nominated Mr. F. Wallin as his Warden, and on Mr. R. Millar declining to be nominated as People's Warden, Mr. C. D. O'Brien was unanimously elected to that position.

The Rector then nominated Messrs. Millar, Sherrin, and Thorn as his Councillors, and after a ballot Messrs. Hall, Long, Catt, Cranch, Welsh, and Müller were declared elected Parochial Councillors.

CROYDON AND GOLDEN GATE.

After six months of zealous work, Mr. W. M. Wilkinson, early in April, left the Parish to enter the Bishop's College at Thursday Island.

During the trying summer weather he remained in charge, and by his untiring efforts gave stimulus to the spiritual work of the Church. At the first meeting of the Parochial Council held after his departure, it was unanimously agreed that some little token of appreciation should be sent to Mr. Wilkinson. A gold cross has now been forwarded, with a letter expressing the Council's just estimation of his zeal and labour.

The Rector again took over the charge of the Parish, having returned from his six months' rest in Melbourne.

The injury caused to the knee some nine months ago has so far recovered that the parish work is little interfered with.

The Easter Meeting was held at St. Margaret's, Monday, April 27th. The report and balance sheet were eminently satisfactory, especially when taking into consideration the depression which the goldfield is at present undergoing. We have again warmly to thank the ladies' committee for their patient efforts both at Croydon and Golden Gate; they have repeatedly saved the finances of the Church. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year:—Wardens: Messrs. H. Bechtal (Rector's), E. D. Harries (People's). Parochial Councillors: Messrs. Frost and Greig (Rector's), North, Maslen, Foster and Connell. Mr. G. Andrews represents St. John's, Golden Gate.

A complete acetylene gas plant has been duly installed at St. Margaret's. It has added greatly both to the appearance of the building and the comfort of the congregation. Owing to the help given by members of Church, both in work and offerings, a £40 plant has cost the Church not above £18. As great as its benefit is already felt to be, it will not be until the summer weather that the comfort caused by the change of light will be fully realised. Not only this, but the cost of lighting the Church is now considerably less than the price of what was the necessary kerosene.

A pleasing feature of the Services at St. Margaret's of late has been that part undertaken by the members of the choir. There is no Service which can be rendered so brightly, attractively and impressively, and in a manner so helpful to worship, as those of our English Church, and the interest which is now taken by an efficient choir, under Mr. T. H. Waldie, has greatly aided to increase the interest and attendance of the Sunday evening congregations.

Easter Services were well attended. The evening Service at St. Margaret's was thronged. The number of communicants on Easter Sunday administrations was the largest for many years. It is gratifying to note the increased interest in Good Friday and Ascension Day Services.

The congregations at St. Margaret's and St. John's Morning Services are more miserable and more discouraging than ever. Is there any hope that our people here will realise the miserable offering of an hour at the end of a Sunday, to give to worship? The daily Service for children is one of the brightest spots on the pages recording parish work at Croydon. It is encouraging to see the great increase in attendance of late, and trust that this will continue.

There have been alterations in the staff of teachers at both Sunday Schools. Mrs. Stewart, recently from Melbourne, has taken charge of the eldest girls' class at St. Margaret's, and Miss A. Boynes again teaches the infants. Mr. Philp has accepted the post of superintendent at St. John's Sunday School. He will be assisted by Miss A. Jensen, Messrs P. Tansy and L. Jones. We cannot overestimate the importance of the instruction of those of tender years in the truths of our great Christian faith, and we devoutly pray that the labours of those who are willing to help in the work will be abundantly blessed by Him, one of whose behests is to feed His lambs.

We must not forget to mention that owing to the help rendered by Messrs. E. D. Harries, G. Grey, and J. Morrison, both at St. Margaret's and St. John's, the Church people were provided with Evensong during the Rector's fortnight's absence at Georgetown.

GEORGETOWN.

This centre was visited at latter end of April by Rev. Godfrey Smith. Services were held at Georgetown and Cumberland, which were very well attended. Einasleigh and Donnyville were also visited. The Sunday School at Georgetown is now under the charge of Messrs. Pigram, assisted by Misses F. Edwards, M. Lewis, M. Plate, and B. Plate, the latter also presiding over the organ. Great praise is due to those who under the most trying circumstances have maintained this School during the severe summer weather at Cumberland. Mr. Williamson takes a great interest in the teaching of Christianity to the young of that place, and has a prosperous little Sunday School under his charge. We trust that days of great blessing are in store for the Sunday School at Georgetown and Cumberland.

The small monthly offerings at Georgetown are collected by Misses F. Edwards, Green, M. Plate, and those at Cumberland by Miss Aplin.

PALMERSTON.

We regret that we missed the opportunity of giving an account of our first quarter of the year. The past six months have been very busy ones in the parish, marked by events of importance in our annals. On February 23rd the first wedding was performed, when Mr. Morris, of Burrundie, was quietly married to Miss Stephen, of Sydney, at 7.30 a.m. The Service was followed by a Celebration. Lent was, as our Church enjoins, a quiet period marked in an encouraging way by well-attended Services. Throughout the season the choir (enlarged for the performance of the Crucifixion) practised with great diligence and devotion for the Special Easter Services and the Oratorio. The latter was duly performed on Good Friday evening, before a large and attentive congregation, and in a manner reflecting the greatest credit on the Choir. The Easter Sunday Services again proved the decided advance in skill and training. In the evening, Bunnett's beautiful setting of the Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis was sung for the first time. Throughout Holy Week the attendance at all the Services was good, and the numbers present at the Celebrations show the increasing appreciation of the greatest of the privileges of the Church. The Communicants' Guild has had services each month, held on the 1st Wednesday. The number of members has not increased to any extent since its first meeting, but this, we believe, is chiefly owing to the fact that some misunderstanding still exists as to the object of the Guild. We look forward to the completion of our Parish Room, when it is proposed to place the Guild on a proper business footing, and to organise its working. Mr. Tully has most kindly officiated as secretary pro tem.

The Parish Room will, we believe, be completed during the coming week.

In Palmerston we now have 31 children on our roll. The average attendance is 22. Mrs. Clark has a class attended by four half-caste girls, and there is also an infant class of 12 children held at the Rectory. On Easter Sunday afternoon the first prize-giving was held. All the children were examined by the Rector, and the answers given were pleasing and intelligent.

The Wardens are again to be congratulated upon their total, £1138 (i.e., Palmerston £1081 6s. 6d., and Pine Creek £56 19s. 11d.). The balance for the year of £173 18s. 6d. is very satisfactory.

The Rector is pleased to say that he has received a total of £34 6s. 3d. for Church furnishing. This has supplied linen for the altar, and sacred vessels—the wooden cross will be replaced by one of brass, and the East wall will be covered with hangings of green brocade. Brock's Creek has been under a great trade depression for some time, and many of the inhabitants have left. The Church Services have been continued regularly at the hotel, through the kindness of Mr. and Mrs. Cruch. The Rector visits Yam Creek with this centre, and he thanks Mr. and Mrs. Roberts for the extreme kindness they have always shown. The services have been held in their drawing-room. At Burrundie it has been impossible to obtain a congregation, and therefore the Services have been discontinued. We are pleased to say that since December, a Sunday Service is held at Pine Creek, by Mr. Wilson (hon. Lay Reader). The Sunday School, under the care of Mrs. Schunke, Mrs. Marsh, and Miss Bell, prospers, and there are 17 children on the roll. Mrs. Schunke holds a weekly social gathering, when the children read, work, and play. The people are to be congratulated on their excellent and earnest work.

We have started a modest Parish Magazine, which, at present, we are able to supply free. Funds will not permit of any enlargement.

The Easter Vestry Meeting was held on Tuesday evening, April 28th. Mr. Andrews was nominated Rector's Churchwarden, and Mr. Langdon was re-elected as the People's Warden. The last week in April was marked by the solemnization of two weddings—an unprecedented occurrence in Palmerston. On the 27th, Thomas Henry Pearce, of the Katharine, N.T., was married to Miss Mary Jennings, of Palmerston, and on the 30th, Egbert Robert Reeves to Miss Anna Maria Higgins. Both Services were fully choral, and, on each occasion there was a large attendance of friends and the townsfolk.

BIBLES, for School use.

The most serviceable Bible is the nonpareil, very strongly bound in sheepskin, price 1s. These Bibles are built to wear.

[Nonpareil type.—O Lord our God, how excellent is thy name.]

A cheaper Bible can be got at 8d., printed in ruby, strongly bound in cloth.

A still cheaper Bible is sold at 6d.; printed in pearl. This is bound in cloth, strong, but the print is very small.

If references are required, the cheapest is in nonpareil type, price 1s. 9d.

[A description of better bound Bibles will be found in the Reward Catalogue.]

PRAYER BOOKS. For School use or for lending in Church.
Six kinds are kept. These are all very strong in the binding, especially those in red basil.

Ruby, enamelled cloth, 4d.

„ Red basil skiver, 5d.

Nonpareil, enamelled cloth, 5d.; 4s. 6d. per dozen.

„ Red basil skiver, 7d.; 6s. 6d. per dozen.

Bourgeois, sheepskin, 7d. } On the inside of the front cover „ Red basil skiver, 8d. } is a guide to the places in the Service, making this Book specially adapted for visitors.

Three other sizes are kept in the sheepskin binding, viz.:—
Small Pica at 1s. 1d.; Pica at 1s. 6d.; and Great primer at 2s. 6d.

HYMNS ANCIENT AND MODERN.

Personal.

Miss Paige, assisted by Miss Jones, most kindly undertook a Carpenterian Stall at the Melanesian Missionary Sale of Work in Sydney. A number of shells and curios were sent down by our South Sea boys, and the result was most gratifying. The stall was the most attractive of the sale, and Miss Paige was enabled, after paying all expenses, to hand over £25 to the diocesan funds. This result was far beyond our expectations, and we are most grateful to our energetic Sydney secretary.

Rev. H. W. Curtis, after many years of faithful service to the Church in the North, has resigned the Parish of Cooktown, and leaves us at the end of September for the Diocese of Melbourne. We are aware that it is hopeless for us to expect to retain married clergy with a young family in this diocese, where the conditions of life and work are so hard, and Mr. Curtis has surely fairly earned the right to respect at the hands of the more favoured Church in the South a recognition of his long service here. We wish him every happiness and success in his new sphere of work, and we are sure that his bright and cheery face will be welcome wherever he goes.

Miss Buchanan has set a good example by entering for the Th. A. Examination, which will commence on October 12th. We wish her success, and hope that other Churchmen and Churchwomen will test the reality of their theological knowledge by entering next year. The fee is £1 ls., and the examination can be held at any centre under the Bishop's direction, the papers being sent up from Sydney. The subjects are: Holy Scripture, Prayer Book, Church Doctrine, and Church History.

Rev. G. H. Smith has been appointed Rector of Croydon in succession to Rev. W. H. Curtis. He hopes to enter on his duties shortly before Christmas.

Our Illustration is of Darnley Island, on the extreme North-East of the Diocese, towards New Guinea.

DIARY OF EXPEDITION TO THE MITCHELL RIVER.

BISHOP OF CARPENTARIA.

I left Normanton with Inspector Galbraith, in his buggy, on Saturday, July 11th, at 9 a.m. We were delayed some time waiting for the punt to cross the river, and having at last got over, drove for about twenty miles over flat, rather uninteresting plains, to Maggieville, a station on a fine waterhole just beyond Walker's Creek. Here we had dinner, and then drove on twenty-four miles over sandy but well grassed country to Midlothian Station (Underwood Bros.), on a large lagoon covered with beautiful water lilies. There are a large number of lemon and orange trees here, which seem to do well. After a short stay and change of horses we left at 5.40 p.m., and got on well till dark, when we had to go very slowly until the moon rose, reaching Delta Station (fifty-four miles from Normanton), at 8 p.m. Here we were hospitably entertained for the night.

Next day was Sunday, but as Mr. Galbraith had to be back by a certain date it was necessary to travel or give up the expedition altogether. I had, however, time to read the Service and a little Greek Testament before we started at 9 a.m. The road was fairly good for about twelve miles, when we came to the Gilbert River, here much narrower than it is further up, but running in a deep channel. We found the first crossing too steep to be practicable, and had to go some distance up the river and then return along the bed. Three blacks were fishing in the river, and they brought in a number more as we camped for lunch, and I gave them some tobacco, and the women some beads and handkerchiefs. There was a little piccaninny who looked pleased when Mr. G. prodded him in the ribs until it began to dawn on him that it was a white man, and then he yelled. For the rest of the day the road was unspeakably bad, all holes and broken country, and our progress was very slow. We only got through about fifteen miles, and camped after sundown on Middle Creek at a small waterhole. It was a beautiful night and very mild, but the mosquitoes were very much in evidence. On Monday, July 13th, we were off at 8.25 a.m., and for some twelve or fourteen miles had almost as bad a road as the previous day to Picnic Lagoon, where there were beautiful lilies and a very beautiful blue and white bell-shaped flower. From here the road was better up to the Staaten River, which we crossed at 1.15 p.m. It is a fine broad river bed with a large running stream, and is navigable up to within four or five miles of the crossing. Three miles more brought us to Wambi's, a selection owned by a naturalized South Sea Islander, who has a white assistant. They have only been there two years, and the progress made is amazing. There is a comfortable house and splendid garden, with all kinds of fruit trees, apparently in good order. The soil is only the ordinary soil round there, and it suggests what might be done if there were more homesteads on the numerous lagoons and creeks in this district. If two men in the intervals of looking after their cattle, fencing, etc., can make such a place by themselves in two years, it seems absurd to say that only the Chinaman can make a garden succeed in North Queensland. About thirty Aborigines whom we saw on the Staaten followed us here, and I talked to them and told them about the Station we hoped to start on the Mitchell, and gave them tobacco and beads, which were much appreciated. Camps comprising some two hundred or more were further down the River. Here we found a trooper with fresh horses, and leaving at 3.40 p.m. we reached a fine waterhole about 6 p.m. At Wambi's I saw a magnificent alligator skull, poisoned after it had taken a valuable stallion. The skull measured 2 feet 7 inches in length, and the alligator was said to have been twenty-five feet in length.

We left Wambi's at 4 p.m. and went on twelve miles to a waterhole near a saltwater arm, on which we camped for the night, leaving about 7.45 the next morning. After travelling 1½ hours we reached a rocky waterhole containing plenty of fish, and spent three-quarters of an hour trying to catch some, but the hooks were too big for the small trout, which alone seemed inclined to bite. About eight miles more brought us to Cattle Creek, where we camped for dinner at 11.15 a.m. I noticed here a pretty pink insect-eating plant. Its stem was covered with victims, including one largish beetle. In the afternoon we travelled on through beautiful country, splendidly watered, to the Nassau River. Two fine cassowaries strode across the road in front of us, a most unusual sight, as they are not known in this part of the country as a rule. We passed some beautiful lagoons with duck and other water-fowl, and saw also a pair of magnificent eagle hawks, close to the track. The crossing of the Nassau was very bad. It is a deep river with plenty of water in it. The constable and I held on to the buggy behind and dug our heels into the earth to ease it down the steep bank, and when it got to the bottom the front part dived gracefully under water, to the considerable detriment of our baggage. I sat up behind and got across dry. About twelve miles further on we crossed the Scrutton, and a few miles further on determined to camp, as it was almost dark. We had very little time to fix up the camp, and regretted it when it started to rain and continued steadily for a couple of hours, wetting blankets, clothes, and everything that we had not stowed securely away. About three-quarters of an inch fell, and my mosquito net proved a very poor protection; however, I gathered my wet blankets round me and managed to get a good sleep after the rain stopped. In the morning we packed up our wet belongings without waiting for breakfast and drove on eight miles to Rutland Plains Station, where we were hospitably received, and held a grand drying of all our belongings. The station is beautifully situated in wide plains, watered with fine lagoons, and is the extreme north of settlement in these parts.

Our party was here re-arranged, Sub-Inspector Galbraith remaining at the station, and Mr. Bowman having to return to town on important business. Our exploring party accordingly consisted of Dr. Roth, Constable Smith, Mr. Alick Macdonald (who has been in the district some twenty years), a black tracker named O'Grady, and myself. We had also an old gin to guide us. Alick, who knows all the natives well, had taken the precaution of sending out messages the previous day to say that we were coming, and with only friendly intentions.

We left the station at 10.30 a.m. and travelled north-west, crossing Magnificent Creek, which here bounds the run at $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles. It is a fine, well watered creek, with large trees and thick scrub along the banks. The natives are not allowed south of this creek. From Magnificent we went north for nearly four miles through fine, well grassed and timbered forest, to a creek along which we travelled a mile or so east, till we came across a dozen women and one lame old man collecting lily bulbs and roots, of which they had large nets, full, on their heads. There was an immense amount of talking and running, but we soon convinced them of our friendly intentions, and they accompanied us on east and north for about a mile and a-half towards Bosworth Creek. On crossing a plain we saw an imposing line of some twenty-five warriors, each armed with two or three immense spears, and drawn up in regular line. We inclined our course so as not to bear right down on them, and sent the tracker—O'Grady—who speaks their language, to reassure them, and they marched along parallel with us, forming a picturesque sight with their clean shining naked limbs, springy gait, weapons, and red-knobbed fire sticks. We soon reached Old Bosworth Station; the hut was gone, but bananas and other fruit trees were growing well in the rich soil. The station was started about three years ago but abandoned shortly afterwards, chiefly on account of the large numbers and troublesome character of the natives. After dinner we held a grand distribution of tobacco and beads, fish-hooks, etc. Between fifty and sixty had by this time arrived. None wore any clothing whatever, and seemed all fine well made handsome men free from disease, and as great a contrast as the mind can conceive to the rag clothed loafers about the towns. Only one or two had even a word of English, but all knew Alick and evidently trusted him. I esteem that we were very fortunate in having him as guide. I addressed them through the interpreter and told them of our objects, and that we came as friends, and would come again to help and teach them to the best of our power. One old man had a curious knife set in a wooden back about a foot long. It gives a frightful wound, and is, I believe, chiefly used for disciplining the women, and teaching them to respect their lords. We left at 3.30 p.m., experiencing some difficulty in finding a crossing over the creek, and travelled north by east, and finally north by west for about seven miles, crossing at two miles a sandy creek called Pulpamara, and a little later the Kilpatrick. The country is intersected by small, well-watered creeks, with thick scrub on their banks, and plenty of grass and timber. The last mile and a-half was through plains. We had intended to go north-west to the Mitchell, but the Gwinni's (the name of the tribe) whom we had taken on to guide us kept edging away to the west. They said that if they went to the Mitchell an alligator would eat them, but the real reason was that they were afraid of the stronger tribe of the Kokomundyunas, who held the northern part of the Reserve. We camped at 5.30 p.m. on a good large waterhole, apparently very deep. The natives called it Ular. On talking over the matter we came to the conclusion that we could not go further east without leaving ourselves insufficient time to explore the country towards the coast, as we were limited for time, Inspector Galbraith wishing to return from the station on the 22nd, before which date we had to meet the "Melbidir" and return.

Next day (July 17th) we left Ular at 8.10 a.m., and travelled west, crossing a large creek (Mundoia) at 8.50, and still continuing through plain country, past a lagoon (Renyiba), we crossed a large creek (Bosworth Creek?) at 10.30. We got into beautiful forest country, well grassed, and soon reached a lagoon (Trainyum), where the camp of Mr. Garraway's party last year was pointed out to us. It was apparently the spot where they were attacked by the blacks, our guides among the number; but they were discreetly silent as to their share in the matter, only saying that they were afraid to follow him further towards the coast. We went on a couple of miles and camped for dinner at a very fine waterhole with big timber called Burridgiajije. The country still beautiful forest with thick scrub on the numerous creeks and waterholes. The water here was exceptionally good. Alick remarked that he had never in all his experience seen country so well suited to the blacks for food and other requisites of life. The great question of discussion during the last two days was whether or no it were possible to reach the sea north of the Magnificent. No one had ever traced that creek to its mouth, but Mr. Garraway was supposed to have reached the sea north of it, or at least never to have crossed it. After dinner we tried to keep north of west, but found a salt arm and travelled on west over burnt plains with scrubby creeks, past a large swamp, and then over two brackish arms about a mile apart, which apparently represent the Magnificent. Not long after we came to a camp of natives, and saw a number of well-made bags etc., and noted the process of making flour into a huge cooliman, over 3 feet 6 inches long. A sieve is made of strong string, and the large tubers of the dioscorea are pulped through the sieve, leaving the skin, etc., behind. I gave some of the old women glass necklaces, which were received with cries of delight. After short stay we went on again, and camped at 4.30 p.m. on a good hole, surrounded entirely by thick scrub (Conbarinjella). It was a beautiful night, but with heavy dew. Dr. Roth gave three of the men looking-glasses. They were delighted with them, never having seen anything of the kind, and offered them to the Doctor and myself to have our impressions taken on them apparently thinking that it was permanent in some way. Alick's volunteered assurance that there was not the slightest danger to be apprehended to-night, reminded me that our friendly guides had not only tried to surprise Mr. Garraway's party last year, but had about two years ago speared and very nearly killed the captain of a cutter a few miles from where we were. The attack was carefully planned, the captain being enticed on shore by the bait of a false letter held in a cleft stick as though from the Station he was in search of, and he was speared as he sculled ashore, being only saved by his mate's prompt use of a rifle from the boat. Had they waited till he was ashore he would have been certainly killed.

After I had turned in an old man came and said that the devil had told him that the boat was waiting where we expected her (he was fairly correct for she was not there), and that if Alick liked he would keep the devil away from our camp all night. Alick told him that if he did so he should have some Johnny-cake in the morning, and he went off, I believe, to perform the requisite incantations.

Saturday, July 18th, we left camp at 8 a.m., and travelled west for a mile and a-half then north for about two miles, then south-west to clear an arm, and then north-west, reaching the coast half a mile south of a broad estuary at 11 a.m. We found a native well through the scrub a little way back from the beach, and marked a line into it and camped. I rode with Alick to the point where we found on native tracks. Blazed $\frac{M}{I}$ a tree on point beach, M on west, and on east side. The estuary seems to be the arm or creek in which the Magnificent runs. We sent two boys across to see if there was any sign of the boat. They cut two logs of mangrove about 6 feet long, and tapering from 10 inches to 5 inches in diameter. When they came to deep water they sat astride of the thin end, and with the big end in front lay forward on kicking out with the feet and balancing with one hand. They returned next day with news of the boat. We left at 2.30, and after travelling some distance down the beach strayed inland to a good waterhole (Bolverégeranda) on the east side of a high well-timbered sand-ridge. A little over a mile brought us back on to the beach, where we camped for the night enjoying the coolness and entire absence of mosquitoes. Alick and I rode down along the beach to the south for about four miles before dark, and about one and a-half miles south of our camp passed the spot where Mr. Garraway had camped, noting places where horses had been tied to trees, fires made, and saplings cut down to signal with. No signs of the boat, which should be passing to south.

Sunday (July 19th), after breakfast, he divine Service. Second lesson, as so often appropriate, "We all kneeled down on the shore." Gave a short address, and prayed for the aborigines, that they may be defended from themselves and from others, and that they may be brought to a fuller and a happier life. In the afternoon Alick rode down to the large estuary to the north, but could see nothing of the boat. It was a most perfect evening, though rather too cool. Alick gave us an interesting account of the rescue of two of the survivors of the "Kanahooka." The boat, after being swamped, landed about where we were, and the captain, chief engineer, and two men started to walk along the beach, while the others rowed. The boat was, however, carried out to sea, and eventually made the Norman Lightship. The four on shore made their way south till they came to the Nassau, which they started to swim. The chief engineer went down once, but the other three had almost reached the bank when one of the men struck his foot against something in the water, and a moment after the captain was carried off by a shark or alligator. The other two men followed the beach till they came to a stretch of mud, in crossing which they became exhausted and fell down. Alick, who was looking after some cattle on the Mentana run, rode down to the east that morning to have a look at the sea after the storm, and riding out to a point of mangroves saw two logs lying on the mud, and had a discussion with his blackboy, who said they were alligators. After looking at them for nearly half an hour he was going away when he heard a faint cry, and turning round saw an alarm raised. He got the men out, but they were too exhausted to give any account of themselves, except to ask that help should be sent to their mates in the other boat. The occupants of this boat landed much further north, within the sphere of influence of the Mapoon Mission, to which they were taken by the natives.

Monday (July 20th). We left next morning, all the better for our Sunday rest, and travelled down the beach south for five miles where we found water (none too good) in a billabong parallel and close to the beach. We reached the creek (Tobannaman) about two miles further on, at 10.15 a.m., and found no signs of the boat; nor was it possible to cross the creek. On the north side of the creek, on the beach about a hundred and fifty yards from the creek, we marked a tree ^M and another a yard to the north of it with a small T. We went back to the water for dinner, and then travelled about four and a-half miles north north-east over small plains and sand-ridges till we came to a fair-sized waterhole or lagoon (called Wanbeyo) on the east of a high sand-ridge and the west of a large plain. It was surrounded by trees, among which is prominent a gigantic fig which has grown alongside of a huge ti-tree, and is gradually strangling it. Here we camped, and at dusk a number of blacks made their appearance out of the scrub. After a brief interview they were told to lay down their spears and to depart to their camp till the morning. We passed a quiet night. There was no sound from the natives, and the only disturbing element were the mosquitoes, which were peculiarly large and vicious, notably one kind with abnormally developed heads and probosces. The first thing in the morning we sent out runners to the coast to see if the "Melbidir" was in sight, and soon after breakfast we heard a great shouting and proclaiming the news that she had arrived. Dr. Roth, Alick, and I accordingly set off, leaving the constable and trooper to guard the camp. An hour's ride brought us on to the beach and the welcome confirmation of the news. We made a quaint cavalcade with our army of sable retainers, who inspired some alarm in the mind of the two black boys on the boat. The dingey came ashore for us at the mouth of Tobannaman Creek, the bar of which is extremely shallow, and we were soon on board. After dinner the Doctor and Alick set off on their return journey, and the captain went surveying the mouth of the creek, while I put things in order for my sea voyage. We passed a rather troubled night, for the wind got round to the westward, and the ship rolled heavily, but I slept well with the consolation that even if one's bed did roll one was safe from a spear in the small of the back.

Next day we were off at 7 a.m. and sailed north for 25 miles to the North Mitchell. After getting into very shallow water we were obliged to return some distance and finally anchored about two miles out off the south point of the North Mitchell opening. In the afternoon the captain took soundings off the mouth of the river. I wrote and read.

Next day (Thursday, July 23rd) we left the ship early in the dingey: the captain, myself, and the two black boys, and pulled ashore, about two miles, to the south sand-spit at the mouth of the river, which is very shallow, and impeded by banks. Here we landed, and blazed a tree ^M 23. Then we sailed and pulled up the river, which is fringed with a thick growth of mangroves for about two and a-half miles, the course of the river being north-west. As it seemed impossible to penetrate the mangroves on the south bank, we determined to explore the north bank, where we could see open plains through the trees. The river is swarming with alligators and sharks. We passed at least fifteen of the former basking on the banks, and shot several, but they always floundered back into the water. Making the boat fast to the mangroves, and carrying with us some food and water, we set off north-east across a large plain covered with poor grass and a salt pigweed, often of a brilliant red colour in the distance. On the other side of the plain we saw trees marking the course of a small creek which runs into the sea about three miles north of the North Mitchell, and as smoke was rising from them we thought we might succeed in finding some natives, but after walking for nearly an hour and passing some old but no fresh tracks we desisted, and turned south-east for about a mile and a half, which brought us on to a higher reach of the river about four miles from the mouth. Here we camped for lunch; and, walking a little way up the river I found a regular native ferry, with fully a dozen swimming logs laid up on the bank, remains of fires, etc. I choose out the best of the logs, which are made of extremely light mangrove, and brought it back to the boat for Dr. Roth, who was, I knew, much interested in them. In the meantime the captain was stalking an enormous alligator, at least twenty feet in length, who was enjoying a siesta just below the opposite bank, just below the ferry, waiting, I suppose, for passengers to arrive. He was badly hit, but managed to reach the water, and coming to the surface again was hit a second time, when he finally disappeared, and will, I hope, take no more toll. We had a very hot tramp back to the boat, and were thankful to find some water still in the water-bag. We sailed down the river pleasantly with the tide, but towards the mouth of the river found ourselves in a cul de sac, walled in by mud-banks. We were able to retrace our steps for awhile, but finally had to all get out and wade through soft, slimy mud, so yielding that but for the support of the boat we should have sunk altogether. Half-an-hour's real hard toil brought the boat back into the right channel, where was about six feet of water. Just as we were nearing it, and still in the water, we saw a shark, who immediately altered his course and came straight for us. When about fifteen yards off the captain let fly at him with his revolver, and he left in great haste. Once in the channel we climbed into the boat again, wet and weary, and went down to the point, where the captain landed to make some measurements and observations, and finding it impossible to reach the further bank in the low state of the tide we set off for the ship. The channel is a long and tortuous one, and there was only about three feet of water on the bar. The wind had got round to the south-east, and we had to row out through a very nasty lumpy sea for the ship, which I was unfeignedly glad to reach just before sunset, after a hard day's work. I left a parcel of beads and tobacco for the blacks in payment for the log which we appropriated. On board I got off my wet and dirty things, and a couple of buckets of sea water poured over me made me a new man and quite ready for tea.

Next day we left at daylight for the one hundred and eighty mile run to the Albert River. Everyone on board was most kind, but the trip can hardly be described as a pleasant one. To begin with we were short of water, and had to dispense with fresh water for washing, and then we had a series of head winds and rough seas, so that in the first two days we did only a hundred miles. On Saturday night we got a very rough sea indeed, but fortunately a favourable wind, and we sighted the coast six or seven miles to the east of our destination; but there the breeze dropped, and we crept along at the rate of barely a mile an hour to the Albert Bar. I was suffering, too, from a slight attack of fever, brought on, no doubt, by sitting so long in my wet clothes on the North Mitchell. The tide was falling, but the captain determined to make an effort to enter. We struck, however, on the bar, but fortunately got off again, and anchored in deep water for the night. In the evening I held service in my cabin, and all the crew were present. We had a calm and beautiful night.

Next day, with a higher tide, we got enough breeze to carry us over the bar, and into the fine deep river. Here it died away and we had to anchor till a breath of air enabled us to creep up about five miles, to the Ballast Ground, a piece of land elevated a few feet above the surrounding flats. Here I had previously arranged to have horses sent to meet me on the following day. It was late in the afternoon when they arrived, and I bade farewell to the "Melbidir," which immediately made sail. I do not think I ever had a drearier ride than the sixteen miles from the Ballast Ground to Burke-town. The whole way lies over bare salt pans, without a tree or a blade of grass as far as the eye can reach. The Great Sahara cannot be more barren. Not being able to get much out of the blackboys who brought the horses, I was glad, at 8 p.m., to find myself under the hospitable roof of my old friend, Mr. A. S. L. Wells, and to be able to indulge in the long-denied luxury of a good wash. I found a big mail awaiting me, and was soon absorbed in the business of the diocese, from which, for the last three weeks, I had been absolutely cut off.

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA,
NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. III.—No. 12. Thursday Island, Oct. 1, 1903

THE STATISTICS OF THE DIOCESE.

The Statistics of the Diocese for the year ending Easter, 1903, have been tabulated and arranged by the Diocesan Secretary. They are published in the present issue of the Carpentarian. This being the second time that we have been able to compile figures relating to diocesan work, it becomes interesting to mark the advance which has been made during the past year. The statistics reveal a condition of undoubted progress, and it is gratifying to note the Church's increased activity in the several departments of her work. This is especially noticeable in the more frequent Celebrations of the Holy Communion and the much larger number of individual Communicants. We also notice a substantial addition to the number of Sunday School scholars, carrying with it an increase in the number of teachers.

There have been more confirmees, but on the other hand baptisms have decreased. The burials are also less in number than in the previous year, a good sign. The number of marriages is larger, and we note that the "banns" have been read in six instances.

With regard to the financial statistics, the increased income and expenditure of the parishes is striking. Under the heading of "direct giving," we note a much larger amount than was given last year; the same applies also to "indirect giving." Special efforts seem to have been made in most of the six parishes to build Churches, Halls, and Rectories. A total of £1457 was spent in this way. Three parishes have failed to fulfil their diocesan obligations; and only one has contributed anything towards missions.

The financial returns show conclusively that a more generous spirit of giving has been awakened in the Diocese, and that Churchpeople generally are making some effort to overtake the work which the Church is bound to do.

The diocesan statistics are well worth careful perusal: and we commend them to the consideration of Churchpeople within and without the Diocese.

ORDINATION AT CROYDON.

The first ordination in the Diocese of Carpentaria was held at Croydon on Sunday, August 16th, when Mr. W. M. Wilkinson was admitted to the Order of Deacons.

Mr. Wilkinson has been working as Stipendiary Lay Reader in the diocese since 1900, and is universally respected for his unselfish devotion to duty. He had been in residence at Bishop's College for some months previous to the ordination.

The church was filled with a large and reverent congregation, in which men largely predominated, when the clergy entered the church at 10.30 a.m. in the following order:—Churchwardens, Messrs. Bechtel and Harries, Mr. W. M. Wilkinson, Rev. W. Hudson, M.A., Rev. G. H. Smith, carrying the Bishop's Staff, the Bishop of the Diocese. The music was especially good, and the solemn service was followed by the congregation with the deepest attention. The sermon was preached by Rev. W. Hudson, M.A., and we subjoin it with some abbreviation,

"A faithful messenger to him that sent him." Proverbs xxv. 13. "All men since the time of Adam have been sent as general messengers of life and love and duty one to another, and each man his own message both to give and to receive. Some are able to speak their message, and some can only live it, but alas, how few of us are faithful. Yet as no man, save Jesus Christ, the God-man, has ever delivered his message wholly and perfectly, so I suppose there is no man but who has given at least some part of his message. The babe brings its message of love and beauty; youth, of love and duty; manhood, of duty and labour; and old age, of labour and patience, and in this respect we are all unprofitable servants. How we fail I have no need to tell you. Failure everywhere, but failure is the standard whereby we judge success. We are all quite conscious of it, but we are not quite so conscious that our failures afford a sufficient excuse for the shortcomings of others. We are very fond of saying that man has freedom of will, and we say it so often that some of us actually believe it. Now, if we said it less, and thought of it more, we should find it true only in exceptional circumstances. Jesus Christ alone lived and died a free man. How is that, you say? Because He chose to come here, and to endure all that an evil world thought, that they laid upon Him, and to set us an example and pattern of life, by following and copying which is your and my only hope of obtaining freedom. It is only as we know the truth and practise it, that we are free. Our Lord Himself says, 'The truth shall make you free.' Every neglect of truth, every evil deed, is a link or section in the chains of our slavery. No man can be free unless he serve willingly. It is on account of this slavery that God has need of messengers. While mankind was pure, God spake with us face to face. And now that God can no longer speak to us because of our sin, for He is of purer eyes than to behold evil, it is one of the strongest proofs of His love and goodness that He keeps on sending His messengers; His special messengers, and you, my dear brother, are one of these whom God sends to His people, for we are not less His people though we have sinned; God loves us still, in spite of our impurity. And it is this message of love—for 'God is love'—that you have to bear to His weak, wayward and sometimes wicked children. And as you carry this message, so are you or not a faithful messenger. This day you enter upon your work. Hitherto, as it were, you have been preparing for this, and to-day you begin. . . . The first who chose your calling was the Son of Man. Therefore, how great is this calling which only God Himself could initiate. He left a place of security and privilege to become a saviour of men. He was rich and for our sakes became poor. Even for him it seems to have been necessary, if He was to save men, that He should be one of them, mix with them, eat and drink with them, rejoice and suffer with them, and I am sure you have never thought it would be otherwise with you. You are not diminishing, but adding to your responsibilities. The Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and you are His successor. There are a few things which distinguish God's special messenger from the rest of His people—and the first is that he be sent. For he is no messenger who is not sent. Neither can one send himself, for no man taketh this honour unto himself. Even Jesus Christ came into the world to do the will of the Father who sent Him. And again He saith: 'As the Father who sent me, even so I send you.' Jesus Christ came into the world to deal with men as another man—a man of flesh and blood and of like passions with them. And he dealt with men not as a spirit, but as one of themselves. He founded a Church, not spiritual and invisible, but human; Himself a man, the chief corner stone, and this Church is the human means whereby we attain unto the spiritual. As a man Jesus Christ gave authority to His disciples and sent them forth as His first messengers. And they, by the exercise of this authority, sent forth other messengers. Thus are you to-day sent forth by the same authority, by the same method, and in the same spirit as Barnabas and Saul were sent by the Church of the Apostles. . . . In the second place the man must have his message. What is your message? The Gospel. And what is the Gospel? Tidings about God. But it is also good tidings. Therefore you will not go back to the God of that Mount that burned with fire and preach a gospel of blackness, darkness and tempest. Though you will never forget that there shall in no wise enter into the city of God anything that defileth, neither what soever worketh abomination and maketh a lie, and though on that account you will be led to reason of righteousness, temperance and judgment to come till sinners tremble, and even the people of God be ready to say, 'I do exceedingly fear and quake,' yet you will see to it that such a message is wrung from you, that it cost you as much as it costs your hearers, that even then you will never close without that offer of pardon and peace which makes the Gospel. The religion of which you are to-day ordained minister is a religion of good tidings of great joy to all people. But again you will see that your gospel is one of salvation. Now that means two things: First, that it is able to save second, that it is able to save to the uttermost. Your gospel must be able to save. That is another way of saying its contents must be Jesus Christ and Him crucified, and that these contents must be carried to the conscience of your hearers by the power of the spirit of God in you. And it must be able to save to the uttermost, which is another way of saying that it must reach every hearer at whatever stage of nature or grace he may be. . . . Your work in life is to deliver a message, you find that message in the Bible. But you will not make the mistake of running to the Bible for the message you are about to deliver. You will be a student of the Bible. You will study it prayerfully, systematically, and every part. You will gather the very spirit of the Bible into you. You will persevere with your study until the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom. Then whilst each occasion has its own message specially provided for it, the message will be far more than that of the immediate preparation. It will be charged with the largeness of the Bible itself, and fitted even beyond your own experience, though your experience will be steadily growing, to meet the case and catch the sympathy of every man or woman who may hear you. Be a student of the Bible, broadly, thoroughly, naturally. Be a man of prayer and of self-denial, ever on the watch to help men's souls and bodies as one who has to give account. That is being faithful. In the next place there are few qualities which are necessary in the messenger himself. The first is zeal. The message must be delivered at all costs. It is more than a matter of life and death, for it shuts up happiness or misery in eternity. I can best explain my point by quoting a little history. About 2500 years ago Xerxes

King of Persia, invaded Europe. He over-ran Greece and came to the gates of Athens, then the light and civilisation of the world. Xerxes brought a million men against a few miserable thousands of Athenians. The latter did not despair, for they were brave men, but they sent for help to their kinsmen of Sparta. Robert Browning in his poem of Pheidippides throws himself into the character of that messenger who ran all the way from Athens to Sparta to ask for help in the hour of peril. The very metre of the poem gives rhythm to his quick feet as he passes over hill and dale and dusty way till at last we stand with him, breathless in the midst of the Spartan Senate, and expectant, knowing the issues that wait on their reply. It came. It was slow, and cold—"Athens must wait as Sparta doth wait." Sparta was in no immediate danger, but Athens was in extremity. And we hear the stifled indignation of his noble heart in the concentrated passion of one line: Athens,—except for that sparkle, thy name—had mouldered to ash." My dear brother, you and I have been sent with a message, and we very often receive a similar reply, and like Pheidippides it is only the remembrance of Him by whom we are sent, that saves us from destruction. "Jesus,—except for that sparkle, thy Name—we had mouldered to ash." His message was more to Pheidippides than the world, than his life; he could think of nothing else. Now Jesus Christ has done more for us than Athens for Pheidippides. Therefore our zeal should not be less than his. From this same example we get the second requisite of the messenger. He must be unselfish. The messenger must lose himself in the message. The work of God is done by nameless priests, God entrusts his message to men who must be content to be messengers and nothing more. Pheidippides had one thought only—to be in time. And how anxiously he watches the faces of those slow old Spartans—for what? For a reward for Pheidippides? No! but will they come? Can he save Greece? Weariness, the long journey back are nothing to him; but will they grant him what he asks. There, my brother, let us strive for unselfishness like that. God only knows how much good service is spoiled by thoughts of self, by haunting ideas of promotion or reward. Do the hidden work in the shade as carefully as the work that shows. Take for your motto Ich Dien, and say with the master, "I am among you as one that serveth."

Varia.

It is much to be regretted that the words High Church and Low Church should ever be used. The extraordinary confusion of mind in which some people find themselves may be illustrated by the remark lately made in all good faith—"We are Low Church. We worship nothing; only go to hear the minister preach." The good old word Evangelical would never have lent itself to such an unconscious parody of the Christian Faith.

Those who call themselves unbelievers are often just as confused in their thought. We heard such an one lately remarking with much apparent sincerity—"Thank God there is one in whom I have not committed. I never did anything to help any religion in all my life!"

Unreasoning class hatred is becoming a real danger in Australian life, and is not only hurtful, but stupid, like all disregard of facts. In a small country town a man had been drinking hard night and day for six weeks, and was finally taken to the Hospital in a high fever. We happened a few days later to overhear the conversation of a dozen labourers on the subject.

First Labourer: "I suppose Jack will be dead by this time."

Second Labourer: "Yes, they took him to the Hospital, and let him die like a dog."

General Chorus: "Yes, die like a dog,"

Third Labourer: "They never go near him, and let him die like a dog."

Chorus: "Yes, die like a dog, die like a dog."

Now certain facts happen to be known to us:

1. The doctor and the whole staff of the small hospital had been up for three nights in succession with the patient, giving him every care that the mind of man could devise.

2. Not one of the speakers had been near the Hospital to enquire after their friend.

3. Not one of the speakers contributed anything to the much needed support of the Hospital.

When an institution like a well managed Hospital, existing solely for the public benefit, crossing no prejudices of creed, and restricting no passions, is so cruelly and stupidly belied, is it any wonder that the Church suffers from misrepresentation and abuse.

"I am a true Protestant member of the Church of England," said a man to us, the other day, "and I always stand up for my religion." "But I understand you are married to a Roman Catholic wife," we ventured. "Yes," "and that all your children are brought up as Roman Catholics." He admitted that it was so. "And that you subscribe liberally to the Roman Church." Yes, he always gave to the priest. "And you never come within the doors of your own Church." No, he did not know when he had been to Church. "And you subscribe nothing, on the grounds that you give all you can afford to your wife's Church," No, he did not subscribe to the Church. "Then, how do you stand to your religion?" But we got no answer.

A good story is told in the lately published biography of Sir T. W. Acland. At morning and evening prayers he used to address his servants on all sorts of subjects; sometimes showing sketches of the Seven Churches, sometimes describing General Gordon or explaining a contour map of Jerusalem. The effect was not always what was intended. One maid, on being asked if she had understood what he had been telling them, replied, "I never thought of doing that; I look across at the dear doctor, and I think to myself, You poor, dear gentleman, how you are enjoying yourself."

In a recent issue of a Southern Church party paper, we read a violent denunciation of the earnest secretary of an important Church Mission, because in an address he had spoken of the Holy Table as an Altar. In a book just published by the Presbyterian, Dr. R. A. Torrey, with the modest title, "How to hold a successful Revival," we read (p. 158): "If you are fortunate enough to have an altar in your Church" make the penitents come up to it. If the Church is not fortunate enough to have an Altar, then Dr. Torrey recommends that a temporary Altar should be made for the occasion. Verily one man may steal a horse, while another may not look over the hedge.

News of the Parishes.

THURSDAY ISLAND.

The Rev. W. P. Glover returned from a three months' holiday on July 30th. During his absence Mr. W. M. Wilkinson assisted in the parish, and did most loyal and helpful work. The Bishop, being in residence at Bishop's College for some six weeks, took Sunday duty at the Cathedral during that time.

On Sunday evening, June 28th, the Bishop of the Diocese administered the rite of Confirmation to five Japanese male adults who had been previously baptised by the Vicar. The service was said in Japanese, and was largely attended by friends of the candidates and others.

The Annual Sunday School Picnic was held on the cricket reserve on July 2nd, and proved a most interesting event. Thanks to the liberality of parishioners a splendid supply of provisions and a goodly assortment of prizes were distributed to the children. The little ones had a thoroughly enjoyable day.

The piano, which it was decided to obtain at the Easter meeting, has arrived from England, and is now placed in the Parish Institute. The cost of the instrument is about £60, the larger part of which has been collected by Messrs. Douglas, G. Smith, and J. Mitchell. Mr. Geo. Smith ordered the piano from England, and most successfully arranged for its purchase. The instrument, which is one of Brinsmead's, has already proved of great value to our parish work. Thanks to all those who have helped in the movement.

The Quetta Club is making good progress. At the half-yearly meeting, held on August 19th, the committee presented a report of the proceedings for the past six months, which showed that there had been an average attendance of 14 members at the various lectures, debates, discussions, etc. A good syllabus has been compiled for the current half-year. It is intended soon to add a gymnasium to the club.

A beautiful lectern Bible has been presented to the Cathedral by Mr. and Mrs. Abi Murray as an Easter offering. It is a copy of the revised version, well bound, and appropriately inscribed.

An electro-plated paten for the Communion Service has been given to the Cathedral by Mrs. H. T. Morley. It bears the following inscription, "Gloria in Excelsis—Nita Noella Morley. Christmas, 1901."

The Cathedral has also been adorned with a beautiful set of altar curtains, dossal and communion kneelers, which add considerably to its appearance.

On Sunday, 2nd August, a splendid Military Church Parade was held, the occasion being the visit of General Hutton, Federal Commandant, to the Island. Besides the General and his staff we had the Commander of H.M.S. "The Torch," with forty marines, as well as the officers and men of the local defence forces. The Vicar preached from the text, "Truly this man was the Son of God," the utterance of the centurion at the foot of the Cross.

St. Bartholomew's Day.—The anniversary of the Bishop's Consecration was observed in the Cathedral by a special Celebration of the Holy Communion, at 10 o'clock, when, prayers, supplications, and thanksgivings were offered to Almighty God for the work of the Church in the Diocese.

The death of the Bishop of Brisbane was specially referred to by the Vicar in the Cathedral on Sunday evening, the 9th August. At the conclusion of the Service Mr. H. G. Hodder played the "Dead March in Saul."

PORT DOUGLAS AND MOSMAN.

The Fancy Fair in aid of the Building Fund of the Mosman Rectory was held at the end of June, and was a great success, notwithstanding the many other attractions of Show Week. Those in command at the various stalls, etc., were:—Plain and Fancy, Mrs. J. Pringle; Refreshment, Miss Jensen and Mrs. Lock; Flower and Lolly, Miss Carstens; Fish Pond, Miss Joyce; Shooting Galleries, Messrs. Lock, Welshman, and Rex; while each of these ladies and gentlemen were assisted by a small army of others. To all we offer our congratulations at the display made; and our heartiest thanks for their kindness, energy, and untiring work. The contract for the building is now let, and active operations will shortly be begun.

During the past quarter, the Rector has arranged for a monthly service at Mowbray on Sunday afternoon, through the kindness of Messrs. Robbins and Devine; and also on Wednesday evening, monthly, at the growing mining centre of Mount Molloy.

The Port Douglas Sunday School keeps well to the fore, under Mr. Devine and Misses Gregory and Hurwood. But we regret extremely the loss of Miss Moore, who had endeared herself much to the children by her loving interest.

The Mosman School is officered by Messrs. Rex and White and the Misses Jones. To all teachers we would express a deep sense of appreciation of their self-denying work for Christ's children. Miss Jones is a new recruit to our Mosman staff, and a very welcome one.

Two more bereavements have occurred in our ranks since last issue. The first to pass into Paradise was Walter Groves, the youngest son of a much-respected mother, Mrs. Groves, of Weatherboard. The other was Miss Spon, the sister of Mr. E. Spon, of Mosman, who arrived here last year from England in search of health. The greatest sympathy was shown to both families by their many friends.

PORT DARWIN.

The past three months have been marked by steady progress in Church work, in spite of a considerable amount of illness among the members of the congregation. The new vestry was used for the first time on May 31st, and it has also served both for a school and committee room.

The Church bell has been affixed to an iron stand, the kind work and gift of Messrs. Tilley, Harrison, Collis, and Cave, and it now daily recalls the hour of prayer to the township.

The first instalment of Church furniture and decorations—the hangings for the East wall, the stained glass windows and the brass cross, greatly adds to the beauty of the interior of our Church. We have to thank several ladies of our congregation for their prompt and willing help.

Through the generosity of Wyndham—visited by the Rector in response to an invitation from the Church people there—we have been enabled to order the remaining furniture for the chancel.

The Sunday School picnic was held July 18th, which proved a delightful day. A general invitation was given to the children of the township, their parents and friends. Punctually at nine, there was a good attendance at Church of children and friends for a few children's prayers and hymns. Buggies, kindly lent by friends, and constantly coming and going, conveyed all to Mindel Beach. The tide was coming in and the clear cool water proved a great attraction to the boys. A spacious bough shelter, erected through the kindness of Mr. Holtze for the occasion, was soon filled by a throng of ladies opening hampers and preparing lunch. Nothing could have been added to the arrangements made by our indefatigable secretary, who, with a committee of gentlemen, was responsible for the games, sports, and all arrangements for coming and going.

It was very satisfactory to find a surplus of 35s. of the money subscribed for the picnic. This has been expended in part payment for a bookcase for the books of the Sunday School library, which will now very shortly be in working order. We start with forty-four volumes, chiefly provided by the offertories at the children's services. A working party of the members of our branch of the Girls' Friendly Society has kindly undertaken to cover and label the volumes. We gladly welcome the institution of this excellent society in our midst, and are grateful to those who have banded themselves together to forward the work.

We are pleased to record that, since the opening of the Parish Room, the Communicants' Guild has been properly organised, the objects explained, the rules agreed upon, and further, six subjects for lectures chosen for alternate months during the year. Four of these have already been allotted and accepted.

We note, with much pleasure, the increased ability and power of the choir. The standard aimed at is by no means a low one.

Both at Pine Creek and Brock's Creek the mines are growing busy again. At Yam Creek great developments are taking place. During the Rector's visits up country, the services are well attended.

CROYDON AND GOLDEN GATE.

During the past quarter we have been twice helped by a visit from the Bishop. His lordship arrived in Croydon at the end of June and stayed with us over Sunday, July 4th. After a month's work at Normanton, the Mitchell River, and Burketown, the Bishop returned to Croydon.

On Sunday, August 16th, what has been up to now the most important event to the Church in this young diocese, took place in Croydon, when on the morning of that day Mr. W. M. Wilkinson received the order of a deacon in the Church of God at the hands of the Bishop.

It was gratifying to see the genuine pleasure manifested by the parishioners at the presence of Mr. Wilkinson again in Croydon. His faithful work in the parish last summer, during the Rector's enforced absence, had gained him many warm friends. At both services on Sunday, August 9th, he preached most earnestly to the worshippers at St. Margaret's, and spoke to the Sunday School scholars at St. John's, Golden Gate. It was this fact of the regard and affection in which the Rev. W. M. Wilkinson is held by the residents of the goldfield which enhanced the interest felt here in his ordination.

On Monday, August 17th, a concert was arranged to take place in Eginton's Hall in aid of Bell Fund. The attendance was large. The evening opened with a lecture by the Bishop on the history of the Celtic Church. Owing to the help so kindly given by Mr. O'Hare, the lantern views illustrating the lecture were thrown on the screen by means of limelight, which displayed the pictures to full advantage. After an interval for refreshments, provided by the Ladies' Committee, a most successful musical programme arranged by Mr. T. H. Waldie was gone through. Songs were contributed by Messrs. D. P. Viles, Stewart, and Bray, Mrs. Stewart, Misses Peake, Rogers, and Hawkes—all warmly appreciated by the audience.

By the time the issue of the Carpentarian will have been read by its subscribers, we trust the present cracked bell will be replaced by a large rich toned one of nearly 2½ cwt. The order has been given to Messrs. Stewart & McKenzie, of the local foundry, and we have very little doubt with regard to a most successful job.

The Sunday School attendance both at Croydon and Golden Gate has been steadily increasing. At St. John's, Golden Gate, under Mr. Philp's superintendence, the improvement is most noticeable. In addition to his love for God and zeal for souls, his pleasant and cheery manner fits him for the important work of attending to the religious training of the young.

This year being the first one in which a Sunday School picnic was held since the opening of St. John's Church, both Sunday Schools combined, and the festivities were arranged for Croydon. The Golden Gate scholars were driven in cabs to St. Margaret's, from which they were marched to the Racecourse. The banners of both schools were carried in the procession. The picnic was a brilliant success. The Bishop arrived in Croydon during the day and was present at the gathering.

The continued patient and unselfish labour of the Ladies' Committee have enabled the Church to meet her current liabilities during the most depressed times.

On the whole, though to ourselves we seem to make so little headway, yet God's goodness has still been manifested towards us during the past quarter. For His mercy in watching over His Church we thank Him, and earnestly pray and expect that, through His Holy Spirit, a great spiritual revival will visit us, making itself evident in the love of Church members to Christ and His Church, and in holiness of life, which will lead others to God.

SPEECH SEASONED WITH SALT.

A British and Foreign Bible Society colporteur, of Marseilles, once offered a Bible to an old man, who angrily replied, "Wine is my god." "Indeed," said the colporteur, "then let me tell you that you have not imitated your god." "What do you mean?" "Well, wine becomes better as it grows old, while you, as you have grown old, have become more wicked." The other was taken aback by this reply. "Look here," he said, "I'll buy a Bible. It is the least I can do after such an answer."

THE WALL.

A PARABLE.

In Holland, as all are aware, much of the land lies actually below the level of the sea, and yet the inhabitants live in safety and comfort, protected from the ocean by those wonderful dykes which their skill and industry have erected. Some three hundred years ago a certain city was founded on a tract of land separated only from the sea by a high sand-bank, which was strengthened in its most exposed parts by strong piles, and securely jointed beams. When the houses were finished, and the citizens settled into their new abode, one, more provident than his neighbours, pointed out the insecurity of the town. The sea at high tides rose level with the top of the dyke, and if at any time a violent storm from the west should occur at spring tide, the whole country might be inundated, and the city destroyed. The danger was so obvious that, as soon as it was pointed out, the citizens took measures of precaution. They held a meeting, and determined to build a wall which would at least protect the city from destruction. The work was at once commenced, and stones were brought from every quarter. The originator of the scheme hereupon suggested that the stones should be squared and fastened together with iron clamps, but the meeting called to consider the matter was of opinion that it was absurd to waste time in cutting the stones, while they were missing golden opportunities for monopolising the trade, to secure which that particular site had been chosen for the city. Accordingly the wall was hastily constructed of unhewn stone, and, as it had no very slightly appearance when finished, it was determined to cover it with cement, which, it was argued, would, hardening by exposure to the air, much increase its security. But it so happened that no cement was to be obtained except by importation, a thing which the citizens considered beneath the dignity of their new emporium. Accordingly ordinary mortar was used; and, to give it a better finish, they painted it white and blue and adorned it with one of those neat patterns which are the joy of the Dutch heart. Before long the citizens became proud of their wall, and pointed it out to strangers as a triumph of skill, and the secure defence of their city; and if the plaster did crack here and there, they had little time, amid the press of business, to attend to such trifles. At length, one dark and stormy night, the tide rose unnoticed, flowed over the dyke, and, swiftly covering the intervening country, began to beat in ever increasing depth and fury against the wall of defence. In a few minutes the huge waves, driven by a hurricane from the west, had stripped off the plaster and were beating wildly against the ill-jointed stones. First one was driven from its place, then another and another. Yet a few minutes more and a fierce cataract was pouring in upon the devoted city from three distinct breaches in the wall. In the dead of night arose a terrible cry, and above the roar of the tempest a wild shriek was heard by the far-off dweller on an inland dyke. When the sun shone forth in the calm dawn, after the storm, his rays were reflected from a level expanse of water, amid which rose a dismal heap of ruins, strewn with the dead bodies and wasted goods of the unhappy citizens. The dyke was afterwards repaired and the land reclaimed, but no city ever rose again on the site of that unhappy town.

The Bishop here enquired whether they wished to claim the full wording of the protest which asked for the "free use" of the Church, by which he understood a right to use it parallel to and equal to that of Church people, or whether they only wanted to claim a right that the ministers referred to should be asked to preach at a Church service. In the former case he would like to know if they had any

QUETTA MEMORIAL CATHEDRAL.

THE QUETTA MEMORIAL CATHEDRAL.

On October 16th, 1903, the following deputation waited on the Bishop of Carpentaria at Thursday Island:—Mr. G. Smith (spokesman), Hon. J. Douglas, Messrs. Corran, Hodel, Mitchell, Murray and Shiress.

Mr. G. Smith said that the deputation represented Presbyterians and others not members of the Church of England, but in the habit of attending the Church services. They asked that a return should be made to the practice which had, he said, been authorised by Bishop Barlow at the consecration of the Church—continued with his sanction by his clergy until the advent of the present Bishop—of allowing sanction of the Bishop of the Diocese for the time being, be freely used by the ordained ministers of any recognised Christian congregation.—(Signed) John Douglas, November 12, 1893." The words "with the sanction of the Bishop for the time being" were not in the original draft, but were included at the suggestion of Bishop Barlow, who had, by this action, he maintained, accepted the protest. He was ready to admit that there was no legal claim, as the ground belonged to the Church of England, and in any case the protest left the matter in the hands of the Bishop absolutely, but he claimed on the grounds of equity and because of the precedents which had been established.

Mr Hodel said that there was certainly no such precedent. It was only the latter privilege that they wanted to claim. The other members of the deputation expressed their agreement on this point.

Hon. J. Douglas said he was present, not as a member of any other religious body than the Church, but as the author of the protest. The words referred to by Mr. Smith had been inserted at the suggestion of Bishop Barlow. There was no doubt that it was an Anglican Church and no question as to the legal rights of the matter, but the members of other religious bodies in Thursday Island had been most generous to the Church, and he hoped that on fitting occasions reciprocity might be extended if the minister visiting was sufficiently authenticated and well-known.

Mr. Hodel said Rev. W. M. Woods had granted the privilege claimed and had promised to advise his successor of the understanding.

Mr. Murray said that in his view the chief advantage of the proposal was that the congregation would get variety of preaching. He thought that people liked a strange voice.

Mr. Corran said that he differed from the other speakers. He recommended it on Christian grounds. He thought that no distinction ought to be made between one religious body and another.

Mr. Mitchell said that he had had communications from the Presbyterian Church, but he thought it best to wait until the Bishop's return to Thursday Island.

The Bishop said that it was an unfeigned pleasure to him to find so many of the most prominent men of the town devoting an afternoon to a religious question. He quite recognised and endorsed all that had been said as to the harmony that had prevailed, and the kindness and consideration that had been shown to the Church of England. Of course, as had been said, there was no question of legal right, but he would endeavour to act with justice. He must remind the deputation that several of the points brought up were quite new to him, as, though he had been three years here, it was the first time they had been formally raised. They must not expect a hurried answer. It would, in the first place, be an obvious impertinence in him to take any action or express any opinion until he had consulted the present Bishop of Goulburn, on whose alleged action and precedent the claim was based. He would give a categorical answer as soon as he had received a reply, and had had time to consider the case in all its bearings.

Hon. J. Douglas, on behalf of the deputation, thanked the Bishop for the careful attention he had given to the matter, and expressed a hope that it might be brought to a satisfactory issue.

The deputation then withdrew.

The Bishop forwarded to the Bishop of Goulburn an account of the foregoing meeting, and received the following reply:—

GOLBURN, November 6th, 1903.

My dear Bishop of Carpentaria,

The facts in connection with the opening of the Quetta Church were much as you state, save that I did nothing either to "accept" or reject the suggestion made in Mr. Douglas's remarks.

I simply regarded them as a desire expressed by him and others on the Island, but of course they possessed no legal or official value. Any remarks made by so honoured and beloved a man would always receive a respectful hearing.

I have on two occasions, if not more, allowed Mr. Chalmers to officiate on his visits to Thursday Island. The question of permission or otherwise is one entirely in the hands of the Bishop for the time being, and I doubt not will always be decided on its merits as each occasion presents itself.

Your affectionate brother,
C. G. GOULBURN.

On December 3rd, 1903, the Bishop of Carpentaria read the preceding minutes and letter, and addressed the following reply to the members of the deputation:—

Gentlemen,

I am now in a position to reply to your deputation of October 16th, on the subject of the use of the Quetta Memorial Cathedral.

The matter is one of such grave importance that I must request your attention to a brief history of the events connected with the history of the Church of England in Thursday Island.

The first Church committee meeting was held on April 16th, 1887, to meet Rev. T. Taylor, and to arrange for the more regular visits of a curate. On June 2nd, 1887, an account was opened at the Q.N. Bank entitled "Thursday Island Church of England Fund Account." Certain lands were purchased or presented to the Church and vested in the Synod.

The project of the erection of a Church was first mooted at a meeting of the Church of England Committee at Thursday Island on April 10th, 1890. Rev. A. A. Maclaren proposed to invite the members of the Anglican Church to subscribe to the erection of a Church, as a memorial of those lost in the "Quetta." Mr. Hennessy suggested that it would be easier to raise money if a Union Church were erected instead. Dr. Salter, the Hon. Secretary, pointed out that the Church of England ground could not be used for such a purpose. Hon. J. Douglas said that he was strongly in favour of Mr. Maclaren's scheme. Rev. A. A. Maclaren said that he could not accept Mr. Hennessy's suggestion, and that he would write to the papers in terms embodying his own idea.

A General Meeting of the congregation was held at the Courthouse on July 20th, 1890, the Bishop of North Queensland (Dr. Stanton) in the chair. Mr. Hennessy proposed:—

"In the opinion of this meeting, it is desirable that a Church and Parsonage be erected on Thursday Island, as a memorial of those who were lost in the wreck of the 'Quetta' on the night of February 28th last, and that the present Church Committee be empowered to take the necessary steps."

The Bishop expressed his approval.

Tenders for the erection of a Parsonage were accepted March 23rd, 1891. Appeals were sent out for subscriptions and a letter in reply from Sir W. Mackinnon, representing the Queensland Steamship Co., in which he says that he would have felt more interest in the proposal had it been intended to erect a Church open to Presbyterians and others, shows clearly that the appeal was fully understood to be for an Anglican Church. An "explanation," now lost, was sent by Dr. Salter, the Hon. Sec., in reply to this letter, but before its arrival Sir William had sent £100 in answer to the original application.

The Church was consecrated on November 12th, 1898, by the Bishop of North Queensland, Dr. Barlow, when the protest referred to was shown to the Bishop immediately before the service and the qualifying words added at his suggestion.

The protest was read and no statement was made by the Bishop as to its acceptance or rejection.

In 1895 a second appeal was issued, which makes it quite clear that the appeal was for an Anglican Church pure and simple. It ends "by contributing you will be assisting the missionary work of the Diocese of North Queensland."

In 1895, also, a sum of £100 was contributed by S.P.C.K. on the evident understanding that the Church was an Anglican Church. This is also clear from a letter written by Hon. J. Douglas, the author of the protest, to the present Bishop on November 7th, 1900, in which he says "the Church is an Anglican Church in every sense of the word."

This is not disputed by your deputation, which admits the full right and discretion of the Bishop in the matter, as the protest does, but claims, on the ground of equity and precedent. With regard to the latter point, I have examined the Service Books, and find that, from the opening of the Church, until August 15th, 1888, Rev. J. W. Walter (L.M.S.) preached in the Cathedral three times; Rev. J. Chalmers (L.M.S.) three times; also, though there is no record of it in the book, I am informed that Rev. Mr. Hay, Moderator of the Presbyterian Assembly, preached once. It will be seen that with this exception, there were six occasions on which ministers other than ministers of the Church of England preached, and that on every occasion they were L.M.S. missionaries. In the case of Mr. Chalmers, permission was given by the Bishop (Dr. Barlow), but in the other cases, the Rectors acted on their own authority in giving the invitations.

On November 16th, 1900, a public general meeting of the congregation was held, at which the Bishop stated that the choice of the site for the Bishopric was left in his hands, and that he had determined to choose Thursday Island, provided that he could come to a satisfactory agreement with the parishioners as to the use of the Church as a Cathedral, and other matters. It was resolved that all the Church land and buildings should be vested in the Synod of the Diocese, as soon as formed, to be used for such purposes as the Synod should determine. No mention was made of any claim to use the Church for other than Church of England purposes; and when I accepted it as my Cathedral, I was entirely under the impression that the claim had been dropped—if it had ever had a valid existence. I should certainly not have accepted it as a Cathedral on any other terms. I was confirmed in this opinion by the letter which I have referred to from Hon. J. Douglas, in which, after mentioning the fact of his protest, he states that the matter was entirely in my hands.

The claim now made is advanced in the name of justice and fair play, and as such is entitled to the most respectful hearing, and, I must admit, that those who put it forward have made out a case for which much is to be said.

It is an undoubted fact that a number of Presbyterians have, since the consecration of the Church, supported and worked for the Church, have given generous gifts, and have discouraged attempts to invite other religious bodies to the Island.

I do not doubt the statement made that much of this support and some of these gifts were given, and this attitude maintained, because the donors believed that the Church intended to be more lax in her rules in Thursday Island than elsewhere, and intended to give them a quid pro quo. It seems to me impossible to deny that the action of the Church encouraged and to some extent, at least, justified, such a belief. The suggestion of the insertion in the protest of a qualifying clause has the prima facie appearance of an acceptance of it.

It appears to me also that certain persons were invited to preach, largely because those who were not members of the Church desired that they should be so invited, and in view of the protest which had been made, this appeared to be a carrying out of the terms of it. I feel, therefore, that those who have supported and benefited the Church of England because they believed in the existence of a tacit, if not of an explicit understanding, have a right to feel somewhat sore if they are told that such an understanding does not exist. They may, not unnaturally say, "Surely one representative of the Church does not repudiate an engagement and promise made by his predecessor has made. We have a right to expect that an understanding honourably made should be honourably carried out."

here are, however, on the other hand, several important facts to be considered. As regards protest, it is not clear that it was definitely accepted, in spite of his suggested amendment, by the Bishop for the time being. His letter, in which he says, "I did nothing to 'accept' or 'reject' the suggestion," seems to show this.

With regard to the invitations to preach the one authorised by the Bishop was that to Rev. J. Chalmers, the well-known L.M.S. missionary, evidently on the grounds of his unique personality, not as representative of any religious body. Rev. W. M. Woods and Rev. C. F. Honour both state that the invitations given by them were on their own authority and without consultation with the Bishop. In only one instance could the minister be said to represent a distinctive religious body. Hence it would seem that for me to give my authority for ministers to preach as representatives of a religious body would be a distinct and new departure for which there can be found no legal precedent. Secondly, great weight must be attached to the fact that the Church has been changed into a Cathedral. A custom, removable, perhaps, in a simple Parish Church under exceptional circumstances, becomes a different thing in the Mother Church of a diocese under the immediate control of the Bishop, and the pattern and example for other churches in the diocese. I maintain that a matter of such importance ought to have been put forward at the general meeting of the congregation at which it was determined to convert the Church into a Cathedral. I had already given my own belief by informing the Wesleyan Conference in answer to an enquiry from them that I believed that they had no rights whatever in the Quetta Memorial Church. This was known to Hon. J. Douglas, who wrote me on the subject. I was allowed to select Thursday Island as the See Town without any attempt being made to raise the point which years later is put forward as such a weighty matter. I state emphatically that had no claim been then put forward and had it appeared to me a just claim, I should not have selected Thursday Island for my Cathedral. Thirdly, I consider that as an individual Bishop of the Church I have no authority to sanction anything which appears to me to be in direct contravention of the canons of the Church. I claimed that Thursday Island is an exceptional place and that things may be allowed there which would not be right elsewhere. It is quite true that Thursday Island is isolated and in some ways an exceptional place, but the principle and example are the same everywhere and will form a precedent for the whole Church, and I cannot accept this plea as sufficient grounds for action.

It has been used as an argument, and I think I am justified in saying as a threat, that if I do not give way an attempt will be made to establish an opposition Church in Thursday Island. I do not think that this argument ought to be used. The matter is one of right and wrong, not of mere expediency. The Church of England in Thursday Island has always recognised the exceptional position of the Christians who did not belong to her communion. It has been grateful for their constant, ready help and generous sympathy. It has recognised that they attended the Church of England rather than attempt to subvert a community so small that division would make the maintenance of religious ministrations a desperate struggle for either body. It has striven always, without compromise of its own principles, to respect the scruples and convictions of others, nor has any difficulty been felt or expressed hitherto as to the services or ministrations of the Church. We ask in return that our scruples should be respected even if they do not seem reasonable to those who differ from us. It is not for any light cause, not from any pride or self-sufficiency, that I plead a difficulty of conscience in granting what the deputation ask. I am fully conscious of the responsibility that I incur. I am aware that I am in opposition to the opinion of many of our own Church people who think that peace should be purchased by what they regard as an unimportant concession. I am conscious that those who ask have from their point of view a strong case, and that I must appear to them unreasonable, if not unjust; but it is of the essence of my office that I should judge according to what I believe to be right without fear or favour, and this I must do whatever the cost.

I should like to say that I yield to none in my desire for reunion. I have already stated publicly, on the occasion of the enthronement of the Bishop of North Queensland, that—with Bishop Wordsworth—I regard re-union, with the Presbyterians especially, as one of the most obviously necessary tasks of English speaking Christianity at the present day. I regard it as nothing less than a disaster that that great body which has held so loyally to the doctrine of the apostolic ministry, as they understand it, which has produced, and is producing, some of the most learned and devout of English speaking theologians, should be separated chiefly on a single point of order from the Church with which it is so largely in sympathy in doctrine, but I do not think that anything is to be gained by acting as though we were united when we are not. The interchange of preaching, i.e., of authorised teaching, comes at the end, not the beginning of union. I pray earnestly that we may be guided to reunion, but I do not consider that I have any individual right to try to anticipate it by such action as is suggested.

It seems to me that this matter is practically confined to the Presbyterians, who are especially referred to in the protest, and who, if any, religious body has suffered wrong in the matter, are the only ones who have suffered to an appreciable extent. Although I have frankly expressed my own views, I have no intention of allowing them to override justice.

I recognise, in the first place that, owing to the circumstances of the case, my own individual judgment cannot settle the question finally or bind my successor, and in the next place, that I am too much interested, and feel too strongly, to be an impartial judge in my own matter, since the question of the use of my own Cathedral is involved. I have therefore resolved to submit the matter to the Heads of the Church of England in Australia, who are in a position to approach the matter in a dispassionate spirit, and to enquire of them whether I ought in justice to agree to the request made me (1) with regard to the Presbyterians especially mentioned and concerned; (2) with regard to "other recognised Christian congregations." I shall be guided by their recommendations, because I consider this not to be an occasion for the putting into practice of my own theories, but for doing that which, on the broadest basis, seems just and fair.

In conclusion, I have to acknowledge the patience and courtesy with which the deputation have expressed their views, and the entire absence of any personal feeling. Especially my thanks are due to Mr. George Smith for the great trouble that he has taken to bring about an amicable settlement, and for the broad view he has taken of the matter.

I shall welcome any criticism as to the way in which I have stated the facts, as I wish to present an issue as to the facts of which at least both parties are agreed.

Yours, most faithfully,

GILBERT,

Bishop of Carpentaria.

Notes

Rev. W. Hudson, M.A., has been appointed Rector of Croydon in succession to Rev. G. H. Smith, who leaves for Cooktown at the New Year.

Rev. W. M. Wilkinson will take charge of Normanton for the present.

Rev. T. K. Pitt, M.A., leaves for the South for a short holiday immediately after Christmas.

Mr. S. Lewis completes his three years' course at Bishops College in March next.

Mr. H. H. Ayscough, of Brisbane, has been appointed to one of the vacant studentships at Bishops College.

Mr. P. R. Allen has been licensed as hon. Lay Reader at Palmerston.

Miss Buchanan has obtained first-class honours in the Th.A. examination of the Australian College of Theology. We congratulate her and the Diocese most sincerely.

The Diocesan accounts for 1903 will be published in our next issue.

The Advent examinations at Bishops College were conducted by the Bishop, who complimented Mr. F. C. Hall on his Greek Testament papers, in which he obtained 95 per cent.

"JESUS CHRIST AND THE SOCIAL QUESTION."

This Book, by Professor Peabody of Harvard (Macmillan and Co, 6/-), is a very interesting and helpful discussion of modern social problems in the light of the teaching of Christ. The author points out very clearly the aims and principles of modern social democracy and where they agree with and where they diverge from the teaching of our Lord. He shows that the fundamental institution of the family is now attacked not only from the side of loose morality, but as an institution tending to uphold private property, and antagonistic to socialistic aims; whereas Christ bases all his teaching on the idea of the sacredness of family relations. Socialism thinks that external mechanism will right every wrong, while Christ taught that reform must come from within, not from without. On the whole, the author regards modern socialism with hopefulness if it can only rid itself of the false materialistic bent imparted to it by the teaching of Marx, Bax, and other German writers. The book would have been still more helpful if Professor Peabody had added to his social studies some knowledge of the principles of the Catholic Church. In spite of its shortcomings, we strongly advise all to purchase the book, which has already gone through many editions. It strongly emphasises the great truth that the Christian Church cannot afford to stand outside modern social and economic questions.

The Carpenterian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA,
NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. IV.—No. 13. Thursday Island, Jan. 1, 1904

THE USE OF THE CATHEDRAL.

We draw our readers' attention to the lengthy report which we publish of the interviews between the Bishop and a deputation representing Presbyterians and others, who waited on him with regard to a claim that non-episcopally ordained ministers should be allowed to preach in the Cathedral. The matter would be simple enough, for the Church of England allows no such claim, but that it is complicated by certain precedents and events which occurred before the present occupancy of the See. The decision of the Bishop will be seen to be that, personally, he is opposed to the claim, but that, recognising that he cannot settle the matter finally by his own action, and that also he is placed in the difficult position of having to act at once as judge and advocate, he has determined to seek the advice and guidance of the Heads of the Church in Australia. The point is a difficult one. It seems that justice must come before all other considerations, but it is not very easy to ascertain exactly whether or no the case is sufficiently made out to necessitate setting aside the law of the Church. If the Church has practically pledged herself to a certain course of action, then she cannot repudiate it, even if her own laws are contravened. If she is not so pledged, then her own laws must prevail. The Bishop could of course say that he would exercise his discretionary right to refuse the claim whenever it was preferred, but such action would not settle the question for his successor, and would be an ignoring of the main contention that the claim is made as a matter of moral right. Obviously, again, the Bishop is in a difficult position as to deciding the question of moral right, for he is intimately concerned in the result. Hence the necessity of an appeal. The matter has, so far, been kept free from personal feeling, and we hope that it will be fairly decided on its own merits. One fact is very clearly brought out, and that is the danger of vague understandings. They generally result in grave misunderstandings.

THE REV. W. P. GLOVER.

To the Faithful in the Diocese of Carpentaria. —I cannot allow Rev. W. P. Glover to leave the North without a formal expression on my part of the high estimation in which I hold his work and character, and an acknowledgment of the eminent services that he has rendered to the Diocese.

In regard to parochial work, Mr. Glover has set an example and a standard for us all. Unceasing individual pastoral care, combined with a real interest in all public institutions; fearless loyalty to the Church, combined with a sympathetic understanding of the difficulties and convictions of others; continual visitation from house to house, combined with carefully prepared ministry in Church, have resulted in the creation of a strong and healthy parochial life, and most marked improvement in the material position of the Church in Thursday Island.

But parochial work, taken up so thoroughly and conscientiously by no means exhausted Mr. Glover's energies. As Diocesan Secretary and Vice-Warden of Bishops College, he has been of the greatest possible service to the whole Diocese; and during the necessarily anxious first three years of a new See, it has been a source of great strength and relief to me to know that I had at Thursday Island, during my constant absences in the more remote parts of the vast Diocese, one whom I knew to be absolutely loyal, and in the soundness of whose judgment I could repose every confidence.

Mr. Glover is leaving us only under the most peremptory medical orders. The knowledge that things could not possibly be otherwise, takes away at least the anxiety of choice. I had been about to offer Mr. Glover the post of Sub-Dean of the Cathedral when I heard of the hitherto unsuspected medical decision. It is a source of regret to me that one who has done so much for the Cathedral should not have been officially connected with it.

I believe that in the more congenial climate of the South Mr. Glover will recover that health, the loss of which—though he has never suffered it to impair his energy—has put upon him of late such a severe strain; and I know that I speak for all in the Diocese who know him, as well as for myself, when I wish him the fullest happiness and success in the new sphere in which his activities may be cast.

Yours affectionately,

GILBERT,

Bishop of Carpentaria.

Thursday Island,

Dec. 12, 1903.

VACANCY AT THURSDAY ISLAND.

At evensong in the Cathedral on Sunday, December 13th, the Bishop made the following statement:—"I feel, my friends, that I owe it to you to say something about the vacancy in this parish. You will not think that it is an easy matter to find a suitable successor to the present Vicar. He has set a high standard, which we feel we must maintain for the future. I have not been idle. The subject has been rarely out of my thoughts even for a few hours. On November 1st I issued a prayer, modelled on that for the Ember season, asking that God would so guide and govern the mind of the Bishop that he might make choice of a fit person to serve as Vicar. This was, perhaps, not quite the way in which it ought to have been put, since it seems to imply that there are suitable men willing so to serve, among whom the Bishop has only to choose wisely. This I have not found to be the case, so far as my limited means have enabled me to ascertain, and so I have altered the prayer to the following: 'So move and dispose the hearts of faithful and devout men to Thy service in this place that the Bishop may be enabled, by Thy guidance and government, to make choice of a fit person.'

"This is a prayer in which I would very earnestly ask you all to join, since the matter concerns you all very closely, and I cannot doubt that to earnest and faithful prayer God will give a generous answer.

"In accordance with a long-standing promise, made before your Vicar's resignation, I am leaving to take Confirmations for a fortnight in the Diocese of North Queensland. I hope to return here on January 8th, and to remain until this matter is settled."

THE UNSECTARIAN GOSPEL.

We have in these days become very familiar with the demand for an "Unsectarian Gospel." Enough, we are told, of religious distinctions and religious bitterness, enough of creeds and formularies, enough of hampering rules and organisations, enough of priestcraft and intrusion on the sacred relation of the soul to its God; let us go back to the old simple Gospel, let us sweep away all human interpretations and interventions of the past, and take good care that they do not again arise in the future, let us disregard all that divides and separates Christians, and fix our attention only on the few great underlying principles of the Gospel, and let every man interpret them in his own way!

Now there is much at first sight in such an appeal to arrest the attention and attract the sympathy of a sincere Christian. He sees clearly enough the evils of religious differences, the counteracting efforts, the scandal, the bitterness, the loss. He desires to get as near to Christ as possible and he asks himself seriously whether it is not only possible but probable that men have with the best intentions marred by their meddling the direct simplicity of the Master; he knows how easily men become partizans of their own institutions, and he asks whether it may not be that Christendom has obscured Christ.

While freely acknowledging the sincerity and often the devotion of those who hold these views, while admitting the awful evils of religious divisions, admitting that formularies may become hardened into formalities, admitting that men easily become more zealous for their party than for their Lord, there is yet grave reason to suspect that the theory of the unsectarian Gospel is false to facts. In the first place the fact that countless saintly Christians of all creeds are unable to accept it may well give us pause. As a theory it is so easy, so fascinating, such a simple way out of those heart-breaking questions and quarrels that distress and try the faith of the true Christian so deeply, it seems to open such a direct road of return to that happy time when it was said "see how these Christians love one another," that it would be a libel on all that is best in Christendom to suppose that it would not be at once accepted by at any rate the best and most loving souls were there not some grave reason to the contrary. As a matter of fact they do not accept it; on the contrary it would almost seem as if the more a soul grew in grace the more closely, as a rule, did it cling to the distinctive creed, doctrine and organisation of the religious body to which it belongs. No doubt there are exceptions, but they are relatively few. For eighteen centuries and more the doctrine that the Christian Church was distinguished by a clear and definite creed and that the acceptance of that creed was a necessary condition of sound spiritual life was scarcely disputed. It was always taken for granted. It is true that there were heresies and schisms in abundance, but the very point of almost every heresy or schism was that the authors of it considered that some point of doctrine or discipline was being ignored by the Church, and they seceded in order to emphasise it more strongly. It is only of late years that the idea of an unsectarian Gospel has arisen either within or without the Church, and it will be remembered that the late Mr. Spurgeon was as fiery in his denunciation of watered down doctrine and "downgrade ology" as the most strenuous advocate of papal succession or of papal infallibility.

In the unsectarian Gospel we are presented with a new phenomenon unknown hitherto to the Church or to dissent, and we have to advance a test provided by our Lord Himself: "by their fruits shall ye know them."

What are the fruits of a vague and undenominational presentation of the Gospel? We have lately had a unique opportunity of obtaining an absolutely impartial and scientific verdict in the great book of Mr. Charles Booth on religion in London. The book is a depressing one. It shows how every religious body, without any exception, has fallen short of its charge, and has failed to reach at all a very large proportion of the people under its pastoral charge, but there are degrees in failure; in some cases the failure has been complete, while in others it has to be offset by a large measure of success. Of all utter failures the greatest, says Mr. Booth, has, in spite of their devoted lives, been that of the Salvation Army, the vaguest and most undogmatic of all religious bodies; the next greatest failure has been the work of the undenominational City Missionaries, men of the highest character and unquestioned devotion. They have themselves admitted it by asking for halls and a more definite organisation. The most successful of all Nonconformists have been the Baptists because, says Mr. Booth, they have a clearer and more sharply defined creed than other bodies. Within the Church the most successful have been churchmen of strong and definite views, the least successful the vaguer and less definite churchmen. The same note runs through the whole book. It is that the Gospel message has failed to reach and influence the just in proportion as it has been vague and undenominational, while it has been successful in proportion as it has been clear, definite and bound up with a living organisation. Whether we like these facts or not we cannot in honesty ignore them, and they seem to give a death blow to the theory of an unsectarian Gospel. It has been tried by earnest good men and completely failed; we are, therefore, justified in saying that it is not the way in which God intended the Gospel to be preached. You will, of course, observe that Mr. Booth does not say that it is one type of doctrine, whether Anglican, Baptist or Roman, that has been successful, but that some clear and definite doctrine is absolutely necessary. For the care for souls we cannot afford to work in any way that has been proved to be inefficient, and we must be clear and definite alike in teaching and in organization. This, of course, does not mean that we must have insistence on small and meaningless points of ritual as though they were matters of great importance; it does not mean hardness, narrowness or pride. It does mean that we believe that Christ meant the Gospel to be clear and not vague and its teaching to be authoritative and not merely of private interpretation.

Are it may be fairly asked what do you mean by clear and authoritative teaching as regards the Church of England? We mean at present those things which our bishops assembled in council have declared to be the most absolutely necessary terms of reunion with others: 1. "The acceptance of the Holy Scriptures as containing all things necessary for salvation and as being the ultimate rule and standard of faith. 2. The Apostles Creed as the baptismal form and the Nicene Creed as the sufficient statement of the Christian faith.

3. The two sacraments ordained by Christ Himself—Baptism and the Supper of the Lord—ministered with the unfailing use of Christ's words of institution and of the elements ordained by Him. 4. The Historic Episcopate locally adapted in its administration to the varying needs of the peoples and nations called by God into the unity of His Church." In other words we hold that any presentation of the Gospel will fall short of its purpose and fail of its practical efficiency if it does not base itself on Holy Scripture, if it decries or whittles down those two great creeds into which Christendom has gathered up its faith, if it ignores or despises the two great Sacraments ordained by Christ Himself, and finally unless it recognises the historic ministry of the Church as apostolic and necessary. This last clause has proved a stumbling block to many who in name at least would accept the others, but it is really bound up inextricably with them and can only be separated from them by the attachment to the former of an unhistorical sense. The platform of the Church can certainly not be called a narrow one. It has been drawn up with the most earnest desire for breadth and comprehension, but it represents the utmost limit to which the Church can go consistently with her history in the past and her hopes for the future. We can only say with Luther "here stand I and I can no other."

ATTITUDE TO OTHER RELIGIOUS BODIES.

What should be the attitude of the Church of England towards other religious bodies? In the first place, we must do them the justice of assuming that they believe and value their own doctrines. To decry, belittle, and ignore definite doctrine is to insult them, since it assumes that they have divided and maintained division in the Church for a light cause, surely one of the most cruel charges that one religious body can bring against another. We must assume that they attach as great value to their tenets as we to ours. In proportion as we try to understand and respect their scruples will they learn equally to understand and respect ours. The only safety from partizanship lies in the highest ideal. We aim, they aim, not at the triumph of a particular organisation as such, but only in so far as we believe it to be true and to embody the divine will. So far as we realise this ideal, lower and more ignoble grounds of difference are taken away, and attention is more and more concentrated on vital and really important matters. How are we to ascertain what is true and what is the mind of Christ on matters in which good men differ? There seems to be only one way; an appeal to the facts of history, with a loyal intention of abiding by those results which are clearly established as true. Happily one of the results of the scientific spirit of the age has been to largely revolutionise the writing of history. Until quite recently nearly all histories were written avowedly under the influence of some strong political or religious bias. They were not wilfully false, but the authors were content to fix their attention on the facts that interested them and to ignore those that did not, while original research and the use of contemporary documents was almost unknown. Now history is being largely studied with the sole object of arriving at the truth, and a vast store of contemporary letters, memoirs and documents have been examined, valued, and made available to speak for themselves. Many cherished beliefs have been destroyed, but on the other hand many little-regarded facts have been established beyond the possibility of cavil. All this is full of hope for the Christian Church. Science, which is from God, has already conferred on us many great benefits, but perhaps none so great as will be the process by which, by establishing beyond all doubt the disputed facts of history, she will remove from religion one of the most fruitful of all sources of dispute. To be agreed about the truth is the first stage towards that blessed consummation of reunion for which every real Christian must long and pray. Never were the hopes of it so fair as at the present day if we will only have patience, and not throw away the prospects of a real and final reunion of doctrine for the utter chimera of a mere outward show of concord attained by the surrender on both sides of what the best souls think most vital, a mere film of sound flesh on the surface while below the gangrene of individualism, mining all unseen, eats away by degrees all that is the very life of true religion.

Our attitude then must be one of respect and sympathy, of willingness to learn, and willingness if needful to unlearn, of patient and diligent seeking for the truth, but at the same time of care lest we let go the old before we have grasped the new. We have learned that only clear and definite teaching will win men permanently to the Gospel of Christ. It is a thousand pities that we cannot all agree as to what that clear and definite teaching is to be, but it is a thousand times better that we should differ than abandon that definiteness, which is our only hope of winning souls for Christ.

It is an age of experiment and change, but the Gospel of Christ does not change. It is the same yesterday to-day and for ever. Experiments with it are dangerous—for the experimenter. We can neither eviscerate or remodel the teaching of the Master. The safe path for us as for the apostles lies in holding fast the form of sound words, the faith once delivered to the saints. Just as for long centuries men gazed with unassisted eyes on the glories of the star-lit heaven, then gained through rough glasses some, and now through costly telescopes, more, of the splendour which is yet to be revealed, so may we, age by age, see more and more deeply into the depths of that revelation of God in the flesh, whose full glory we shall know only hereafter, but the Gospel itself changes even less than the stars. It is for ever and ever, and world without end

When will our Churchpeople forego the stupid use of "Catholic" as equivalent to "Roman Catholic?" Yet every time we say the Creed we profess our belief in the "Catholic" Church. Even the Romans themselves do not claim to be the Catholic Church in their official documents, and the Catechism of the Council of Trent is entitled "Catechismus Romanus," or Roman Catechism. If we members of the Church of England are not "Catholic" we are not members of the true Church, and to voluntarily make a present to the Roman Church of the ancient title of "Catholic" is about as crass a piece of wanton carelessness as we can possibly commit. Every time that we speak of the Romans as "Catholics" we are furthering the cause of Romanism in the eyes of intelligent people, since we are admitting that they are the only people who have a right to the name which was used, long before there was any Romanism, to distinguish the true Church from heresy and falsehood.

News of the Parishes.

THURSDAY ISLAND.

On All Saints' Day the Bishop of the Diocese administered the Rite of Confirmation in the Cathedral. Seventeen candidates—seven males and ten females—were presented by the Vicar. The service was reverent and impressive throughout.

The Bishop delivered two lectures in the Parish Institute during the past quarter. In the first he dealt with the history of the Church in England, and in the second with Cotter Morrison's book—the "Service of Man." Both addresses were appreciated by those who were present.

Miss Buchanan has been laid aside for some time suffering from an affection of the foot. She is now making good progress towards recovery, and gradually resuming her cheerful work in the parish. We heartily congratulate her on the splendid result of her recent examination in connection with the Australian College of Theology.

The Bishop and Miss White were "at home" at Bishop's College to all the parishioners on the second of November. An enjoyable evening was spent in the grounds of the College where hospitality was dispensed.

A marriage was celebrated in the Cathedral on the 2nd of November between Miss Findlay, late matron of the hospital, and Mr. Ben Thomas, who is well and favourably known on Thursday Island. We wish them both much happiness in their wedded life.

On the evening of the King's Birthday a parish concert was held in the Victoria Memorial Institute. It was splendidly organized and was a triumphant success. The sum of £30 13s. 9d. was cleared on behalf of the Parish Institute furnishing fund.

The sum of £11 11s. 5d. is the total indebtedness existing on the Parish Institute, Church fence and belfry, which have recently been erected at a cost of some £550. We congratulate our parishioners on the satisfactory financial condition of the parish.

The Hon. John Douglas delivered an interesting lecture in the Parish Institute on the 26th November. The subject of his remarks was "Australian Reminiscences." The sum of £5 12s. was handed over to the piano fund as a result of the lecture. There now remains only £3 odd owing on the instrument.

The sum of £5 5s. was kindly given by Mr. R. A. C. Hockings for the purpose of providing a day's outing for the teachers of the Sunday School. The teachers accordingly arranged a picnic at Hammond Island on the 28th November, which was thoroughly enjoyed by all who were present. We appreciate the thoughtfulness of the gentleman who so kindly provided the wherewithal for the outing.

The Quetta Club has had a profitable quarter's work. Interesting lectures have been given by Messrs. G. Smith, H. C. Vermersch and A. Murray. Discussions, debates, etc., have filled in the remainder of the evenings. The club has a good membership roll, and is doing useful work among the young men. A gymnasium has been established in connection with it.

The Parish Gazette has run its first year's course, and has proved a most useful means of arousing interest in local Church matters.

Many changes are taking place in the parish. Several well-known Church supporters are removing elsewhere, the loss of whom we regret exceedingly. We trust others will come to supply their place.

The Rev. W. P. Glover after nearly three years' work as Vicar of the parish, has decided to seek work in a cooler climate. The resignation of this gentleman is a matter of regret both on the part of himself and the parishioners. The relations between Vicar and people have been of the happiest nature and much useful work has been accomplished by their united efforts. Mr. Glover leaves us early in the new year, and will probably go to the diocese of Newcastle.

PORT DOUGLAS AND MOSMAN.

Little has befallen since the last issue of the Carpentarian. The Bishop's visit was a great pleasure to all. He was welcomed at a very hearty social at St. David's; visited the new centre at Mount Molloy, preaching at the first religious service ever held there; gave a much appreciated lecture on "Early English Church History" in both Port Douglas and Mosman, and confirmed seven Polynesians.

Beside His Lordship's visit, however, there is little to relate. A concert, in aid of St. Andrew's Church funds, held on the King's Birthday, proved a great financial success. We are greatly indebted to the performers, and to Mr. Albert Christian, for his kindness in exhibiting his fine cinematograph.

Apart from Church matters, we have been honoured by a visit from His Excellency the Governor, who won golden opinions from all; and, favoured by the most splendid weather for the sugar-cane that the district has had for many years, next season should indeed be a good one for the planters.

PALMERSTON.

We regret to record that there have been many invalids in our small community, and also that, owing to the completion of our fine new jetty, our numbers have diminished. Still, in spite of these facts, we are able also to state that Church work and Church life have been steadily developing. The Sunday School library is now open for use in the parochial room. We started with forty-three volumes, and these have been considerably increased through the gifts of members of our congregation. The original supply was provided out of the children's Sunday offertories. We are glad to note the children's appreciation, and that there has been a somewhat unexpected demand for the more instructive books. The Sunday School attendance continues excellent. The choir has worked bravely and well, in spite of the greater demand upon the energies of a few, and we think we may fairly state that the standard has not suffered. Many thanks are due to the untiring efforts of our choir-master—Mr. Price—who, we regret, is so shortly to leave Darwin. No difficulties have damped his good-will or his ardour, and we realise how inevitably he must be missed. It is with pleasure we record that Mrs. J. Barnes has resumed her share of valuable help as organist. The Communicants' Guild has duly met, and two papers, the one on "The Making of Character," the other on "The Original MSS. of the Bible," have been read and discussed by members.

On September 9th Mr. C. H. Davis, our Lay Reader, returned to Adelaide. In him we have lost a devoted and useful member of the Church. When the movement to establish a branch of the Anglican Church was practically taken up, the difficulty of finding a successor to Mr. Craig was removed by the willing offer of Mr. Davis, and from July 14th, 1901, to September 13th, 1903, he conscientiously fulfilled his duties. As a regular worshipper, chairman, catechist, and communicant, he has set a worthy, manly example. We are grateful to him for his energy and loyalty.

We are very glad to welcome the institution of a branch of the Girls' Friendly Society in our midst. Weekly meetings are held at the house of Mrs. Langdon, the hon. sec., to whose energy and warm interest the promotion of the movement is chiefly due. The number of members is steadily increasing, and, since its ranks are representative of our whole community, we feel assured the true spirit of the Society is understood.

The Bishop arrived November 8th during the afternoon, and preached at the evening service. As usual, His Lordship's time has been very fully occupied. Much of it has been devoted to visiting the members of the congregation, and the opportunity of personal intercourse is much appreciated by all. On Wednesday, 11th, at the usual evening service, the Bishop gave an address to the Confirmation candidates, to which all were invited to attend. The close attention with which the address was followed marked the occasion. On Thursday, 12th, His Lordship delivered a lecture at the Town Hall on "The First Six Hundred Years of Christianity in England." All were invited to attend, and the hall was well filled in response to the invitation. The beautiful illustrations were somewhat marred by the inequality of the light. But, in spite of this, the able handling of the wide and difficult subject made the lecture of great interest to all. On Saturday, 14th, there was a short evening service, at which a reception into the Anglican Church was held by the Bishop.

The Confirmation Classes have been carried on throughout the past three months, and six candidates were presented for Confirmation at the special service on Sunday, 15th. This service was deeply impressive, and the addresses given by the Bishop helped all to realise the sacredness and solemnity of the Rite.

On Monday, 16th, at the Residency, through the kind hospitality of Mr. Dashwood, by whom His Lordship is, as usual, entertained, the supporters of the Anglican Church were invited to meet the Bishop. A very pleasant musical evening was spent. On Tuesday, 17th, the Bishop, accompanied by the Rector, left Palmerston for Pine Creek. There was a Celebration at 7 on Wednesday morning, after which the Bishop journeyed by train to Yam Creek, where he and the Rector were hospitably entertained for two days by Mr. and Mrs. Roberts. On Wednesday evening the Bishop again repeated the lecture to an interested audience, and on Thursday an evening service was held. On Friday morning the Bishop drove to Brock's Creek, and visited during the afternoon. The lecture was given in the evening, and, we learn, was fully appreciated. The up-country visit ended on Saturday, when the travellers arrived again in Palmerston in the evening. On Sunday, 22nd, the Bishop preached both morning and evening. We are grateful for the opportunity of hearing His Lordship on these occasions—the definiteness of teaching and impressive earnestness are helpful to all. During the ensuing week much of the Bishop's time was devoted to visits among the people. A proposed visit to the Daly was rendered impracticable by the uncertainty of the service of boats in both directions. The Bishop left on December 30th for Thursday Island.

A beautiful sanctuary stall for the Bishop has been presented to the church by Mr. Johns. It is entirely his own work, and has been carried out with due regard to the general scheme for the furnishing of the chancel. The stall was first used on November 15th by His Lordship at the Confirmation Service.

We have received a very generous offer from Mr. Holtze to prepare, plant, and maintain the church-yard. We hope, in due time, a guild may be formed in which others may join in relieving Mr. Holtze of the charge of maintenance. This kind offer has been gratefully accepted.

During these last months the Rector has, as usual, visited at Pine Creek, Yam Creek, and Brock's Creek. From Pine Creek the Rector proceeded on a pastoral visit to the Katherine; thus journeying for the first time to this extremity of the parish. Services were held both in the morning and evening of the following Sunday. Many thanks are due to the kind hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. Pearce, by whom all arrangements were made for the 65-mile buggy ride to and from Pine Creek, and by whom Mr. and Mrs. Gocher were entertained whilst at the Katherine. We have again also to thank Mr. and Mrs. Schunke, and Mr. and Mrs. Roberts, for the repetition of their accustomed kind hospitality. At all the services held the attendance was encouraging.

"REASON AND REVELATION."

We commend most strongly to our readers Dr. Illingworth's book with the above title. It is a most masterly defence of Christian thought, and not merely a defence, for it carries the war fearlessly into the enemy's camp. Dr. Illingworth does not deal with details and minor points but goes straight to the great underlying principles of all thought and all philosophy. He begins by showing that Christianity has always claimed to be rational, and he illustrates this from the early apologists, the fathers and the schoolmen. Noting the speculations of Kant and his critics, he points out the distinction between abstract and concrete knowledge. Everything has the whole universe for its context and we can attain exact knowledge only by isolating things from the context. Take even the supposed exactitude of mathematics. They are only exact so long as we confine them to pure mental abstractions. Apply them to actual fact and they have to be modified or they would be untrue or absurd. A general, for instance, may dispatch troops in sufficient numerical proportion to crush the enemy, but fail because they are cowards and the others brave. A bridge may be erected mathematically correct but collapse from the use of unsound material and so on. Science is only exact in proportion as it leaves the context of things out of sight; what we gain in exactness we lose in actuality and vice versa. Our reason is strictly limited to that comparatively small portion which we have rationalised for ourselves; all the rest we accept merely on authority. All persons come to the discussion of questions full of presuppositions as much on side of science as on the side of religion. These presuppositions are the most important things to consider, because all questions are inevitably decided largely by them. We cannot abstract things from their context and then expect to arrive at a correct conclusion. Knowledge is a matter of the whole being, not of only one part of it. Hence the different ways in which the Incarnation is regarded. The author contrasts the Patristic and modern view of Christian evidences, and points out with keen insight the temporary causes of the modern irreligious temper. The fact that religion is common property, a thing that concerns all men, easily leads to the assumption that all men are competent to pass an opinion on its truth or falsity. This is not the case. The most important elements in its evidences are moral and spiritual facts, and these can only be read aright by men of moral and spiritual insight—insight born of discipline and effort. He concludes by showing that Christianity appeals to the whole personality and that faith is not only reasonable but based on beliefs which all men implicitly accept. This brief sketch can only faintly outline a book which is full of keen reasoning, great philosophic power, and deep spiritual insight. We can strongly recommend it to all who desire to see the Christian cases stated firmly and fairly in the face of modern thought and discovery.

Naria.

While the Bishop was delivering an illustrated lecture on Church history in a certain township he remarked that St. Patrick found a great difficulty in explaining the Christian doctrine of the Holy Trinity to the heathen Irish. Good Irishwoman among the audience got up in great indignation, exclaiming, "Heathen Irish, indeed!" and marched out with audible reflections on English baseness and injustice to Ireland. She was evidently under the impression that Ireland was Christian from the day of its creation, and only English perversity could fail to acknowledge the fact.

This is a true story, but many people do not see the point of it for twenty-four hours. The new Rector of a Western parish had just arrived, and was walking down the main street when he espied an "old identity" tacking down the centre of the road to meet him. He had evidently been celebrating some festive event. "Hi!" he exclaimed, "are you the new parson?" The fact was admitted. "Well, give us your hand. I hope we'll be good friends; and look here—I'll tell you what. If I can't get on with you—if I don't like you, I'll—I'll—come and hear you preach!"

We strongly recommend to every man who cares about his country the careful study of Sherwell and Rowntree's book on the regulation of the drink traffic. It is the first entirely sober and scientific book we have seen on the subject. Two striking results emerge from a mass of evidence:—(1) In country districts Prohibition is both possible and successful. When it is in force prisons stand empty, rates have decreased and income increased, while happiness and prosperity are most marked; (2) In large towns Prohibition has been an utter failure, and has given rise, in many instances, to even worse evils than the hotel system. Eminently practical and safe suggestions are made for fighting the awful evil of intemperance, and we earnestly recommend the book, which is intensely interesting, and an abridged edition of which, containing many maps and photographs, can be obtained for a shilling.

BUSH WORK.

Rev. W. M. Wilkinson has been doing yeoman service in the bush districts. During September he visited Gilberton and the various lonely mining camps to the South of Georgetown, and then travelled overland to Cairns and Cooktown from which place he proceeded by cutter to Port Stewart, and from there visited the Coen, Ebagoolah, and other camps, returning overland to Cooktown via the Laura. This is the first visit of the Church to both of these districts. Mr. Wilkinson is acting as locum tenens at Cooktown until Mr. Smith's arrival.

MR. HUGH PATON.

Mr. Hugh Paton writes as follows of Thursday Island in the Brisbane Young Man's Magazine of September 1st last:—

"Religiously the Island is run by the Roman Catholics and the Church of England. There is great need for another Church with a clearer and less encumbered Gospel. I made careful enquiry and elicited the sad fact that a conversion among the whites is an unheard-of occurrence. The Roman Catholic Church is, of course, intolerant, but I found the Anglican equally so."

We prefer not to comment on the above statements. We do not consider that it is necessary to refute a charge of intolerance so expressed.

The Church-Congress was held at Bristol on October 13th last. In the course of his inaugural address the Bishop of Bristol (Dr. Browne) said:—"Our National Church is from its beginning well worth working for, living for, dying for. No National Church has so few episodes in its history, or in the history of its leading ecclesiastics, for which men of the present day have to blush. No National Church has greater deeds to show, for the benefit of the poor and needy, for the advantage of the State, than those which history has handed down as examples to our own generation. I cannot understand the desire of English people to injure so noble an institution. It is the most ancient of all our ancient institutions; and at the same time it is possessed of unbounded modern vitality. I could have understood it at some points in the harsh history of the past; but even then it must be remembered that it was the nation, not the Church, that made harsh laws, and no fair opponent will debit the Church's account with the harshness of the nation. The Church can say with truth that it has taken from time to time its share with the nation in affording relief to honest consciences. I could have understood it at times when the Church was indolent, was slumberous. I do not find that opposition to us is based on our idleness and sleepiness now; it is our activity, our vigour, our success, that seems to make bad blood. In our work, as in our purpose, our conscience is fairly clear towards God and towards man. I may claim to know something of the mind of those who are called the rulers of the Church. I declare that in the private councils of the Church, as in the public action of the Church, there is but one desire—to be of the highest service to the nation, that nation which has grown into constitutional unity round the example of the Church. When the kingdoms of England were seven, the Church of England was one."

Notes.

S. Lewis, the first student of Bishop's College, to be ordained, was made Deacon by the Bishop at Croydon on Sunday, March 20th. The sermon was preached by Rev. W. Hudson, to whom Mr. Lewis has been licensed as assistant curate.

W. M. Wilkinson returned to Normanston, recovered health in time for Easter Day. He writes most cheerfully of his work.

The Bishop has spent much more time than usual this year at Thursday Island on account of the prolonged vacancy in the parish, now happily filled.

A letter from the Bishop of New Guinea tells of the death of three white workers in ten months. We have to thank God that so far we have had not a single death among the clergy or workers of the Diocese.

The work of Bishop's College is going on steadily. Messrs. A. E. Smith and F. C. Hall are entering for the Th.L. Examination of the Australian College of Theology in October, and hope to be ordained shortly after.

The Governor of Queensland visited Thursday Island on May 10th, and showed much interest in the work of the Church.

We are most thankful to say that in God's providence all the vacancies in the Diocese have been satisfactorily filled since our last issue, when the outlook was full of anxiety. We have now more clergy by two than we have ever had, and the Bishop is relieved from a very great anxiety. He hopes as soon as possible to summon another Conference, which has been impossible hitherto owing to the many parochial changes.

Melbourne lady, and, as her health did not permit her to face the voyage to the North, he felt obliged to resign his charge after two years' service and return to Melbourne. We gratefully acknowledge Mr. Pitt's willing and cheerful service in the Diocese, and regret very much that circumstances have taken him away from us before the time.

Rev. H. P. Gocher, B.A., who came to Palmerston as Rector in December, 1901, has, we regret also, been obliged to resign his charge on account of Mrs. Gocher's health. Mr. Gocher has done excellent work at Palmerston. During his charge a stone Church has been built and gradually furnished by the Rector's care, and the Church work consolidated and put in order. Mr. Gocher is, we believe, going to South Australia. Mrs. Gocher has won universal regard in Palmerston, and we fear that her ill-health is largely owing to her over-exertions in the Church's cause.

NEW CLERGY.

We welcome among us two new clergy in addition to the Sub-Dean to whom we have elsewhere referred, namely, Rev. John Brownell Drabble, A.K.C., who has been appointed Rector of Palmerston, to which place he will proceed at the end of July to succeed Rev. H. P. Gocher, M.A., and Rev. Edwards Taffs, who follows Rev. T. K. Pitt, M.A., at Port Douglas.

Rev. J. B. Drabble, A.K.C., was ordained deacon in 1887 and priest in 1889. He was curate of Eppington and Tibshelf, in Derbyshire, and came out to Queensland in 1898, when he became the present Bishop of Carpentaria's curate at Hughenden. The following year he was appointed Rector of Walkerston, where he has since remained, doing good service for the Church, riding immense distances to visit the remoter stations, building Churches, and strengthening the Church's work in the sugar districts around Mackay. He volunteered for Carpentaria upon the Bishop's appointment in 1900, but has loyally remained at his present post ever since in order not to inconvenience the Diocese of North Queensland in the time of DEPARTING CLERGY.

We are losing two of our clergy, to the great regret of Diocese and parishes alike.

Rev. T. K. Pitt, M.A., came to us for three years in March, 1902, and has endeared himself to the people of Port Douglas and Mosman, among whom he has worked with marked success. Mr. Pitt was married early in the year to a trouble through which it was passing. With the return of the Bishop and the advent of more clergy he has felt himself free to redeem his promise to this Diocese—an instance of loyalty and tenacity of purpose which will, we believe, not be without its influence. He is unmarried.

Rev. Edward Taffs, who, at a time when the Bishop was in great straits for men, has volunteered to come to Port Douglas, and refused, though married, to be frightened by a small house and small income, was ordained deacon in 1900 and priest in 1901, and has been curate of the fashionable parish of Kew (Melbourne), which he is leaving for the simpler conditions of the North. We wish him all happiness and success. He arrived at Port Douglas June 14th.

[We would rather have left this matter alone, but before God and the people we dare not. If any of our readers are so good that their neighbours' sins and troubles are of no interest to them they can let this article severely alone.]

THE DECLINING BIRTHRATE.

The Royal Commissioners of N S.W. in their report on the decline of the birthrate in that State, and equally over all Australia, make a solemn appeal to the clergy to assist them in instituting a crusade of such an impressive character as may arouse the torpid consciences of the people of Australia to the immorality and selfishness of the growing practice of deliberately restricting the number of children to be born of them, and enable them to realize the horrible degradation of their own character and the national degeneration and decay that must inevitably ensue.

The report is an appalling document. It shows that about 15 years ago this degrading and unnatural practice, which had previously prevailed only to a small extent, took possession of the Australian people, and has been growing and extending ever since, so that during the last 10 years the birthrate has declined so rapidly that of all the countries in the world only two—Ireland, where the low rate is caused by excessive emigration of the young, and France, where the births hardly equal the deaths—have a lower rate than Australia, which as a new and thinly populated country ought to be well in advance of older countries. It is calculated that during the last forty years nearly a million children have been prevented from being born in Australia—one-fourth of our total population, the greater part of whom should have been alive and serving the State to-day. There is, moreover, overwhelming medical testimony to the fact that the attempts to interfere with nature have had the most disastrous effect upon the women of the country, nature inevitably avenging the violation of her laws.

The commission put aside the plea that poverty is the cause of this crime. The real reason is a selfish unwillingness to submit to the strain and worry of children, a dislike to the interference with pleasure and comfort involved in child-bearing and child-rearing, and a love of luxury and social pleasures. The commissioners say "a circumstance that causes grave misgivings as to the future is that so many women do not realize the wrong involved in the practices of prevention and abortion. They converse with one another upon these subjects apparently without shame and freely approach doctors and chemists to procure the means to gratify their desires." Dr. A Murray-Oram, after referring to the frequency with which he was approached with requests for illegal treatment, added: "They do not seem to grasp the immorality of it, though they are otherwise good living and right thinking women." The commissioners conclude: "We have been reluctantly but inevitably driven to the conclusion that the people—led astray by false and pernicious doctrine into the belief that personal interests and ambitions, a high standard of ease, comfort and luxury are the essential aims of life, and that these aims are best attained by refusing to accept the consequences which nature has ordained shall follow from marriage—have neglected and are neglecting their true duty to themselves, their fellow-countrymen and to posterity. Forgetful of the lessons of history, ignoring the teaching of science, bent on gratifying their selfish desires, and on pursuing social advancement, they are seeking to follow the dictates of a narrow reasoning, and blindly imagine that in raising the standard of their own physical comfort they are smoothing the path of life for themselves and their posterity, while leaving to others the creation of that posterity for which they professed to be so concerned. . . .

Already we see in the injury to health, the wrecking of life which is manifesting itself, how nature has begun to avenge herself on those who oppose her laws. . . . We find that the practices and habits which the doctrines of limitation inculcate tend to undermine the morality of the people, to loosen the bonds of religion, and to obliterate the influence of those higher sentiments and sanctions for conduct with which the development of high national character has ever been associated. . . . We do not hesitate to declare that the doctrines which advocate and justify the deliberate restriction of child bearing in marriage are vicious. With the decay of individual and social morality we must expect the loss of all those qualities which have made the British race predominant. In whatever way the waning birthrate is viewed, whether in its effect on the health, character, or social worth of individuals; on the value of the family as the basis of national life, on the quality and dignity of civil life, on the character of the people, on their social, moral and economic progress, on their national aims and aspirations, or on their capacity to survive in the rivalry of nations, and whether it is viewed in the light of history or of science, it is seen as a grave disorder sapping the vitals of a new people, dispelling its hopes, blighting its prospects and threatening its continuance." The commissioners go on to say that unless there is a great change Australia will be lost to our race, and that the blame will rest on the selfishness and lust of the present generation.

The Christian Church speaks with no uncertain voice. The Archbishop of Sydney says "I think this practice is a sin against God, a sin against nature, and a sin against society." Cardinal Moran says "It implies a violation of the natural law and a violation of the divine law." Rev. Dr. Dill Mackay says "It is contrary to the teaching of Scripture and contrary to the well being of the nation." Archdeacon Langley says "It is a violation of the sanctity of marriage, and morally and spiritually deadening to persons of religious mind and heart." Rev. T. J. Stephens says "It is a sin and immoral practice, a crime in the sight of the law of God." Rev. J. Howell Price says "My own view in regard to this question of the limitation of families would be summed up practically in one word—'Murder.'"

The Church has kept silence on this subject quite long enough. While we have feared to accentuate the evil by speaking, the poison has been spreading, and thousands of otherwise decent and right-thinking men and women have been drifting into deadly sin. Let us, at least, have no mistake about the position of the Church in the future. Let those who sin at least know that they are committing a sin which is condemned by science as ruinous to health, condemned by those who have gravely considered its effects as absolutely destructive of national life and character, and condemned by the Church as a deadly sin against God, and an act of selfishness and self-degradation. If the women of Australia are so lost to all shame as to continue in sin, knowing it to be sin, we must indeed despair of our country; but it is because we believe that many have sinned in ignorance of the deadly character of their sin that we have brought up this matter in the hopes of saving some and bringing others to repentance.

DR. WACE ON DOCTRINE AND RITUAL.

At the Church Conference at Bristol, in 1903, the Very Rev. Dean Wace, who may fairly be regarded as the most able and learned of the Evangelical clergy of England, read a paper, from which we make the following extracts:—

"That which is Catholic is indissolubly connected, in the mind of the Church of England, with that which is ancient and with that which is apostolical. But what do we mean by ancient? Where, or at least whereabouts, are we to draw the line which marks those venerable limits? Now, for English Churchmen, it appears to me that we have a remarkable indication of the mind of our Reformers. In the famous challenge put forth by Bishop Jewel, at Paul's Cross, he enumerates a variety of practices and doctrines which prevailed, and still prevail, in the Roman Church, and which had been abolished in the Church of England, and he said that 'if any learned man of all our adversaries be able to bring any one sufficient sentence out of any old Catholic Doctor or Father, or out of any old General Council, or out of the Holy Scriptures of God, or any one example of the Primitive Church whereby it may be clearly and plainly proved that such things existed for the span of six hundred years after Christ, I promise that I will give over and subscribe unto him!' This would seem to be fair evidence of what the Reformers of Jewel's time—of what, for instance, men like his pupil Hooker—understood as marking the limits of what is ancient and Catholic. . . . Now it deserves, I think, more consideration than it has received whether this does not constitute an historic landmark of the highest significance for determining what, in the judgment of the Church of England, can justly claim the sanction of Catholicity. It has, indeed, a double aspect. It is a practical admission all the more weighty as proceeding from one of the most Protestant of the Reformers that if a doctrine or a practice could be shown to have adequate authority within the first six centuries it ought not be treated as inadmissible within the Church. It must not merely, of course, have been an occasional practice or an individual belief, but must have had the support of some settled authority; for in those days, no less than in these, there was plenty of irregular thought and action. It would not follow, even then, that it was altogether right and desirable, but it would fall within the sphere of that which had Catholic countenance, and therefore, on the Catholic principles on which the Church of England is reformed, it would have a prima facie claim to be regarded as allowable to be taught by her ministers and accepted by her people. That is, it seems to me, the principle to which Bishop Jewel has practically committed us. There never was a stronger Protestant among us, and that which he was prepared to accept as a test of Catholicity we ought not to shrink from. . . . But, on the other hand, the line must be drawn here, and drawn with firmness. Doctrines and practices which arose after that date may be good or bad, but they must stand on their own merits—they cannot claim to be Catholic."

It is difficult to exaggerate the importance of this statement of Dr. Wace's. If the Evangelical party are prepared to stand by their leader—and it is difficult to see what possible grounds they can put forward for refusing to do so—then the end of party strife would seem to be already in view. We believe that all loyal and reasonable High Churchmen—and they form the vast majority—would be fully prepared to accept Dr. Wace's standard of Catholicity. Nine-tenths of the common objections to Church teaching and to decent and orderly ritual would be swept away at once, since there is no shadow of a doubt as to the doctrine and practice of the first six centuries. The remaining points would be removed out of the region of opinion and liking into the cold region of historical fact. No doubt many habitual accessories of worship would have to be acknowledged as without Catholic authority and continued, if continued at all, only on their own merits; but, as a rule, these are the least contentious parts of our service. The zeal of fanatics is too often directed chiefly against that which is most Primitive and most Catholic, and from this ignorant misdirection of energy, so harmful to the cause alike of Reformed doctrine and discipline, we should be saved by the adoption of Dr. Wace's standard. We hope in another article to point out some of the doctrines and practices which come under Dr. Wace's definition of Catholic.

NEW GUINEA.

The following interesting communication has been received from Mr. Eric Giblin, from Dogura, and bears date March 15th, 1904:—

"On arrival at Dogura I received instructions to go to Taupota and hunt up a number of our people who were more or less out of touch with us; some indeed from simple reasons of distance, but others because they had relapsed into certain heathen customs which even they themselves could not reconcile with a profession of Christianity.

"With this understanding I went down in the schooner to Hioge to get details from Mr. Dakers. I was very much astonished at the size of our settlement there, and also at the extent of the work. It reminded me very much of the Yarrabah Mission, which I had the privilege of visiting on my way up, only, of course, it has not one-third of the staff.

"Leaving Hioge at midnight, we arrived at Taupota next morning at daybreak, and then began a series of visits and interviews which took up the whole of that day and part of the next.

"Here at Taupota we have two workers about a mile and a half apart: one, a South Sea teacher, Bob Tasso, and one of our Christians, Gabriel.

"Next morning we left at grey dawn for the mountains, and with two visits en route arrived at Uria at mid-day. Here we formerly had a school, but, as the children had all left to go to Hioge, there was no longer any need of this, and it was closed nearly two years ago.

"Soon the news of our arrival reached the workers in the gardens, and by three o'clock most of them were gathered around us, wanting to know the reason of our visit. In the evening we had service for all under a gigantic mango tree. It is very solemn and still up there in the mountains—the distant roar of the river in the ravine many hundred feet below us, the hush of the eternal hills above and around, combined to awe us into reverence, even if we had not already felt it for our service. There, in the gathering shades of night, the sweet strains of 'Now the day is over,' ascended as readily to the throne of God as in any Cathedral built by the hands of man. After this the evensong for Christians, and after a few moments' chat over our camp fire we wrapped up in our blankets—for it is cold up here in the mountains, often going down to 63° Fahr.—and in a few minutes nothing stirred the stillness save an occasional flap-flap of flying-foxes in the trees overhead.

"Next morning we were awakened just before sunrise. It was raining. 'The rains had begun,' said the boys. We hoped not, for many of the mountain tracks are impassable during the rainy season. We waited for two hours, and then, as there was no sign of it clearing, we took the track, and were wet to the skin before we had gone twenty paces, for the grass and scrub is over four feet high and loaded down with rain-drops.

"On and up, until, after four hours' hard going, we came to the head of the pass, and called a halt for refreshment. We were sopped through and through, the boys were angry with the leeches—for which they have an intense disgust—and, to add to our discomfort, a cold wind was coming over the pass from Milne Bay, but we were leaving the rain behind us, and thousands of feet below we saw the fertile Maiwara plain lying bathed in warm sunlight, and the sight gave us renewed vigour.

"We camped on the lower slopes for the night, and next day made our way to the plain. Here we met many well-known faces, as also many never seen before. We had left the Mission district at the head of the pass, and were now in L.M.S. territory.

"Altogether I spent two weeks and a few days over the trip, and the results, on the whole, were very cheering."

DRIVER ON GENESIS.

The Book of Genesis, by Professor Driver, 1904, is a powerful and interesting attempt to expound Genesis in the light of modern critical science, and is the first volume of a series of commentaries designed to follow the same lines. The name of the general editor, Dr. Locke, warden of Keble College, is a guarantee that the series will contain nothing that in the opinion of at least some earnest and devout men is inconsistent with the Catholic faith; but while we gladly acknowledge the reverent tone of Dr. Driver and his insistence on the spiritual value of Genesis, we cannot but think that he has in some instances made statements impugning the historical value of the book which are ill supported by facts. For instance, he insists over and over again that the Hebrew accounts of the Creation, the Fall, and the Flood must be derived from Babylonian sources. While admitting the infinite superiority of the simple monotheistic Hebrew account to the wild polytheistic legends of Babylon, we do not think that he at all proves his point. In all such cases the presumption is that the simpler unadorned account is the earlier, and we see no reason why the account in Genesis should not be an independent and earlier tradition which has become overlaid and embroidered in the Babylonian account. Dr. Driver can scarcely be ignorant that the great German scholar, Dr. Hommel, whom he often quotes with approval, holds this view strongly, and has in a lately delivered lecture commented in very scathing terms on the rashness of those who attribute these traditions to Babylonian sources. A more serious question is raised by Dr. Driver's treatment of the institution of marriage. He implies that the author of Genesis is mistaken in attributing to monogamic marriage, and, indeed, to marriage altogether, a relation established by the Creator. He does not produce any evidence in support of his statement, and it is needless to say that it is diametrically opposed to our Lord's statement and to his references to this very verse of Genesis. With much that Dr. Driver says it is impossible not to agree. He shows that there is every reason to believe that the Patriarchal narratives are substantially accurate, and he shows little inclination to accept the theory that the patriarchs were not real persons, but tribal names. He utters also a needed warning when he says "It must be remembered that the doctrine that the Bible contains nothing but what is historically true, is one for which there is no foundation, either in the Bible itself or in the formularies of our Church. It is intimately connected with, if not entirely dependent on, a particular theory of inspiration. . . . The doctrine of the verbal inspiration and verbal exactitude of Scripture is in fact an a priori theory framed not on any basis of warrant contained in Scripture itself, but framed on an antecedent conception of what an 'inspired' book must necessarily be. It is, however, a complete mistake of principle and method to frame first an a priori theory of inspiration, and then insist that the Bible must conform to it. The Bible is the only 'inspired' book we know of; and as no independent definition of inspiration exists, the only sound method is to study first the facts presented by the Bible and to formulate our theory of inspiration accordingly. . . . If we make proper allowance for the human element co-operating with the divine, then all those facts which are fatal to the authority of the Bible on the theory above referred to are adequately accounted for and the Bible becomes a consistent whole, inspired throughout, though not 'dictated,' and with its authority firmly established upon a sound and logical basis."

A holy life is the very gate of heaven. But let us always remember that holiness does not consist in doing uncommon things, but in doing everything with purity of heart. It is made up of relative duties and habitual devotion. —Cardinal Manning.

Vol. IV.—No. 15. Thursday Island, July 1, 1904

DIOCESAN STATISTICS.

We publish in this number the Diocesan Statistics for 1903. The estimated number of Churchpeople reached by our ministrations shows an increase of 300, while the number of clergy has increased from 6 to 7, and the number of centres at which regular services are held from 12 to 16. The number of Celebrations of Holy Communion has slightly decreased, while the number of Sunday School teachers has increased by 1. The number of Sunday School scholars has decreased by 78, but this is entirely owing to the extraordinary difference in the returns from one parish, which reports 122 less than last year. All the other parishes have increased their numbers. All told, 629 children bears an inadequate relation to the Church population of the Diocese, which is about 5000. Of course this is largely owing to the number of children in the bush, out of reach of any regular ministrations. The number of communicants has increased by 74, while the baptisms have diminished by 11, the confirmations by 10, and the marriages by 3.

Turning to finance, there is at first sight a large decrease in the money received (£2,088 instead of £3,308), but this is chiefly owing to the fact that last year special efforts were made for church building in nearly all the parishes—(hence the difference)—but £61 coming under this head. The amount paid as stipend has increased, contributions for diocesan objects have increased from £15 to £37, expenses of divine service have decreased by £146, and parochial indebtedness decreased by £65. The total indebtedness of the Diocese, after deducting credit balances, amounts to £488, of which the sum of £413 is the long standing building debt of one parish. It is unsatisfactory to note that the Cathedral was the only parish which contributed to Missions during the year. Others have given generously to us, and we ought to give freely according to our ability.

On the whole the returns may be said to be fairly satisfactory. There have been no great church building efforts, but the general work and income of the Church has been maintained during a time of general financial depression, and in some important particulars increased. The ranks of our clergy will be again reinforced during the present year, and it should show a distinct advance on 1903.

VISIT OF THE PRIMATE.

His Grace the Primate arrived at Thursday Island by the s.s. Maranoa on Tuesday, May 24th. In the afternoon, by invitation of the commanding officer, the Bishop and Primate visited the fort, and were present at the firing of the big guns. On Wednesday the Primate was present at the weekly meeting of the Quetta Club, and on Thursday he was welcomed at a crowded conversazione in the Parish Institute, which had been most tastefully decorated. Addresses from the Diocesan Council and the parish were read by Hon. John Douglas, C.M.G., and Mr. H. G. Hodder respectively, while the Bishop expressed his own personal pleasure at the Archbishop's visit and his sense of His Grace's kindness, patience, and impartiality in the discharge of the duties of his high office. The Primate expressed his pleasure at the welcome he had received, and then read the following formal reply:—

In reply to the addresses which you have kindly presented to me, let me assure you how glad I am to be again in Thursday Island, and to see it in the improved and progressive condition in Church matters which is, under God, the result of the establishment of the Bishopric of Carpentaria. It was with a view to the formation of the new Diocese that I came up with the Bishops Stanton and Barlow nine years ago. In 1900 our plans had a practical issue in the consecration at Sydney of the diligent, able, and self-denying Bishop who now presides over the missionary Diocese (as it eminently deserves to be called) of Carpentaria. None of us who took part in that consecration, or witnessed it, can forget the impressive solemnity of the service, or the appropriate association therewith of a week of remarkable missionary meetings in the Sydney Town Hall.

I am truly glad to be here to give such encouragement, and such exhibition of personal sympathy, as I may, through my position as Primate, be enabled to give to this new and distant Diocese.

Believe me that this sympathy, which my presence here exhibits, is not only felt whilst I am present with you, but in my absence also; and that you are not forgotten in my prayers.

I thank you heartily for your welcome and good wishes, and I pray that the Bishop, the Diocesan Council, the parish of Thursday Island, and the Anglican Church in this Diocese, with its official centre in this Island, where, as you have reminded me, Christianity has to commend itself to men of varying creeds and nationalities, may enjoy increased spiritual blessing, and may exercise an ever-increasing influence for good in our complex Commonwealth of Australia.

WM. SZ. SYDNEY.

May 26, 1904.

On Friday the Primate, who was the guest of the Bishop at Bishop's College, went for a sail round the islands in the government yawl, Mystic, kindly put at his disposal by Captain Webster, the harbour master. On Saturday afternoon the foundation block of the new vicarage was laid by His Grace. The procession left Bishop's College at 4 p.m., headed by the choir singing "Onward, Christian Soldiers." The Primate wore his scarlet robes, and his Pastoral Staff was carried by Mr. F. C. Hall, and the Bishop's by Mr. A. G. Smith. Mr. C. H. Hindmarsh, people's warden, read a financial statement, which showed that a sum of £272 was in hand, and that £108 more was required to complete the work. A formal statement and a copy of the day's "Pilot" were placed in the block. A small silver trowel, presented to the Primate, who proceeded to declare the block duly laid, afterwards giving a short address. A large number of visitors were present and were afterwards entertained at tea in the Parish Institute. The offertory amounted to £16 5s. 3d. On Sunday morning a church parade of the R.A.A. and Garrison Battery was held. There was a large congregation. The Primate preached on the doctrine of the Holy Trinity. Mr. H. Ayscough, assistant organist, played, and the singing was very good and hearty. In the afternoon the Primate visited the South Sea Islanders' Home and addressed a few words to the boys. At night the Church was crowded and the singing was especially good. The Primate, whose staff was carried by Mr. H. H. Ayscough, preached an impressive sermon on the text, "God is love." After evensong a Japanese service was held, and the Primate gave an address, Mr. A. Kashiwagi interpreting. The offertories for the Vicarage Fund on this and the previous day amounted to £26 4s. 5d., leaving an amount of £82 8s. 7d. to be still raised. The Primate expressed himself as greatly pleased with his visit and congratulated the diocese on the progress which had been made. He also kindly promised to contribute £10 a year towards Bishop's College. His Grace left by the Maranoa on Tuesday, May 31, for Townsville.

THE NEW SUB-DEAN.

Rev. John Jones, B.A., senior curate of the Parish Church, Woolwich (England), has been appointed Vicar of Thursday Island and Sub-Dean of the Cathedral. He will be married shortly before leaving England, and hopes to arrive at Thursday Island in August.

Bishop Montgomery writes that he is much impressed by Mr. Jones' personality, and that he considers the Diocese exceptionally fortunate in securing his services, and equally so with regard to the lady who is to be his wife.

Dr. Harris (the Bishop's commissary) writes that he has energy, enthusiasm, good sense, and good physique.

The Rector of Woolwich writes that Mr. Jones is a good preacher, and most faithful and punctual in the discharge of all the duties of a parish priest.

Mr. Jones was educated at Christ's College, Brecon, Lampeter, and London; was ordained deacon 1898, priest 1899, and has held two curacies—Cymmer, in Wales, and Woolwich—a parish well known for the vigour and efficiency of its Church life.

We are sure that Mr. Jones, who is also a vigorous athlete, and very successful with young men, will, with Mrs. Jones, find a warm welcome at Thursday Island.

Immediately on the receipt of the news of Mr. Jones' appointment the Wardens and Parochial Council called tenders for the erection of a Vicarage, and tenders have been accepted for the erection of a suitable building at a cost, with extras, of nearly £400, of which about two-thirds is already in hand.

News of the Parishes.

THURSDAY ISLAND.

Rev. O. M. Jones, M.A., Tutor of Bishop's College, has been licensed as assistant curate and has been doing most excellent work in that capacity.

Miss F. Buchanan, Th.A., has returned to her labours in the parish, but we regret to say that she still suffers much from her foot, and is unable to dispense with crutches.

The Easter services were bright and well attended, but the number of communicants fell short by ten of our highest number at Christmas, owing to the large number of Church workers who have recently left the Island.

The Easter meeting was held in the Parish Institute on Thursday, April 14th. Messrs Hodder and Hindmarsh were appointed Wardens and Messrs. O'Brien, Sullivan, and Shires Parochial Councillors.

There has been an unusual amount of sickness in the parish this year, owing, probably, to the long and late wet season.

When the new Vicarage is erected there will be no less than six separate buildings enclosed by the fence of the Church grounds, a group of which we may well be proud.

The Quetta Club continues its good work, and some very interesting debates and literary evenings have been held.

A lecture was given by the Bishop on May 12th to the men of the R.A.A. on Mr. Wells' anticipations, and appeared to interest them very deeply.

The Primate was present at the meeting of the Quetta Club on May 25th, and showed much interest in the proceedings.

The tender of Mr. J. Young for the erection of a new Vicarage at a cost of £390 8s. has been accepted. About £310 of the required sum is in hand.

The Vicarage will be a handsome and commodious building with 13ft. walls and broad verandas, and will stand in the south-west corner of the Church grounds.

COOKTOWN.

Christ Church.—Notwithstanding much encouragement the past three months have been uneventful so far as the Church is in question. There is still room for improvement in attendance at Sunday morning and Wednesday evening services and at Holy Communion. The Church is still well filled at the evening service, and there are good attendances of children at Sunday School and at week-day service and instruction, 3.45 a.m.

There was a moderate attendance at the Easter meeting. The following officers were elected for the year:—Churchwardens: Messrs. Rich (rector's), and Thomas (people's.) Parochial Councillors: Messrs. Boddington and Grant (rector's), F. Brown, Reid, Perry, and E. Jeagreen.

The weather greatly interfered with our Easter services, but the attendances were very good considering. The week-day administrations of Holy Communion on St. Mark's and Ascension Days were attended by eight and ten respectively, and the evening service of the latter festival was very much appreciated and helpful.

Miss E. Baker has joined the staff of Sunday school teachers.

Mrs. Patching, a very old resident of Cooktown, and one long identified with Christ Church, was laid to rest April 8th. Her remains were followed to the grave by a large number of friends and relatives. Exactly one month afterwards Mrs. Davies, another old Church member, departed life after a protracted illness.

Maytown.—On May 13th, taking advantage of a visit of Mr. Lee-Bryce to the District Court at Maytown, the Rector accompanied him to that place on a pastoral visit. Here a most useful work for Christ has for some time been carried on by Mr. J. J. Moran. Though rarely visited by a clergyman Mr. Moran has never allowed his zeal for the welfare of the Church to decrease. Last year candidates were carefully prepared by him for Confirmation, and our children are weekly instructed in the Christian faith. He is assisted in the latter work by Mr. Franklin. With such a fellow labourer as Mr. Moran it is but natural that a clergyman visiting the place should feel a special pleasure in his duties. On Sunday, May 15th, Holy Communion was administered at 7.30 a.m. in the Divisional Board Hall, at which eight were present. Children's service was held in the morning, and a hearty service fully attended in the evening.

The Rector purposes to pay regular visits for the future.

PALMERSTON.

During the past three months our numbers have continued small, and everything in Port Darwin has been very quiet. For these reasons we are the more grateful to record the continuance of good and encouraging marks of our Church life, as throughout the year the attendance at Holy Communion is an increase on the past, and a high average is maintained.

On Good Friday there were 25 communicants, and on Easter Day 31. It is right that the death day of our Lord should be thus reverently observed by His servants, and we are thankful to note the increase on the 11 of last year.

The newly-formed choir has succeeded in establishing a reputation of merit. Anthems have been sung almost fortnightly, and they tend to show great improvement in confidence and taste. We have to thank especially the various members of the choir who have so kindly given much additional practice to the preparation of the choruses, trios, duets, etc.

The Sunday School attendance is uniformly good. Five new scholars have been added to our number. The children show a growing familiarity and understanding of the Church service.

There have been several additions made to the furnishing of the chancel. The sum of £5 10s. was handed to the Rector by Mrs. Andrews, who had most energetically undertaken to collect it from the ladies of the congregation to provide an altar frontal. This amount, together with a handsome gift of money from Mrs. Waters, and the fees of the French Club, has enabled us to write South for two frontals—a green and white. We hear from Miss Richardson, the secretary of the Adelaide Cathedral Guild, that the work is well in hand, and we hope soon to see them in the Church. Such a desire to beautify our dear little Church is very encouraging, and highly to be commended.

Two large water-tanks have been placed against the east wall of the parish room through the interest and energy of Mr. Waters, who collected the money from the gentlemen of the congregation.

Mr. P. R. Allen has kindly given six large hymn books and six psalters for the use of the choir. Gifts of books have been received from Mr. F. L. Finnis for the Sunday School Library.

The Girls' Friendly Society has now twenty-two names on the roll. There are seven candidates, nine members, and six associates. Mrs. Gocher is now hon. sec., Mrs. Langdon having left Palmerston for England. Meetings are held for the candidates fortnightly at Mrs. Andrews', and for the members and associates there are meetings once a month at the Rectory. All the meetings are very well attended, and some useful occupation is combined with the entertainment provided.

The Easter Vestry was fixed for April 7th, but owing to very bad weather was postponed.

The adjourned annual meeting was held on April 14th, and there were nine present. The wardens' report and balance sheets, together with those of Pine Creek, were read, and will be printed in the parochial report. The officers for the present year are:—Messrs. Andrews and Noble, wardens; Messrs. Johns and F. L.

Finniss, sidesmen. The Rector announced his resignation, and said he was going South about August next, and the following resolution was carried: "That the wardens offer £225 as the stipend, and pay the rent of a suitable house for a rectory to the incoming Rector."

On Sunday, May 1st, the Rector announced the appointment of Rev. J. B. Drabble as his successor.

On April 18th Mr. and Mrs. Langdon left us for England, via the South. They have been good friends and supporters of our Church. In all branches of Church work—the G.F.S., the Altar flower guild, sales of work—Mrs. Langdon has shown great interest. Mr. Langdon has acted as people's warden ever since the Church was started here, and the Rector owes a debt of gratitude to Mr. Langdon for the way in which he has carried out his duties. It was through his influence we obtained the financial support of the Cable Co., and as one of our first adult confirmation candidates he set a good example to the men in seeking Divine assistance for the struggles of life. They will both be greatly missed.

A cable was received on Friday, February 26th, stating that Mrs. H. Clark had passed away. This is a great grief, we may be sure, to all who had learned to love her and esteem her friendship. She was a devoted and regular communicant, and took great interest in all Church work, especially in the religious training of half-castes. As a member of the choir she was one of our mainstays. Her kindness and generosity were unbounded. If any witness were required for the value of Church teaching and influence we would point to this esteemed lady.

On Sunday, May 2th, the infant daughter of Mrs. Gurry was baptized after the churching service in the morning.

At Pine Creek during the wet season the evening service was held at 4. At both services held by the Rector in February the congregations were good, and there was the full number of communicants.

The Rector visited Pine Creek again in April. On April 10th (the octave of Easter) there were seven communicants, and a very good attendance at 4 p.m.

On Monday the first wedding was celebrated in the Mission Church, and a reception held in the house of Mr. and Mrs. Niemann.

At 8 p.m. the annual meeting was held, and Mr. Niemann read a report on the last year's work, and a new committee and officers were elected. This report will be printed in the parochial annual report. The balance sheet was very satisfactory, and reflects the greatest credit upon the congregation. The Rector again thanks Mr. and Mrs. Schunke for their hospitality.

We are pleased to welcome Mrs. Schunke and Mrs. Marsh upon their return from a visit South.

At Yam Creek there are constantly further developments, and the population continues to grow. The services held by the Rector in March were well attended. There were three communicants, and in the evening a congregation of 18. The Rector was entertained as usual by the very kind hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. Roberts.

CROYDON.

St. Margaret's.—Since our last we have been visited by our Bishop.

On Passion Sunday Mr. S. Lewis was ordained as deacon in St. Margaret's Church. Mr. Lewis is the first student who has gone through his three years' course at the Thursday Island College. He is to remain here as curate.

On the afternoon of the same Sunday the Bishop administered Confirmation to twenty-five candidates at Croydon, and nine (three girls and six boys) at Golden Gate. Good congregations at both services.

We are about to sustain a great loss by the removal of Mr. and Mrs. Waldie to Brisbane. Mr. Waldie has rendered noble service to the Church both financially and by personal work. He will be much missed at the organ, where he has presided for the evening service. As a Church and as individuals our good wishes go with Mr. and Mrs. Waldie, and we feel sure that some Southern Church will gain by our loss. We are fortunate in having Mr. Stewart to fill Mr. Waldie's place as organist and choir leader.

Our choir has suffered severely by the departure of Miss Hawkes and Mr. Bray, the former to Brisbane and the latter to Almaden. Mrs. Gregg has been obliged, for health sake, to seek a Southern clime, and we shall be without her for some time.

The Easter vestry meeting was held after evensong on the Sunday following Easter Sunday. We were sorry more did not stay, but "the faithful few" remained, and the business was done by them. Mr. Bechtel was re-elected as Rector's Warden, and Mr. Harries as People's Warden; Messrs. Maslin, Foster, North, O'Connell and Arthur, Committee; and Mr. Eric Frost, Secretary. The latter has proved himself worthy in the past. It is encouraging when the young men come forward and help. We welcome Mr. Arthur, he being new blood into the committee, and we hope it will be invigorated thereby.

Mr. Wilkinson exchanged with Mr. Hudson for one Sunday, and all his old friends were glad to see his face again. A good congregation turned up at night to hear one who had endeared himself to them in times past.

We must not forget to thank those who so kindly helped with the decorating of the Church for Easter Sunday, and those who sent flowers and greens. The decorations were much admired, and the Church was in true festal array.

A three hours' service was held on Good Friday, and the Rector was pleased with the number who kept the hours sacred.

The Rector is much encouraged by the condition of things at Golden Gate. The vestry meeting was well attended, although no one old enough to take the responsibility of churchwarden could be found. A good committee was formed, viz., Mrs. Duffy, Mrs. Whitaker, Miss Boyle, Miss Jensen, Miss Nellie Ussher, Mr. Wheeler, and Mr. W. Crane. A choir has been organised, with Miss Grant as organist.

We are contemplating a bazaar, to be held in Croydon during carnival week, to reduce the debt on the Church building. Shall report progress hereafter.

A fortnightly Girls' Bible Class has been started, but the attendance is very discouraging.

NORMANTON.

St. Peter's Church.—The Rev. Mr. Hudson resigned his cure of the parish for that of Croydon in response to a call from that parish, and left for the goldfield on the 15th January. His resignation was received with much regret, as during Mr. and Mrs. Hudson's stay with us they endeared themselves to the hearts of the people, and the fruits of their good work were ever manifest.

The choice of a successor claimed the attention of the councillors at a special meeting, and, as a result, His Lordship the Bishop was asked to appoint the Rev. W. M. Wilkinson to the cure of the parish. This His Lordship was pleased to do, but as Mr. Wilkinson was suffering from a severe illness at the time, and unable to return from the South for a couple of months, it looked as though the parish would have to do without the services of a minister during that time. We, however, were not to be so disappointed, His Lordship kindly arranging for Mr. Smith and Mr. Lewis, students for Holy Orders from the college at Thursday Island, to minister to our wants the greater portion of the interval, the Bishop taking charge of the parish for the remainder of the time. This makes the second visit of His Lordship during the past year, and as the steamer service is only a three-weekly one, we realize the time it takes to come up here. The addresses on early Church history, given on both occasions in the School of Arts, were well attended, the magic lantern illustrations being appreciated very much.

The Rev. Mr. Wilkinson arrived on the 26th March, being met at the Margaret and Jane landing by a number of Church people, who were pleased to see him looking well again.

The Easter meeting was held on the 12th of April, and it was gratifying to learn from the churchwardens' report that steady progress had been made during the past year, the balance sheet showing the accounts to be in a better position by £10 than at the beginning of the year after paying off £40 odd on Rectory Improvement Fund and painting the Church and fence. Mr. F. Wallin was reinstated as Rector's Warden, and Mr. H. M. Thorne elected People's Warden. The following gentlemen were elected members of the Parochial Council:—Messrs. Alan Sinclair, P. C. Hardie, A. E. Lewis, (Rector's Councillors), W. Crouch, R. Sherrin, G. Dowling, G. Müller, senr., L. Walsh, and J. Scott.

The Sunday evening services are well attended, but an improvement in the numbers attending morning services would be a source of pleasure to our Rector.

The Sunday School is going on nicely, the average attendance of children being a little over 50 out of a roll of 70 odd. The teaching staff is well maintained.

Miss M. E. Gough, who has been teaching in the Sunday School for a good many years, was married to Mr. Dowling, of the Post and Telegraph Department, on Wednesday, the 11th May, in the Church. Miss Gough is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Gough, old and respected residents of Normanton, and the many friends of the bride and bridegroom crowded the Church to witness the ceremony, which was performed by the Rev. Mr. Wilkinson in an impressive manner.

As showing the happy relation existing between Miss Gough and her sister teachers, a pleasing function took place at the Rectory on the Tuesday afternoon before the wedding, when the Rev. Mr. Wilkinson, on behalf of the teachers of the Sunday School, presented Miss Gough with an address and handsomely bound prayer and hymn book. In presenting the address Mr. Wilkinson wished Miss Gough every happiness, and trusted that she might be long spared to continue in the good work in which she has been so long interested. The address, which was very artistically drawn up by the Rev. W. Hudson, of Croydon, was read as follows:—

TO MISS MARGUERITE E. GOUGH.

On behalf of St. Peter's Sunday School, Normanton, we, the undersigned teachers, desire to thank you most heartily and sincerely for many years' service in connection with us.

We feel sure that your faithful attention to duty, which you have ever shown with us, will bring you happiness and prosperity in the future.

We pray that God's richest blessing may rest upon your marriage, and follow you all your life through, and bring you to His everlasting kingdom.

Ruby Bates, Ellen McLain, Gertie Hannaford, M. Sherrin, Mary Elizabeth Müller, Frances Lilian Wachter; W. M. Wilkinson, Curate-in-Charge.

The prayer and hymn book was artistically inscribed by Mr. Murchie, and read as follows:

"Presented to Miss Gough by the teachers of St. Peter's Sunday School, Normanton, on the occasion of her marriage. May, 1904."

Miss Gough, with much feeling, thanked the teachers for their kindness and good wishes, and assured them of her continued sympathy and help as far as she possibly could.

We welcome Mr. Day (manager, Q.N. Bank), Mr. Lewis (accountant, B. P. & Co., Ltd.), and Mr. Murchie (head teacher, State School), as parishioners; Mr. Day and Mr. Lewis have joined the choir, Mr. Day kindly undertaking to take charge of same.

The ladies of the Society of the Treasury—Mrs. Sherrin, Miss McLain, and Miss Willmot—are untiring in their efforts collecting monthly subscriptions, and much good will result from the systematic method now adopted. It would be hard to say how we would make ends meet without the ladies' Society of the Treasury.

These and other ladies of the congregation including Mrs. Wallin, Mrs. Thorne, Miss Bates, Miss Wachter, and Miss Hannaford have undertaken to raise more money still by holding a Sale of Work in the School of Art on the 19th July. As this will be Tuesday in next week they expect to make it a success from the fact that we will have a good number of visitors to town then. It is also proposed to hold an entertainment the following night, the 20th July, and the Parochial Council are working up a programme. The Sale of Work promises to nett the best return, and if more material were forthcoming a gratifying result would be achieved, as there are more workers than material.

The object of the Sale of Work is to extinguish the debit balance of £14 odd and provide for Sunday School Prize Fund and the erection of a bell, if possible, and a credit balance at the end of the year. Some may think this is looking long way ahead. We have to here. We can only make hay when the sun shines. Experience has taught us that both the offertories and subscriptions fall off as soon as the wet season commences.

We would indeed be grateful to any kind Southern readers who would help us by subscribing towards a bell. One is badly needed at St. Peter's Church of England has been established here for the last 18 years, and has not yet got a bell. It is a reproach, and we ask our friends to help us lift the reproach from off our shoulders.

The Rev. Mr. Wilkinson will leave here on the 29th July on a visit to Thursday Island in compliance with the Bishop's desire. Mr. Wilkinson is to be ordained priest, and will return to Normanton on the 19th August. During our Rector's absence Rev. Mr. Hudson of Croydon, will arrange for services to be carried on either by himself or Rev. Mr. Lewis. As it is we have a monthly visit from Mr. Hudson, which is much appreciated, facilitating as it does, the Celebration of Holy Communion regularly.

Proceedings

OF THE SECOND CONFERENCE OF THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA.

FIRST DAY—Tuesday, 26th July, 1904.

After Special Service in the Cathedral, when the sermon by the Rev. W. Hudson, M.A., was read by Rev. D. M. Jones, M.A., the Conference met in the Parish Institute, Thursday Island, at 9 p.m.

The Lord Bishop of the Diocese presided, and opened the proceedings with prayer.

1. The Rev. E. Taffs was elected Clerical Secretary by the Conference, and Mr. H. Ayscough was appointed Lay Secretary by the President.

2. The President extended a very hearty welcome to Dr. Salter, and invited him to a seat and voice in the Conference.

3. The Roll of Members was read as follows :
Rev. J. B. Drabble, A.K.C.; Mr. C. Armbrust, representing Croydon.

Rev. H. P. Gocher, M.A.; Mr. C. H. Hindmarsh, representing Thursday Island.

Rev. W. Hudson, M.A.; Mr. H. G. Hodder, representing Palmerston.

Rev. D. M. Jones, M.A.; Mr. C. D. O'Brien, representing Normanton.

Rev. F. M. T. Palgrave, M.A.

Rev. G. H. Smith; Mr. B. H. Ogilvie, representing Cooktown.

Rev. E. Taffs; Mr. A. Sullivan, representing Port Douglas.

Rev. W. Wilkinson.

Rev. S. Lewis.

The President said that Revs. H. P. Gocher, W. Hudson and S. Lewis had received leave of absence from him on account of the long absence from their parishes which would have been entailed.

4 The President then said: Before I begin my address I will ask you all to rise to your feet in honour of the memory of the oldest and most respected member of our Conference, whose name is still on our printed programme, and whose body we laid to rest only two days ago. The Hon. John Douglas, C.M.G., was a man in whose heart dwelt truth and justice, religion and charity. He was no mere name of a Christian, but a devout and regular communicant, one who lived by what he believed, and whose belief was his life.

He was one of the prime movers in the establishment of the Church here, and the erection of the Cathedral, the foundation stone of which he laid in 1893. In 1896 he represented the Diocese of North Queensland in the General Synod, where I remember well the attention which his noble head attracted. He was present at all the meetings of our first Conference, and was deeply interested in this gathering, at which he hoped to the last to be present. God has willed otherwise, and while we grieve that we have no longer his stately presence and experienced counsel, we rejoice in a noble life brought to a fitting and worthy close, full of days and honour.

A formal motion will be submitted later on, but I felt I could not begin without a brief reference to him who has been so lately taken from us that we cannot yet realise our loss.

5. When the members had resumed their seats, the President delivered his Inaugural Address, as follows:—

WELCOME.

Welcome, my brothers of the clergy and of the laity, to this, our second Diocesan Conference. Welcome, especially those of you who have travelled many hundreds of miles from your lonely parishes to meet your brethren once more, and to consult for the common good.

I bid you welcome in the name of the Holy Catholic Church, of which we form, if a very small, yet an integral part, and in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, its head, from Whom we have received grace and apostleship for obedience to the faith. More than two years have elapsed since our first formal gathering showed our desire to work on the ancient lines of full consultation between bishop, priests and people, so far as the difficulties of circumstances and the checks of distances will allow. These years have been years of anxiety and change, but thanks to the gracious favour of God we meet to-day with increased numbers of clergy, and with a record from every parish of faithful and strenuous work.

PAROCHIAL PROGRESS.

The people of Thursday Island have, under the direction of the Rev. W. P. Glover, the late vicar, shown an enthusiasm worthy of the Cathedral parish. The South Sea Home has been further enlarged, the whole church property surrounded with a picket fence, a handsome and most useful Parish Institute erected, and a new vicarage built. Not less energy and determination has been shown by the much smaller parish of Palmerston, Port Darwin, where a substantial and very cool stone church has been erected, free of debt, and a Parish Room subsequently added. Rev. H. P. Gocher has been most successful in obtaining many beautiful gifts for the interior of the church. At Croydon, acetylene gas has been installed in the church, the rectory repaired, and a fence and fine new bell erected. There still remains on this parish an old-standing debt on the church, incurred in the days of prosperity, some ten years ago, and a heavy burden in these days of adversity. At Cooktown the rectory has been entirely repaired, and the church is now being restored, the necessary funds being in hand. In spite of very bad times, this parish is displaying great energy and zeal. At Port Douglas St. Andrew's Church, the oldest, we believe, in the diocese, has been thoroughly restored, and a new belfry erected, while a new rectory has been built at Mosman. These necessary works are largely due to the energy of Rev. T. K. Pitt, M.A., the late rector. At Normanton the rectory has been considerably enlarged, and now affords proper accommodation for the rector of the parish. The parish has now in hand some necessary improvements to the church. The erection of these buildings, costing in all £2195 in a little over two years, is a gratifying sign of the real progress of the diocese.

CLERGY LEAVING.

Since last Conference we have to deplore the loss, through their own ill-health, or that of their wives, of four of our clergy, who could ill be spared. Rev. W. P. Glover did most excellent work at Thursday Island, both as parish priest and diocesan secretary. His loss is most keenly felt. I desire to testify to my deep sense of his earnestness and loyalty to the diocese. Rev. W. H. Curtis, the only priest whom I found remaining in the diocese at my consecration, has left us for the diocese of Goulburn. We all sympathise with him in the terrible blow he has recently sustained in the death of Mrs. Curtis. Rev. T. K. Pitt, M.A., has done excellent work at Port Douglas, and we had hoped he would have been with us to-day, but the health of Mrs. Pitt decided him to accept a post in Melbourne. Rev. H. P. Gocher, M.A., is also, I regret to say, leaving the diocese for the South, owing to Mrs. Gocher's health. Both Mr. and Mrs. Gocher have done excellent work for the church at Port Darwin.

NEW CLERGY.

We have lost four clergy, but we are happily able to welcome to the diocese no less than eight since our last Conference. (Rev. W. Hudson, M.A., has faced with courage the difficulties of the work at Normanton and Croydon. I especially regret his inability to be with us to-day. Rev. W. M. Wilkinson was ordained deacon last year, and having happily recovered from the dangerous illness brought on by his over-zealous devotion to duty, is now working at Normanton. He will be ordained priest on Sunday week. Rev. D. M. Jones, M.A., who has done very good work as tutor of Bishop's College, was in April last licensed also as assistant curate of Thursday Island. Rev. S. Lewis, the first fruits of Bishop's College, has been licensed as assistant curate of Croydon. Rev. E. Taffs, whom we warmly welcome on his arrival amongst us, has succeeded Rev. T. K. Pitt, M.A., as rector of Port Douglas and Mosman, and is facing with energy and courage a small house and a small income. He and Mrs. Taffs have already commended themselves to the warm-hearted people of that parish. Rev. J. B. Drabble, A.K.C., whom we also welcome for the first time to-day, and whom I personally also welcome as an old curate of my own at Hughenden, brings to us from Walkerston a record of singularly patient and successful work. He succeeds H. P. Gocher, M.A., as rector of Palmerston. Rev. J. Jones, B.A., the new vicar of Thursday Island and sub-dean of the Cathedral, will, I regret to say, not arrive in time for this Conference. He brings with him from the old country a high reputation, and we wish him a long continuance amongst us. Rev. F. M. T. Palgrave, M.A., has come out from England to volunteer for aboriginal work. He has had large experience among the Indians in the far frozen north-west of Canada. We can promise him a welcome as warm as our climate.

FINANCE.

You will find on the table an account of diocesan receipts and expenditure for the last two years—1902 and 1903—taken from the audited statements which are annually published in the Carpentarian, and which will be formally presented to the Conference for adoption. A summary of parochial finances is also to be found in the pages of the same journal. With regard to the former you will see that, exclusive of Lord Beauchamp's subscription to the college, we have received £195 from England in grants and £244 5s. 11d. in subscriptions, and £413 11s. 3d. from friends of the diocese in Australia, while £72 19s. 3d. has been raised in the diocese for diocesan purposes. With regard to expenditure I have spoken below of the college expenses, amounting to £674 9s. 5d. Grants to parishes amount to £227 18s., and travelling expenses of the clergy, an absolutely necessary and unavoidable item, to £129 5s. 3d. We have expended £173 4s. on missionary work, and printing and postages with telegrams, have cost £93 19s. 10d., and £62 0s. 5d. respectively. I shall welcome any suggestions or criticisms as to the disposal of diocesan funds or any plans for the attainment of greater efficiency and economy.

It will be seen that with the exception of the small amount raised by fees and parochia assessment, we have absolutely no assured income wherewith to meet our diocesan expenditure of £750 a year. That we have been able to carry on the work of the diocese for four years without debt or overdraft is due to the generous help that we have received, both from England and Australia. I desire here to acknowledge most gratefully the constant and ready help that I have received in all financial matters from Mr. C. H. Hindmarsh, our present hon. diocesan secretary. He has spared no time or trouble to keep everything in perfect order. We are all deeply indebted to him.

With regard to parochial finance a sum of £4,525 has been raised by the parishes themselves between Easter, 1902, and Easter, 1904, for church ministrations and church building. When we find from the returns that the portion of the church population, which is reached by the Church's ministrations, amounts to only 2650, we cannot but feel that this result is satisfactory. The item I must regret in parochial finance is the most inadequate amount contributed by the parishes for missionary work. We are ourselves a missionary diocese, and have received such generous help that we ought to be the first to give of and even beyond our ability to others.

BISHOP'S COLLEGE.

Bishop's College has now entered on the fourth year of its work, and has begun to produce results from its three years' course of training. One student, Mr. S. Lewis, has been already ordained, and I hope to ordain two more, Messrs. Smith and Hall, in the course of this year. They are both entering for the Th.L. examination in October. I have to acknowledge great assistance rendered by Rev. D. M. Jones, M.A., the tutor of the College, who has thrown his whole heart into his work. That we are able to continue our work at all is owing to the generosity of Lord Beauchamp, who has extended for another three years his munificent subscription of £150 a year. I have also to acknowledge the generous help received from the S.P.C.K. and from His Grace the Archbishop of Sydney. The expenses of the college have amounted to £337 per annum, representing the cost of the board of the students, tutor, and lady superintendent, the salary of the tutor, and the cost of maintenance of the building. Subscriptions specially given for the college amount on the average to £242 per annum, and the balance of £95 has been supplied from diocesan funds.

USE OF CATHEDRAL.

Only one difficulty has disturbed the quiet of diocesan life and work, namely, the claim made on behalf of certain persons that ministers of religion who were not members of the Church of England should be invited to preach in the Cathedral as a matter of right, consequent on a certain protest made at the consecration of the Cathedral, and the reception accorded to it. I could not see my way to admit the claim thus made, but as the whole case has been fully reported in the Carpentarian, our diocesan paper, I need not again give my reasons. I have to thank my brethren of the episcopal bench for their readily afforded advice and assistance in a matter of extreme difficulty and delicacy. I cannot hope that the decision will please everyone; it would probably be worth very little if it did. But I trust that those who are conscientiously compelled to differ will recognise that the same rights of conscience, which they justly claim, must be conceded also to others, and acquit me of any desire to be either arbitrary or unjust.

VISIT OF PRIMATE.

We have been much cheered this year by a visit from His Grace the Primate. It is needless to say that he met with a most loyal welcome. It was no small thing for him, amid the multiplicity of his engagements, to spare the extra fortnight which was required to extend his visitations from Townsville to Thursday Island. We are so far away from the centre, and so utterly out of the current of Church life and thought, that we value even more than others can do such signs of interest and consideration on the part of those who hold prominent positions in our Church. Eight years had elapsed since the date of the Primate's first visit to enquire into the possibility of founding a new See, and nearly four years since the See itself had become an accomplished fact.

DIOCESAN COUNCIL.

Since the last Conference the Diocesan Council, consisting of Messrs. Bennett, Hodder, Hindmarsh, and Hon. John Douglas, C.M.G., has held eight meetings, and has given much valuable assistance in the work of the diocese. We greatly miss the presence of Mr. G. Bennett, whose wise and sober judgment was always at the service of either parish or diocese. In accordance with the wish expressed by the last Conference that all lands and property should be held by the Bishop under a deed of trust until such time as a Diocesan Synod should be formed, the Diocesan Council have requested the Council of the diocese of North Queensland to transfer to the bishop all lands now held by them in trust for the diocese of Carpentaria. I find that there are some legal difficulties in the way of this being done at once; but the Bishop of North Queensland and his Chancellor have promised to introduce a short explanatory canon at the ensuing session of the North Queensland Synod with a view of enabling the transfer to be made.

DIOCESAN NOMENCLATURE.

It will be remembered that when the See of North Queensland was last vacant, I protested against the use of the name "North Queensland" in the consecration of the new bishop, on the ground that the diocese of Carpentaria was geographically the North of Queensland; and that the use of the name "North Queensland" for the Southern diocese led, after the division of the dioceses, to considerable confusion and misunderstanding. After consultation with the Bishop-elect, I withdrew my protest, on the mutual understanding that the question was to be referred to the General Synod, which meets next year. Lapse of time has but strengthened my conviction of the present unsuitability of the name "North Queensland," and multiplied the instances of confusion that have arisen. I propose to submit the matter to General Synod, in accordance with the agreement to which I have referred.

BISHOP'S VISITATIONS.

Since the last Conference, two years and four months ago, I have visited Cooktown 6 times, Normanton and Croydon 5 times, Port Douglas 4 times, Georgetown 3 times, Palmerston and Maytown twice, and Burketown once. I have spent ten months in all at Thursday Island, during five months of which I was in charge of the parish, in the absence of any priest in charge. I have also made two expeditions to the Mitchell River, in connection with the starting of the Aboriginal Mission, and I spent three months in making known the needs of the diocese in the South. This last I feel to be the least satisfactory, as it is the most unwelcome part of my duties; but, while the diocese remains without endowment for her missionary work, and is as poor and scattered as it is at present, I do not see how this loss of time from strictly pastoral work can from time to time be avoided. I must acknowledge most gratefully the extreme kindness that I have invariably encountered, and the generous help that we have received from Southern dioceses, and also the readiness of Southern bishops to give me every facility in visiting their dioceses.

BISHOP OF BRISBANE.

Queensland has lost, since our last Conference, the bishop of its principal See. The late Bishop of Brisbane was a man of singular devotion to duty, and an ecclesiastical statesman, the results of whose foresight and sagacity will be evident in probably the whole of the after history of the Australian Church. His gallant fight with death, that he might breathe his last in his own city, and near the site of the Cathedral, to found which he practically gave his life, roused admiring sympathy even in those who were not always at one with him in other matters. His work was strenuous, and will not easily die.

To the new bishop we extend a warm welcome. He brings a high record with him for scholarship, energy, and missionary zeal; and, should he, as we expect, become our Metropolitan, we shall hope that the example of the Primate will bring him at no distant date to visit the most distant of his suffragan sees.

The new Bishopric of Bunbury has been worthily filled by the appointment of one who is no novice in ecclesiastical government, and is deservedly beloved by those who know him.

TOWNSVILLE CATHEDRAL.

We congratulate the diocese of North Queensland on the restoration of the Cathedral, after the demolition of the roof by the late cyclone. I felt that you would wish me to represent you on the occasion of the re-opening by the Primate. We congratulate the diocese also on the restoration of its bishop to health and work. During his stay in England, Bishop Frodsham was not unmindful of our needs, as well as of those of his own diocese, and we owe him thanks for his efforts on our behalf. The diocese has indeed passed through a time of tribulation, but we trust that better times are at last in store for it.

MITCHELL RIVER MISSION.

At our last Conference I expressed a hope that a mission to the Aborigines might soon be started within the diocese. Unexpected delays have occurred, but the matter is now fairly under way. In June, 1902, I visited the Mitchell River, in conjunction with Rev. E. J. Gribble, and selected a site for a mission station near the mouth of that river. At my request, the Government proclaimed an aboriginal reserve of about 700 square miles for the purposes of the proposed mission, but the boundaries assigned were not satisfactory, and two large occupation licenses in the midst of the proposed reserve rendered it almost useless. Amended boundaries were suggested and agreed to by the Government, but the licenses took twelve months to determine, and notice of the proclamation of the final boundaries of the reserve did not reach me until some six weeks ago. Until this important matter was settled, we felt that it would be unwise to take any definite steps. In August, 1903, however, I visited the reserve, and came in contact with the natives, a fine, well-made race, almost untouched by white influence, and free from drink, opium, and disease. Mr. Gribble is organising a party, and hopes to start shortly to commence the work. The party will probably withdraw for the first wet season, after fixing the permanent site for the station, and possibly erecting

THE LATE HON. JOHN DOUGLAS, C.M.G.

The funeral of the late Hon John Douglas took place in the Quetta Memorial Cathedral on Sunday afternoon, July 24th. Representatives of the Freemasons, Oddfellows and all municipal and other local bodies were present in full force. The body was placed on a gun-carriage and escorted by the military forces. The Bishop, clergy and choir walked in front of the gun-carriage. After the committal to the grave, Dr. Wassel read the masonic service, volleys were fired by a party of the garrison troops, and the last call played by the trumpeters. We give some extracts from the Bishop's address at the funeral:—

"The outward appearance bore witness to the strong, yet tender soul within. The massive form and grand leonine head, with its beautiful snow-white hair, would have drawn attention in any assembly in the world; but to know the man was to know one from whom goodness and charity shone forth. Never since I have known him did I hear him utter a word of unkindness or a complaint against any living soul. You who are present know how large his heart was, not merely towards his own people, but towards all the various peoples and nationalities on this and the surrounding islands. I know how the people of each little island in the Straits looked forward to his coming, how they poured out all their troubles into his sympathising ear and accepted his judgment and direction in all their most intimate affairs. It is probable that his end was hastened by his journeys round in rough weather, in his anxiety not to miss his regular visits to those under his charge.

"Like most strong characters, he had a firm and unwavering religious faith. He took the keenest interest in this Cathedral, and was a regular communicant at the early celebration even when he could with difficulty walk to service. He knelt at the altar last, just a fortnight ago to-day, and he told me that he had made it the final act of communion with, and resignation into, the hands of God. On the last occasion that I saw him before he became unconscious, I read him that wonderful description of the lot of the righteous in the Book of Wisdom. "Yes," he said, "those men of old felt as we feel, struggled as we struggle, and believed as we believe." Then a few hours later he himself has passed without a struggle or a sigh into the company of those who 'are at peace.'

"He was full of days. He himself felt that he had lived his life and done his work to the end. 'I am beginning to feel the infirmities of age,' he said. 'I cannot do my work as I would. If it is God's will I am well content now to leave it in his hands. If I recover I shall try to work on, but if not I am content.' The last few days, surrounded by family and friends, he seemed especially bright and cheerful, and then God took him.

"He was full of honour. His name will not easily die in Thursday Island. The respect in which he was held was absolutely universal.

This assembly shows it. The State does him honour in a military funeral. The members of that ancient and honourable craft, of which he was such a distinguished member, are sharing in his obsequies, every public body on the island is represented in full numbers, and last, but not least, the people whom he loved, and who loved him, are here, men of all colours and nations, to do him honour. We grieve, but not for him, he has died as he wished to die, at work and in full possession of mind, and before his natural strength was much abated. We believe that he has passed from earthly work to higher and fuller work with God, work without pain or weariness, and therefore full of satisfaction and rest. We are about to lay his body in the beautiful spot on the top of the hill overlooking the busy town where he worked for nearly twenty years and looking over it to the blue water channels, and the everchanging play of light and shade on the islands he loved. But he will not be there, he is not dead, but alive in the fuller and yet more beautiful life of God.

"Let me end with some words which he read a little while ago with deep pleasure from old Richard Baxter: 'Rest! how sweet the sound! it is melody to my ears; it lies as a reviving cordial to my heart, and from thence sends forth lively spirits which beat through all the pulses of my soul! Rest! not as the stone that rests on the ground, nor as the flesh that shall rest in the grave, nor such a rest as the carnal world desires—O blessed rest! when we rest not day and night saying "Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty"—when we shall rest from sin but not from worship, from suffering and sorrow, but not from joy.'

DIOCESAN NOTES.

The second Conference of the clergy and laity of the diocese was a great success. It was a very real advance on its predecessor in numbers, concentration, and quiet despatch of business; the quiet day was also most helpful to the clergy and students. We wish that we could meet more often, but that is, alas, impossible, owing to the running of the boats, and the great distances. As it was, none of the Gulf clergy were able to be present.

The church was crowded, and all the services were most hearty. Great credit is due to the hon. organist of the Cathedral, Mr. G. H. Hodder, for his unflinching zeal on behalf of the musical services.

The ordination of the Rev. W. M. Wilkinson to the priesthood was a most impressive and solemnising service. It was the first ordination that has been held in the Cathedral, and the congregation entered into it reverently and intelligently. Of Mr. Wilkinson's proved earnestness and devotion there is no need to write.

In consequence of recent changes, we give the names and addresses of the present clergy of the diocese:—

Rev. J. B. Drabble, A.K.C., Palmerston, N.T.

Rev. W. Hudson, M.A., Rectory, Croydon.

Rev. J. Jones, B.A. (sub-dean), Vicarage, Thursday Island.

Rev. D. M. Jones, M.A., Bishop's College, Thursday Island.

Rev. S. Lewis, Rectory, Croydon.

Rev. F. M. T. Palgrave, M.A., Aboriginal Mission.

Rev. G. H. Smith, Rectory, Cooktown.
Rev. E. Taffs, Rectory, Mosman.
Rev. W. M. Wilkinson, Rectory, Northampton.

From a return presented to the Conference we learn that the Church lands in the diocese are valued at £2150, and carry buildings valued at £7910, which are insured for £4800. The deeds are vested in almost all cases either in the Synod of the Diocese of North Queensland or in the Bishop of Carpentaria under Deeds Trust.

Notes.

The Archbishop of Canterbury has accepted the invitation to attend the general Convention of the Church in the United States. It will be the first occasion on which an Archbishop of Canterbury has crossed the Atlantic.

The foundation stone of the Liverpool Cathedral was laid by the King, who was accompanied by the Queen, on July 19th. There was an enormous attendance.

Two Japanese officers, Colonel Ukoko and Captain Otti, were caught attempting to blow up a bridge, were court-martialled, and sentenced to be hanged as spies. General Kouro patkin commuted the sentence to shooting. The colonel, who was a Christian, received the Holy Communion from a Russian priest, and made a will, leaving 1,000 roubles to the Russian Red Cross work. It is added that both officers died like heroes.

The Bishop of Massachusetts, Dr. Lawrence, in a word to the laity, said:—"When you are considering your rector's salary, you have no right to give that man a man's salary, and at the same time employ his wife in the work. Give her the freedom of any Christian woman to do her part in the parish, and do not demand of her, because she is the rector's wife, that she shall be called upon to do the work which the rector has not time to do. Raise the rector's salary, if you will, and let them get servants to do the house work, and then turn in the wife to help her husband."

The Townsville Cathedral was reopened on Tuesday, 7th June. There was a Choral Eucharist. The Bishop celebrated, and the Primate and the Bishop of Carpentaria were present. The Bishop said appropriate prayers, including one for contributors throughout the world. Judge Chubb, Chancellor of the Diocese, read the deed of restoration. Many communicants were present. At the evening thanksgiving service the Primate preached an impressive sermon, after which there was a solemn Te Deum.

The Consecration of the Very Rev. Goldsmith, Dean of Perth, as the first Bishop of Bunbury, took place on Sunday, 17th July in St. George's Cathedral, Perth. The Bishop of Newcastle was chief Consecrator, assisted by the Bishop of Perth and Bishop Stretch.

The Bishop-elect of Brisbane, the Rev. S. Clair G. A. Donaldson, M.A., is a son of S. A. Donaldson, the first Premier of New South Wales, under responsible Government. Mr. L. S. Donaldson, a well-known Police Magistrate in New South Wales, is a brother of the Bishop-elect.

one or two buildings. One of the greatest hopes of the mission becoming self-supporting and industrially useful lies in the formation of a herd of cattle, and we trust that we may receive some gifts for this purpose. The mission will be worked in connection with the A.B.M., this diocese contributing, if possible, one third of the cost. Even this will be a heavy burden on such a small and poor diocese, but I feel that it is an imperative duty to do all that we can for the unfortunate aborigines who have suffered so many wrongs, and who are capable, as has been shown at Yarrabah, of remarkable advance in industry and civilisation, and are so susceptible to the influences of religion, when kept away from the uninspiring influence of the merely nominal white Christian.

SOUTH SEA ISLANDERS.

Mission work among the Japanese and South Sea Islanders has gone on steadily. The work among the latter has received a severe check at Thursday Island from the enforcement of regulations forbidding their employment except at sea, and limiting the extent of leave on shore. This has necessarily very largely diminished the attendance at the South Sea Home and at the classes. A useful work is, however, still being done, though, owing to the Commonwealth legislation against the Islanders, it cannot look forward to permanence. A good work is also being done among the South Sea Islanders at Port Douglas and Mosman, where they are still employed in the sugar industry, though in necessarily diminishing numbers. I must again record my protest in this matter against the selfish injustice of the Commonwealth legislation, which takes no account of long residence in Australia, and forbids men who have been fifteen and twenty years in Queensland to earn their bread, intending shortly to deport them to islands where, in some cases, even their lives will be in danger, and in nearly all, they will have to give up what they have learned and gained.

DRINK.

I turn now to some of the difficulties and dangers by which we are confronted both as a people and Church. In the first place, I am more and more impressed with the subtle dangers of drink in Northern Queensland.

I am no fanatic, and I quite recognise the awfulness, and in some cases no doubt the usefulness, of a moderate use of alcoholic liquors under ordinary conditions, but I have had twenty years' experience of the North; I have seen relay after relay of young men come up from the South with a profound contempt for drunkenness, and sink into drunkards; I have seen steady, well-intentioned middle-aged men gradually become more and more habituated to the use of spirits until they become steady drinkers; I have seen so many homes desolated, so many lives end in disaster and death, so many broken-hearted wives and neglected children, that I cannot but record my belief that in this tropical climate all men are better without any stimulants at all, and that for the majority of men it is a question of life and death. In tropical weather there is constantly a feeling of exhaustion which does not revail in cooler climates. If left alone this means little more than a mere feeling, and does not interfere seriously with work, but to attempt to remove it by stimulants is a hopeless task, and compassed with the risks that spring from the law of habit, and tending towards but one result. If I am right in what I have said there surely rests a very grave responsibility on both the clergy and the laity in the way of example as well as precept. The evil has attained gigantic proportions, and it is a grave question whether it does not need heroic remedies.

THE BIRTHRATE OF AUSTRALIA.

A lurid light has been thrown on the morals of Australia by the report of the New South Wales Commission on the decline of the birthrate. When some years ago the late Bishop of Ballarat made some remarks on Australian morality, he was met with an outburst of angry denial. Now a body of doctors and other laymen appointed by parliament say far worse things, and no one attempts to deny their truth. The most appalling feature of the whole thing is the callous insensibility of many otherwise good and right-thinking people. The commissioners say—"A circumstance that causes grave misgivings as to the future is that so many women do not realise the wrong involved in the practices of prevention and abortion. They converse with one another upon these subjects apparently without shame and freely approach doctors and chemists to procure the means to gratify their desires."

The commissioners conclude their report—"We find that the practices and habits which the doctrines of limitation inculcate tend to undermine the morality of the people, to loosen the bonds of religion, and to obliterate the influence of those higher sentiments and sanctions for conduct with which the development of high national character has ever been associated. We do not hesitate to declare that the doctrines which advocate and justify the deliberate restriction of child-bearing in marriage are vicious. With the decay of individual and social morality, we must expect the loss of all those qualities which have made the British race predominant. In whatever way the waning birthrate is viewed, whether in its effect on the health, character, or social worth of individuals; on the value of the family as the basis of national life, on the quality and dignity of civil life, on the character of the people, on their social, moral, and economic progress, on their national aims and aspirations, or on their capacity to survive in the rivalry of nations, and whether it is viewed in the light of history or of science, it is seen as a grave disorder sapping the vitals of a new people, dispelling its hopes, blighting its prospects, and threatening its continuance." The commissioners go on to say that unless there is a great change Australia will be lost to our race, and that the blame will rest on the selfishness and lust of the present generation.

The Church has kept silence on this subject quite long enough. While we have feared to accentuate the evil by speaking, the poison has been spreading, and thousands of otherwise decent and right-thinking men and women have been drifting into deadly sin. Let us, at least, have no mistake about the position of the Church in the future. Let those who sin at least know that they are committing a sin which is condemned by science as ruinous to health, condemned by those who have gravely considered its effects as absolutely destructive of national life and character, and condemned by the Church as a deadly sin against God, and an act of selfishness and self-degradation.

I feel that this matter is the most serious danger that has ever confronted Australia either from a national or a religious point of view, and I feel it my duty as a Christian bishop to express my feeling without reserve.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION.

The New South Wales Commissioners appeal to the ministers of religion to check the awful evils which forms the subject of their report. How can they do this unless the people have some foundation of religious knowledge on which to base the precepts of morality, and how can the people have this basis if they are forbidden to learn it as children at school? The religious education of our children is a matter that is becoming daily more pressing, as the older generation, who have for the most part received some religious training, is passing away, and a new generation growing up largely without religious knowledge of any sort or kind. The distressing thing is that it is not the wish of the parents that the children should be deprived of all religious training. They have already expressed, by an enormous majority, their desire that the New South Wales system should be adopted in the Queensland State Schools; but having expressed their opinion, they do not care sufficiently about the matter to see that their wishes are carried out; and so far the politicians have been able, as is often the case, to defeat the feebly expressed will of the people. It is the Church's duty to see that no opportunity is lost of reiterating again and again the peril in which the State stands through its neglect of the most fundamental element in all education worthy of the name, and urging the parents to make their already expressed wish on religious instruction effectively felt.

SUNDAY MORNING SERVICES.

While our churches are well filled at night, it is lamentable to observe the miserably small congregations that often assemble on Sunday mornings. It would seem as though our people imagined that the fourth Commandment had been re-written for them: "Remember Sunday evening to keep it holy." It is of course true that we have practically no leisured class, and that nearly all our people have homes and household work to attend to. Still, this does not explain or justify the general neglect of Sunday morning worship, for those who do come are often those who could with best show of reason make excuse. This neglect is the sadder, because it means that to a large number of our people the Holy Communion, the one service ordained by Christ himself, is a strange and unfamiliar thing. What can we do to remedy this state of things? We cannot transfer the Holy Communion to Sunday night, because, even if there were any sufficient authority or precedent for such a course, which there is not, it would, under the circumstances, be a practical abandonment of Sunday in favour of Sunday night, and an accommodation of the essentials of the Christian faith to the sloth and indifference of the people. The only cure seems to be to impress upon our people constantly, that which is so largely lacking in modern life, the true conception of worship, not as a mere passive reception of spiritual good, but as an active offering to God of ourselves, our souls and bodies, our time and substance, and personal service. I confess to attaching little value merely to crowded evening congregations, however exhilarating they may be. It is not so that the Kingdom of Christ is permanently enlarged and the spiritual life really deepened. Our real progress must be judged by the increase of regular communicants, and by the number of people who deny themselves in order to be present at the public worship of God while His day is fresh, and not when it has been already spent in other ways. I would say to my brethren of the clergy—"Take care of the morning congregations, and let the evening, if needs must, take care of themselves."

MODERN ARIANISM.

Certain attacks have lately been made by men who find it consistent with their consciences to retain a connection with the Church whose raison d'être they assail. The question is often asked, Why does the Church at home permit some of its members to violate its fundamental precepts. The answer is that effective action can rarely be taken to deprive them of their temporalities without invoking the secular arm, which is apt to prove a somewhat doubtful ally, and because it is usually poor policy to make martyrs of men who either court notoriety, or desire an opportunity to draw public attention to their ideas. Although in England the assailants of the Virgin Birth of Our Lord, and of His Resurrection have not been distinguished by weight of learning and authority, yet their attacks, old and often refuted as they are, sometimes carry weight with earnest people, who think that Christianity can be more easily commended to the world if it is deprived of its miraculous element. Personally it seems to me that these attacks would have come with a better grace from without than from within the Church. I do not believe that an expurgated Christianity will ever really touch men's consciences, or stimulate their wills. Those who make these attacks profess that in making them they are consulting the interests of the faith, and they are no doubt sincere in this belief, but the Arians and semi-Arians of the fourth century made the same profession, and deceived even Popes and Councils. They must be met now, as then, by an appeal to the Catholic belief in Jesus Christ as God, as well as man, miraculously born of a virgin mother and miraculously raised from the dead; things miraculous in one sense, but yet after all natural to one who was not as other men, and over whom death had no power. There must be no compromise about these fundamentals. If we were to surrender one or two articles of the Apostles' creed in order to commend Christianity, there would still be no peace, for the attack would simply be transferred to other articles, and most reasonably and justly so; for all stand or fall together, and the belief in the Resurrection is so fundamental in Christianity that apart from it there is little possibility of defence, while the belief in the Virgin Birth is contested just because men do not believe that Christ differed in any way from other men. We must remember that after all generations of Christians have looked back with reverence to St. Athanasius, because he once stood contra mundum alone in maintaining those truths which to-day are so lightly impugned by persons who do not seem to see that they are not lopping off overgrowth, but striking at the very roots of the tree.

WAR AND CHRISTIANITY.

Our attention has been fixed for the last six months upon the tremendous struggle between Russia and Japan in the far East. It is our duty to pray for the speedy restoration of peace, and that neither we nor other nations may be involved in a disastrous conflict which cannot but produce widespread misery and destruction. As Christians one of our deepest interests is to forecast what effect it will have on the future of Christianity in Japan, and therefore indirectly of China; we wish we could say that the conduct of the Christian nation had been such as to predispose the enemy towards Christianity, but unhappily such does not seem to have been always the case. Japan apparently has so far set by much the better example in humanity, courtesy and consideration for others. I am not of those who think that the victory of Japan would encourage its resistance to Christian influences. We must remember that Japan has already unconsciously imbibed an immense amount of Christian thought with Christian civilisation. Most of the English books most popular in Japan in the form of translations are steeped in Christian sentiment. We believe that a victory gained by the adoption of Christian civilisation would tend largely to pave the way for the formal adoption of the Christian faith. The practical lesson for us in this diocese is the need of strengthening our mission work among the large number of Japanese whom we have more or less opportunities of influencing.

SUBJECTS OF CONFERENCE.

With regard to the subjects to be discussed at our Conference, I have already referred to Religious Ministrations in State Schools, the Degradation of Marriage, and Church Attendance. Other subjects are a Clergy Superannuation Scheme, Our Relation to the Church at Home, the Permanent Diaconate—discussed at the request of the Canadian Church, a Diocesan Sunday School Course, Details of a Scheme for a Province of Queensland, the principle of which was accepted by the last Conference, Difficulties of Religious Belief, and the question of the Boundaries of Parishes. Various diocesan accounts and reports will be laid before you, and you will be asked to review and bring up to date the diocesan regulations adopted at the last Conference.

AD CLERUM.

In conclusion, may I address a few words to my brethren of the clergy. There are several who are not with us to-day: Rev. W. Hudson, M.A., and Rev. S. Lewis have been granted leave of absence because, owing to the running of the boats, attendance would mean over six weeks' absence from their parish, and the Rev. H. P. Gocher wishes to remain at his post until the expiration of his time in August. Rev. W. M. Wilkinson will be with us before we part. To those of you who are absent as well as to those of you who are present—yes, even more to those of you who have to be absent than to those who are happily able to be present—I wish to speak words of sympathy and encouragement. I know, as no one else can know, the isolation and loneliness of your lot; two years, some of you, without the sight of a brother priest; long months alone in the burden and heat of the long tropical days uncheered by the sight of any friend to whom you can, consistently with your duty, open your whole heart. I know the terrible strain on faith and hope of ministering to scanty congregations, standing at apparently forgotten and neglected altars, watching the crowds that, even on God's day, hasten past the house of God to some sport or amusement, wondering how men can be so deaf to the message of Christ, so blind to the beauty of His holiness. I know these things; I have felt and feel them with you. I know of the temptations which assail you to give up the apparently vain struggle; to go, in answer to the invitations which so often reach you, to some easier and more congenial work, under pleasanter conditions, in the South of Australia. I know how you have resisted these temptations and held on to your work because you believed that there lay the way of duty, if not of pleasure or of profit. I thank you for your constancy and I bid you be of good cheer. Your work is hard, harder than my own, which has at least the refreshment of constant change and variety of duty, but if hard it has in the reward which the Gospel promises to faithful unseen work and prayer "Your Father which seeth in secret, shall Himself reward you openly." I need not remind you that the word "openly" is an early interpolation; a striking instance of the incapacity of men to improve the sayings of our Lord. It is of the very essence of the promise that the reward should not necessarily be an open reward. If we aim at lower ideals and are content with the mere conventional performance of duty we shall have our reward, the reward at which we have aimed often liberally, usually openly, conceded. But if we are content to live and labour for Christ alone He will take us at our word, and though He seeth in secret, keep His reward for where and where it is best. Beware of hasty reward even spiritual rewards, as you would beware of hasty results; the greatest reward is the reward that is withheld in the silence and patience of God, the reward of those who can wait and be silent till they see of the glory of God and are satisfied.

6. Mr. C. H. Hindmarsh then laid upon the table the balance sheet and parochial statistics of the diocese for the past two years, together with the terrier of lands and property of the diocese.

7. A number of notices of motion were given.

8. The Bishop nominated Rev. John Jones B.A., as a clerical, and Mr. H. G. Hodder as lay member of the Diocesan Council. Rev. G. H. Smith and W. Hudson were elected clerical members, and Messrs. B. H. Ogilvie and C. H. Hindmarsh as lay members of the Diocesan Council.

9. Rev. D. M. Jones, M.A., proposed a vote of thanks to the President for his excellent Address. Carried with acclamation.

10. Rev. J. B. Drabble, A.K.C., moved, and Rev. G. H. Smith seconded: "That a vote of thanks be passed to the Rev. W. Hudson, M.A. for his excellent sermon, and that a wire be sent to him conveying the vote of thanks." Carried.

11. Hearty votes of thanks were also passed to S.P.G., S.P.C.K., C.C.C.S., Dr. Harris, Lord Beauchamp, Rev. E. Snodgrass, Rev. E. Beck, and Miss Paige for their contributions towards, and efforts on behalf of the maintenance of the work of the diocese.

12. The President expressed a desire that all lay members attend as much as possible, after which he pronounced "the Grace," and declared the Conference adjourned until 4 p.m. on Wednesday.

SECOND DAY.—Wednesday, July 27, 1904.

1. The President took the Chair and read Prayers at 4 p.m.

2. The Minutes were read and confirmed.

3. Two notices of motion were given.

4. Rev. D. M. Jones, M.A., moved, and Rev. E. Taffs seconded: "That in the opinion of the Conference it is desirable that the teaching of the Sunday Schools be unified, and that copies of the same books of graded lessons be used in every parish. Further, that a Diocesan Examination be held annually on the lessons learned." Discussion ensued. Carried.

5. Rev. G. H. Smith read an able paper on the subject of the "Degradation of Marriage." The subject was then discussed by all present, after which the Rev. G. H. Smith moved, and

Rev. F. Palgrave seconded: "That this Conference deploras the degradation of marriage in Australia, as illustrated by the recent report of the Royal Committee on the Decline of the birthrate in New South Wales." Carried.

6. Rev. G. H. Smith moved, and Rev. B. Drabble, A.K.C., seconded: "That an effort be made to raise the sum of £500 to erect a suitable monument over the remains of the late Rev. A. A. Maclaren in the Cooktown cemetery, provided that they be not removed, and that a committee, consisting of the Bishop of the Diocese, the Rev. G. H. Smith, and Mr. H. G. Hodder, be appointed to carry this project out, communicating first with the Bishop of New Guinea." Carried.

7. The "Diocesan Regulations" was discussed in committee and amended. The regulations, as amended, were presented to the conference and carried.

8. The Conference adjourned until 8 p.m.

9. On resuming, Rev. J. B. Drabble, A.K.C., moved, and Mr. H. G. Hodder seconded—"That this Conference accepts the Determinations of the General Synod of 1900." Carried.

10. Moved by Mr. C. H. Hindmarsh and seconded by Mr. H. G. Hodder, that the statements laid on the table the previous night be adopted. Carried.

11. Mr. C. H. Hindmarsh moved and Mr. Armbrust seconded—"That the Croydon Parish requested to transfer the titles of the Croydon Parish Lands to the Bishop of Carpentaria." Carried.

12. Rev. J. B. Drabble, A.K.C., read the draft proposals for the Federation of the Queensland Dioceses into an Ecclesiastical Province. These were discussed in committee, several alterations being agreed upon. Rev. J. B. Drabble moved and Mr. B. H. Ogilvie seconded, that the draft proposals, as amended, be adopted. Carried.

13. Moved by His Lordship the Bishop, and seconded by Mr. C. D. O'Brien, that it is desirable that a Clergy Superannuation Scheme should be adopted for this Diocese. Carried.

14. Mr. H. G. Hodder then gave notice of a question and motion to be put on the following day, after which the President pronounced "The Grace," and declared the Conference adjourned until 4 p.m. on Thursday.

THIRD DAY.—Thursday, July 28, 1904.

The Conference met at 4 p.m.

1. The President read Prayers, and the minutes of the previous day were read and confirmed.

2. The President answered Mr. H. G. Hodder's questions, of which notice was given the previous day, as follows:—"The question of the Administrator is answered by clause 16 of the Constitution, which provides that the Bishop shall appoint a commissary in writing, in the event of the Bishop's death or incapacity, the powers of a commissary shall be exercised by the person who shall be next in ecclesiastical rank or degree holding office in the Diocese, until the return of the Bishop, or the death of his successor." The Bishop thought that the appointment of the next Bishop would be in accordance with the Bishops of Australia.

3. Two notices of motion were then given.

4. Moved by Rev. E. Taffs, seconded by Rev. G. H. Smith: "That the Conference is doubtful of the possibility of a compulsory scheme, and that it is in favour of the Clergy Superannuation Fund, and the Widows and Orphans' Fund being kept separate. Carried.

5. Rev. G. H. Smith moved, and Rev. D. M. Jones seconded: "That the Revs. J. B. Drabble, A.K.C., and E. Taffs be appointed to draft a reply to the Archbishop upon the subject of our relations to the Church of England." Carried.

6. Moved by Rev. J. B. Drabble, seconded by Rev. E. Taffs: "That this Conference welcome the idea of a Missionary Congress, to be held in London, in July, 1908, and requests the President to forward to the secretaries the suggestions made by this Conference."

7. Rev. F. Palgrave, M.A., moved, and Rev. G. H. Smith seconded: "That the Church should ever be prepared to inquire into, and make a study of, the current difficulties of Christian Belief, with a view to grappling with them in every possible way." Carried.

8. The Conference adjourned until 8 p.m.

9. On resuming, the Rev. E. Taffs moved, and Mr. C. H. Hindmarsh seconded: "That the Clergy call a meeting of their Parochial Councils to ask the members to discuss the boundaries of the Parishes with a view to the said boundaries being defined by the Bishop in Council." Carried.

10. The Rev. E. Taffs moved, and Rev. G. Smith seconded, that the offertories at Extra-Parochial Services, conducted by the Bishop in Bush Districts, be devoted towards the Bishop's travelling expenses, and that the extra expenses incurred in collecting funds for the Diocese, in the south, be charged against the amount collected.

Mr. A. Sullivan proposed, and Rev. D. M. Jones, M.A., seconded, that the following words be added to the motion:—"Further, that seeing one-third of the Episcopal Income of £300 is spent in necessary travelling expenses, it is desirable that, as soon as possible, provision be made by the Diocese to relieve the Bishop of the burden." Carried.

The motion, as amended, was then put to the Conference and carried.

11. Moved by Mr. G. H. Hodder, seconded by Mr. A. Sullivan: "That this Conference desires to record its sense of the great loss sustained by the Diocese in the death of the Hon. John Douglas, C.M.G., and affirms the desirability of commemorating his long and valuable services to the Church by a permanent memorial in the Cathedral, the foundation stone of which he laid." Carried.

12. Moved by Rev. J. B. Drabble, seconded by Mr. C. Armbrust, that the Diocesan Council, at the proper time, invite two clergymen and two laymen to represent the Diocese at the General Synod of 1905.

Rev. G. H. Smith suggested that Mr. Weiss be asked to act.

Mr. A. Sullivan suggested the names of Dr. Salter and Mr. Bowden.

The motion was then put and carried.

13. Rev. G. H. Smith moved, and Mr. A. Sullivan seconded: "That this Conference calls attention to the Diocesan organ, The Carpenterian, and advises more strenuous efforts by the Clergy to increase its circulation and to prevent defaulting subscribers. Further, that the matter of enlargement and printing be referred to the Diocesan Council." Carried.

14. Moved by Rev. J. B. Drabble, seconded by Mr. H. G. Hodder: "That this Conference is not prepared to endorse the suggestion of the Canadian Church as to the perpetuation of a Permanent Diaconate." Carried.

15. Rev. G. H. Smith moved, and Mr. C. Armbrust seconded: "That this Conference considers it desirable that attention should be called to the tendency to neglect Church worship, especially that of Sunday morning." After considerable discussion the motion was carried.

16. Moved by Rev. D. M. Jones, M.A., seconded by Mr. A. Sullivan: "That this Conference pass a vote of thanks to the two secretaries of the Conference, and to the two newspapers of Thursday Island." Carried.

17. The President then addressed the Conference, as follows:—"Although our Conference has only lasted two days and a-half, we have got a very great deal of work into that time. Scarcely an unnecessary word has been uttered. Only the essential points have been dwelt on; mere talking has been conspicuously absent. I have to thank the lay members for their regular attendance, and their valuable contributions to the debates. I feel that the Conference has been of real value to the members and to the diocese. Perfect harmony has prevailed, and there have been but few differences of opinion on the matters submitted, and these have not prevented a unanimous decision on every question. I desire to express my thankfulness to Almighty God that the Conference has been so happily concluded, and to express a hope that it may gradually grow yet further in numbers and usefulness as the years go by."

The President then pronounced the "Benediction."

FRIDAY, July 29, 1904.

The day was spent in devotional exercises, conducted in the Cathedral by the Bishop.

Special services were held in the Cathedral on Sunday, July 31. The preacher in the morning was the Rev. J. B. Drabble, A.K.C., and in the evening Rev. G. H. Smith. The congregations were large, and the services most hearty.

On Monday the Bishop held a meeting of the clergy, at which it was decided to adopt the St. Paul's series of Sunday School lessons throughout the diocese, and to arrange for an annual examination. On the following day, the Revs. F. Palgrave, G. H. Smith, and E. Taffs left by "Maranoa" for their respective duties. Rev. J. B. Drabble, A.K.C., proceeded to Port Darwin by the next boat.

News of the Parishes.

THURSDAY ISLAND.

The new vicarage is now completed. The cost has been £400, of which about £40 has still to be raised. The building is in every respect an excellent one.

Universal grief was felt at the death of Hon. John Douglas, C.M.G. His funeral was a solemn and never-to-be-forgotten sight.

There was a full parade of troops on Sunday, July 17th. The Bishop preached a sermon on war which was published in the local press.

Mr. Saville Kent, F.L.S., delivered a most interesting lecture in the Parish Institute on behalf of the Vicarage Fund. It was illustrated by some most remarkable photographic slides, taken in colour photography by Mr. Kent.

The tremendous fall in the price of shell, from £300 to £75 a ton, has had a most serious effect on our only industry. The boats are now working at a dead loss, and the outlook is very gloomy.

The woodwork of the Cathedral has been overhauled and repainted. It was found necessary to replace some of the iron of the roof.

Services have recently been held at Goode Island by the students of Bishop's College, and at the Leper Station by the Bishop and Rev. D. M. Jones.

The lepers have built themselves a very neat little Church, which was opened on August 3rd by the Bishop.

Rev. J. Jones, B.A., the new Sub-dean and Vicar of the Cathedral Parish, accompanied by Mrs. Jones, arrived at Thursday Island by the "Yawata Maru" on Sept. 8th and received a warm welcome.

PALMERSTON.

Rev H. P. Gocher and Mrs Gocher paid a farewell visit up country on June 10th. The services were extremely well attended, and the full number of communicants present at the celebrations. A social gathering was held in the Pine Creek School, and addresses presented from the congregation and scholars.

A mural tablet has been erected in the Church in memory of Edward Borradaile, who, with Permain, was lost in the Northern Territory in 1874.

The Bishop and Rev J. B. Drabble, A.K.C., arrived by the "Eastern" on August 10th, and left on 12th for Pine Creek, where services were held on Sunday. On Wednesday, 17th, they visited Yam Creek, where the Bishop held a well attended service the following day. The Bishop also gave a lecture on the Torres Straits Islands, illustrated by lantern views.

On Sunday, August 21st, the Bishop preached in the morning on "Pain," and in the evening instituted Rev. J. B. Drabble, A.K.C., as Rector of Palmerston.

On Monday, August 22nd, a social gathering was held in the Town Hall, to bid good-bye to Rev H. P. Gocher, the late Rector, and Mrs. Gocher. The function was a great success. A purse of sovereigns was presented by Mr. Dashwood on behalf of the congregation. Mr. and Mrs. Gocher left by the "Empire" for Adelaide on August 29th.

COOKTOWN.

Mr Bligh, the representative of the White Cross League, visited Cooktown at the request of the Rector, and, with the approval of the Bishop, Mr Bligh gave some most earnest addresses to men, to boys, and to mothers, on the subject of purity of life, and much good has resulted from his visit, which he hopes to repeat next year.

A sum of £140 is in hand towards the repair of the Church, but the building is in such a bad state that it is feared that that sum will not be sufficient.

Influenza has been raging here, as elsewhere along the coast.

During the repair of the Church, services will be held in the (disused) Presbyterian Church, where the Bishop has sanctioned the Celebration of Holy Communion.

Rev G. H. Smith is communicating with the Bishop of New Guinea with regard to an effort to be made to erect a more suitable monument over Rev A. A. Maclaren's grave.

CROYDON.

The Rector and Rev. S. Lewis had a narrow escape from a serious accident while returning from Table Top on bicycles. Owing to the badness of the road the Rector fell over an incline, and Mr Lewis, who was following, fell over on the top of him; fortunately no serious injuries resulted.

Influenza has been bad here as elsewhere, and has interfered to some extent with Church work.

NORMANTON.

Rev W. M. Wilkinson was licensed as Rector of Normanton on August 7th. He returned from his visit to Thursday Island on August 19th. During his absence services were held by Rev. W. Hudson, M. A., and Rev. S. Lewis.

The recent Sale of Work on behalf of the Church Improvement Fund was a great success. Remarkable unanimity and enthusiasm prevailed.

THE EAST AND THE WEST.

We strongly commend to our readers this quarterly review of missions, published by S.P.G., at 1/- . The articles are all very thoughtful, and often deeply interesting. It can be ordered through the Diocesan Book Depot if desired, price 5/- per annum, post free. It deals not with missionary news, but with missionary problems.

MITCHELL RIVER MISSION.

The start of the expedition to the Mitchell has been delayed by Mr. Gribble having to bring 100 aboriginals from Fraser Island to Yarrabah. The present arrangement is that Revs. J. B. Gribble and F. M. T. Palgrave, with another white helper and several natives, should start overland on September 23rd to fix upon the permanent site of the station. The Bishop will probably visit the Mission in November.

Rev. John Jones, B.A., and Mrs. Jones arrived at Thursday Island by the "Yawatu Maru" on September 9th. The Bishop and Miss White gave a large "at home" on Tuesday, September 13th, to welcome them. Between two and three hundred guests were present, and the grounds were gaily lighted with Chinese lanterns. Mr. and Mrs. Jones have already won golden opinions. On Sunday morning, September 18th, Mr. Jones was instituted as Vicar of the parish and Sub-dean of the Cathedral.

Rev. J. B. Drabble has been suffering from a severe attack of fever since his arrival at Port Darwin.

NOTICE TO SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

Notice is hereby given that a written diocesan examination will be held for senior scholars in St. Paul's Manual of Christian Doctrine, Middle Grade, in October, 1905. Diocesan prizes will be given to the best scholars, and the names of those who pass will be published in the Carpentarian. Viva voce examinations will be held from time to time in the junior grade.

The Consecration of the new Bishop of Brisbane will take place in England on the F. of SS. Simon and Jude (October 28th).

The Bishop of London, preaching at Christ Church, Lancaster Gate, said that on that day (St. Philip's and St. James') he had been three years Bishop of London, and had received £30,000, while he had spent on the Diocese £35,000, the extra £5,000 being borrowed on his life insurance of £5,000. He said this to show the laity that he and his predecessors, who doubtless did the same, did their best to give not only all they were, but all they had, for the spread of the Gospel in London.

The Bishop of New Guinea writes:—"The year ending March 31st, 1904, has been one of great difficulty—a year of deaths, furloughs, retrenchments, and of holding on with tenacity to positions already won; yet it closes with practically no loss of territory, of numbers, of efficiency, and with one great advantage never previously attained in the 12 years' history of the Mission—freedom from financial liability. God works His purpose out in unlooked-for ways, and the dark days from June to December last were as fruitful, let it be believed, as the sunshine of debt removed which greeted the Christmas festival."

THE CHURCH MOUSE.

I am a Church Mouse, and as there was a wedding yesterday, and the spectators obliged to leave behind them a quantity of rice, I am sorry, without the distractions of business, to deprive your readers the benefit of my experiences. Although we have held a recognised, at times not unimportant, part in ecclesiastical history, yet I am not of those who hold that Churches were primarily built for mice. The other evening, while enjoying the air on the balcony, I heard a well-known amateur musician, who was addressing an audience of small boys at the other end of the town, say that Churches were built, "to enable the purse-proud myrmidons of an irritable hierarchy to tyrannise over the noble hearted and infallible freedom of an intelligent human being."

I have inscribed the sentence in my youngest son's copy book, but must confess there are some things too high for my understanding.

However, if churches were not built for mice, why of the users of the them are most thoughtful of our comfort and leave them to us enjoy for six days in the week. In my own particular church we are I regret to say dissatisfied by services every morning and evening addition to persons who come in by the open door during the day, and further there is so much needless sweeping, and cleaning, that it would be a self-respecting mouse to make a suggestion. A cousin of mine is more fortunate; he is happy enough to live in a Church where the floor is strewn with nuts and crumbs from children's pockets, while piles of old decorations are kept in the vestry, and the hangings never changed afford the most luxurious and comfortable retreats. I am disgusted with all this fuss and changing, and have some thoughts of writing a letter to the papers on "Ritualism in Queensland."

In the meantime it is my intention to favour you with some of my observations on the Congregation, made impartially from my hole in the wainscot, and corrected by subsequent comparison with those of the most intelligent members of my family.

In the first place I have noticed that a very large number of the congregation never come during the day, but always at night. My wife declares that this is because they are afraid of their complexions being too much noticed by day and prefer the shelter of artificial light but this I put down to mere feminine malice. My own theory is, that those who come at night only are so conscious of their own virtue that they fear to come twice a day, lest they should, through over goodness, incur the end of that blue-bottle, whose fall, I overheard a man say, was thus narrated in the "Spectator."

"A blue-bottle fly on a window pane was thus accosted by a little girl, 'Is oo a dood blue-bottle?' The silence of the fly was held to give consent. 'Would oo like to doe (go) to heaven?" Still no answer. "Then doe," and the naughty child ruthlessly inflicted euthanasia on the blue-bottle." Such a fear is the only reason I can conceive for the absence of so many from the services of the day. My wife points out in answer to my theory (wives have a way of always trying to prove their husbands wrong), that the faces of the Churchwardens are always longer when they contemplate the evening than the morning offertory, and that she has observed that most of those who come only in the evening search the corners of their pockets frantically for a three-penny bit when the plate approaches and, if they cannot find one, that they immediately become deeply interested in an architectural study of the tie beams of the roof. Hence she argues that those who only come at night, instead of being as I maintain, somewhat nervous saints, are really very often people who have comparatively little interest in the Church at all. In reply to which I am wont to point out, that these same persons may be overheard any night outside the Church after service, criticising the sermon in very scathing terms, and dissecting the character of the parson in a way that they would surely not employ were it not that they were certainly persons of superior sanctity, in spite of their apparent abstraction on the approach of the plate, a fact which I am not, I must confess, in a position to deny. I have also been a good deal puzzled by the attitude of the congregation during prayers. Some very few kneel reverently on their knees; others loll forward on their seats, or bury their head in their arms as if they were overpowered by sleep; others sprawl in strangely contorted attitudes; while others again simply seat themselves comfortably and look about them. In order to account for this prevalent absence of reverence in such a simple matter as kneeling to pray, I have been driven to the conclusion that gout and rheumatism must be extraordinarily prevalent, and that it is the force of these diseases which keeps people from doing their duty.

At the same time I am lost in wonder at the fortitude with which on other occasions they manage to conceal their pain. I hear for this reason many of them are accustomed to meet in a neighbouring hall, and there to jump about with one another for several hours of the evening in order to supple their limbs and strengthen their joints, by an exercise called dancing. One beautiful trait of character in the congregation always brings tears to my eyes. So desirous are the people to hear the sermon, and so much afraid are they of losing any part of it, that they may be frequently observed to take out their watches while the preacher is giving out the text, as a hint that they will take care that he does not curtail his address, or give them short measure. I have observed that this action never fails to arouse a glow of grateful enthusiasm in the preacher, and to encourage him greatly in his efforts. With this tribute of respect, space compels me to bring this letter to a close.

News of the Parishes.

THURSDAY ISLAND NOTES.

We hope the Cathedral enclosure has said a long farewell to the dengue fiend; at one juncture the whole of the inmates of Bishop's College, the Vicarage and the Melanesian Home, with the exception of the Bishop, were down with the fever. The Bishop kept things going by doing as much as possible of the work of everybody else; the only convenience of dengue is that no one has any desire to eat, but the Bishop resorted to "Force" with the patients. (There is still some of it left.)

The Christmas Festival was a very happy one despite the heat and the rain. Such a pretty and simple service was the children's carol service in the newly decorated church on the night of Xmas Eve. It brought very vividly to one's mind the truth that Christmas is the children's own festival. After the service the children trooped into the Parish Hall where the Xmas tree gorgeously lighted was bending under the weight of good gifts. May our Thursday Island "Father Christmas" long be spared to make bright the children's Christmas.

The Christmas Day services were well attended and the violinists helped the choir to make evensong very bright.

The picnic arranged by Miss Buchanan, and contributed to by several kind friends of the parish and by the boys themselves, took place on 27th December. The place selected was Prince of Wales Island—the outing proved a happy but eventful one; but to the "Islands" to be two or three days in returning from one day's picnic is nothing to cause surprise. Time and tide wait for no man, but man often waits for wind and tide.

The children's Sunday School prize-giving on on January 12th a very entertaining function. Mr. Hugh Milman, the Government Resident, distributed the prizes and spoke kindly to the children, and the children gave much pleasure by the performances.

TEMPERANCE WORK.—A meeting was held in the Parish Hall on February 10th to discuss the question of forming a Temperance Society in the Parish. The Bishop took the chair and it was pleasing to note the attendance of several influential men on the Island. The discussion was brisk and animated with regard to the question "who has the greater influence for good, the total abstainer or the moderate drinker?" It was decided to form a branch of the Church of England Temperance Society on the dual basis, that is, members must either pledge themselves to total abstinence or without being total abstainers they promise to help forward temperance work and the suppression of drunkenness by all means in their power. The concert by which we hoped to clear off the debt on the Vicarage building had to be postponed from January 27th to February 6th on account of the dengue epidemic. The latter date did not prove to be much more useful as so many of the performers as well as many would-have-been listeners were ill. Many thanks are due to those who helped by their service or contributions—the latter amounted to £17 which included a gift of £2 from the Bishop. The debt that now remains amounts to £24 8s. 7d.

PALMERSTON.

Since our Bishop's last visit in August Church work has been progressing quietly and we hope effectually. A meeting was held in the Vestry on October 25th when a Church Council was formed. Messrs Shelton, Waters, Marsh, Johns, Allen, Barnes, Cameron, Castle, and Pitt were nominated and elected, Mr. Allen undertaking to act as secretary. The white and green altar frontals arrived in October and were at once put to their proper uses. The ladies have now collected sufficient funds to provide a red one and a violet one to complete the set. The Dedication Festival was duly observed on November 5th with hearty services and tasteful decorations as was also Christmas Day. The Church Councillors and their friends have been very busy tidying up the churchyard, planting shrubs, and attending to the damage done to the roof by white ants. The Rector has had a severe attack of fever, which has been prevalent of late, and is yet scarcely quite recovered.

At Pine Creek the new organ has given great satisfaction. A font and set of altar linen have been presented by Mr. and Mrs. Schunke. Services have been held at Brock's Creek and Burrundie. Yam Creek smelter is at present closed down but to our great joy we hear that the company has been reconstructed and that work will soon be recommenced.

CHRIST CHURCH, COOKTOWN.

It is pleasant to be able to report a large increase in attendance at Holy Communion. Besides the few who are present at the weekly Sunday Services at 7.30 a.m., the attendance on the first Sunday in the month is higher than ever. On Xmas morning 90 communicated at the two celebrations. On New Year's Day there were about 40 communicants. On February 5th 50 partook of the Sacrament. The Sunday morning services show an improvement, but our people have not yet realised the importance of making the morning a special time for worship.

The attendance at the children's morning services continues to be very good. The Rev. S. Lewis has been appointed by the Bishop to assist the rector to work the parish and district. His work will begin from April 1st. The population of over 900 whites outside the town scattered over an immense area, surely warrants two men here to minister to all. It is beyond the power of one priest.

We were glad of the Bishop's hurried visit here for Epiphany and Sunday afterwards on his return north after being present at Bishop of Brisbane enthronement. We are fortunate in this diocese in having a chief pastor who can visit the various parishes of his charge regularly.

ST. DAVID'S, MOSMAN.

The late rector, the Rev. T. K. Pitt, who left for a holiday at the end of 1903, returned in April and officiated for about a month, finally leaving for the south on May 14th, 1904. The present rector the Rev. E. Taffs arrived on the 15th June and was instituted at Mosman by the Bishop on Sunday, 19th June. His Lordship preached at both the morning and evening services to large congregations. In the evening he preached a most helpful sermon upon the duties of both the clergyman and the congregation. On Monday he left for Mt. Molloy, where he held a service in the evening. He then proceeded to Georgetown and Croydon &c.

Owing to the gradual decay of Port Douglas and the drifting away of its population, it was considered advisable to close the separate Parochial Council of that place. This was accomplished in August, and from the 1st September the whole district has been managed by one Parochial Council—the Mosman Council.

Regular monthly services have been held at Mt. Molloy, where a piece of land has been given to the Church, and it is hoped a building may soon be erected.

Soon after the coming of the present Rector, a meeting of ladies took place in the Rectory, Mosman, to consider the subject of reducing the debt of £80.

The meeting decided to hold a sale of gift in November and formed themselves into a working party, holding fortnightly meetings, in order to carry out that object.

The Bazaar or Sale of Gifts took place in Love's Hall, Mosman, on November 11th and 12th. It was opened by Mr. Barnard, the Chairman of Directors of the Central Mill, and proved a great success. The net proceeds amounted to £60.

His Lordship the Bishop visited us on the 19th November and stayed ten days. On Sunday, 20th November, he preached at Mosman and on the next Sunday at Mosman in the morning, Mowbray in the afternoon, and Port Douglas in the evening. The service at Port Douglas was especially cheering. There was a good congregation, and the service was hearty and congregational.

On Monday the Bishop and the Rector started for Mt. Molloy. Divine Service was held at the Smelters, Mt. Molloy, on Tuesday evening. His Lordship left Port Douglas on Thursday, Dec. 1st. We were both cheered and encouraged by the Bishop's visit. During his stay he visited the Churchpeople in all parts of the district.

The South Sea Islanders' School is quietly doing good work. Besides receiving religious instruction, the "Boys" are taught reading and writing.

At the same time that the Ladies' Committee decided to hold a Bazaar, some thought that an effort should be made to get a good bell to replace the small one in use at St. David's, Mosman.

Subscriptions were received and in January a bell, which had been recommended by the Bishop, was bought at Smellie's, Brisbane. It is 21in. in diameter, weighs complete 186lbs and has a good sonorous "Church" tone. The Parochial Council is about to build a tower in which to place the bell, so before this paper is printed, it is hoped that the bell will be sounding aloud through the township and surrounding districts, reminding people of God and His House.

In January the Bishop forwarded to St. David's Church a beautifully embroidered altar frontal, which has been much admired.

GEORGETOWN DISTRICT.

There is but little to tell of the work in Georgetown district. Rev. F. C. Hall arrived here early in December, and the time since then has been well filled in travelling from place to place to meet the people and hold service where possible. There are five fair-sized places outside Georgetown, and several others where only a few people live. This entails a lot of riding in various directions, and sometimes see one or two families only. Still there is much encouragement. Many are glad to see a minister, though living so far away they have almost forgotten the claims of religion. Good Sunday Schools are faithfully kept going at Georgetown and Cumberland but five other places have no one to teach the children. This is very sad, for the children especially need our attention. The branch of the Scripture Union has been restarted as a means of helping the children and adults to know and value the Bible itself. So far the union has been taken up warmly, and we trust it may increase in numbers and usefulness. There is no church building here, and at present we are glad to assemble in the courthouse. We hope that this may soon be altered, as we should be able to help the children much more if we had a building for our own use.

Our need is forcibly impressed since the Chinese have opened their new Joss house.

Despite all the difficulties and uncertainties of the work here, we hope for great things during this coming year: that souls may be aroused to their need of the Saviour, and being aroused may take the free gift of eternal life as their present possession, and live lives worthy of their King.

NORMANTON.

It is a pleasure to write and tell you that as a result of a special effort, Church funds are in such a healthy state as to permit of our showing a credit balance the last two parochial council meetings; this without using any of the proceeds from the concert and sale of work held during race week, and we hope from this that we will be able to keep up so satisfactory a state of affairs. It must be very gratifying to our pastor, as it allows of his giving more thought to the spiritual welfare of his flock.

The lining of the church has been postponed until after the wet season for two reasons—the swelling of the boards, and the possible shortness of the sale of work funds after paying for the bell. But the lining of the church will claim first attention after Easter.

Speaking of the bell, it is a treat. Imagine us being without one all these years. As it stands it cost some £30 odd—a lot of money you will say, but if you saw and heard it you would say it was well spent, and an outlay that will return more than its cost in the not far distant future, as it is sure to be the means of keeping up a more regular attendance of the congregation. We cannot make the excuse now that we were not ready in time, or we did not know whether we would be early or not. The bell rings out a sweet and inviting call, and the oftener it rings the sweeter the tone develops. It is erected on an iron tower, being elevated some 22 feet above the level of the ground.

Every praise is due to Mr. G. Muller and his two sons for the gratuitous labour they spent in adjusting a mistake made in erecting the tower on the ground. We are proud to have such practical men as Church workers. Had the defect not been adjusted, the quality of the bell would have ever remained a subject of criticism, and the stability of the tower questioned, whereas now everybody is satisfied that a nicer or easier bell to ring could not be wished for.

The children's early morning week day services continue to be well attended. Our pastor however would like to see more children still attending, and parents are kindly asked to take more interest in the good work. We cannot over-estimate the good resulting to the boys and girls in after years from the religious teaching they now receive, so why not send them; at the most it only means getting them ready for school a quarter of an hour earlier. Don't you think it worth the trouble? They are taught to think more of God, to speak to their heavenly Father in prayer, to sing a Psalm and Hymn, to read his Holy Word, and learn how to be good boys and girls—is this not needed? Of course it is or else where are we to expect to find the foundation for the making of good manly citizens and kindly mothers of the future. Men with a purpose of right ever in their mind and women with a kindness of heart the precious gift of God.

A pleasant function was witnessed a week or two before Xmas in the distribution of prizes to the children attending the early morning week day services. The children indeed being pleased beyond measure at receiving such tokens of reward for their regular attendance.

A Christmas tree and tea meeting was another treat for the children. Every child attending Sunday School received a gift and without favour. The arrangements were perfect and every praise is due to the many ladies and gentlemen contributing and assisting.

A lot has been said about what has been done for the children. Now the children have something to say about what they were able to do, not only for themselves, but also for the entertainment of their parents and friends. With the assistance of their Sunday School teachers they provided an excellent programme of music, songs and glees to the admiration of all attending and the resulting proceeds provided funds wherewith their Sunday School prizes have been bought; these will be distributed on the present visit of his Lordship the Bishop.

Confirmation classes have been held for the last month, or so, and that ever pleasing to be witnessed rite of the Church will be conducted by his Lordship during the month of March.

The question of the parish boundary has, by the request or the Bishop claimed the attention of the council and their proposal will be submitted for his approval; this question reminds us of the needs of our country parishioners and the necessity of an occasional visit being made them by our pastor, and it is to be hoped some arrangement will be made to enable the Rev. Mr. Wilkinson to make a journey into the country during the cooler months of the year.

Another of our Sunday School teacher was married recently—namely Miss Hannaford, the bridegroom being Mr. Wooster. On every hand good wishes have been expressed for Mr. and Mrs. Wooster's future happiness, and the choir and Sunday School teachers were not the last to show their appreciation of Miss Hannaford's past labours amongst them—Contributed by Churchwarden F. Wallin, Normanton.

This time of year Church work becomes very hard and discouraging. The heat and the rain both combine to keep people away from the services, and many empty forms have a depressing effect on both clergy and people. It is passing strange that heat and rain should have a beneficial effect upon every thing else, turning the whole country from a desert to a garden, supplying us even with luxuries not obtainable at any other time of the year, yet paradoxical as it may seem, it is strictly true, that this season of the year in this part of the world has at the same time both a damping and withering effect upon religious life, though it makes no difference whatever to other affairs of life.

Our Sunday School work is the most regular and encouraging of anything that we do, largely due no doubt to the faithful and constant devotion of the teachers. Parents also might help us considerably—not so much by enforcing attendance, though this is sometimes necessary but by asking a timely question now and again as to the subject of the day's lesson and the knowledge of it carried away. Probably sometimes the parents also might gain a little knowledge on neglected subjects by this means.

We hope also a great deal from our daily instruction classes. The attendance and interest in these daily lessons are encouraging. The Bishop's prize for 1904—a beautiful edition of Prayers and Hymns—was won by Master Geo. Trimble, with his brother Jack and little Winnie Hedgelong a tie for second place. We take a shortened form of Morning Prayer, sing the Venite and a hymn and finish with a 5 or 10 minutes' Bible lesson with pictures.

Our choir still maintains its reputation, and the music is really good, when the members don't feel too tired to come. Its efficiency is owing to the energy and devotion of our excellent organist Mr. A. H. Stewart, as well as to the individual members. The Christmas services were especially well rendered, and we had exceedingly good attendances in spite of the heat. After the sermon on two or three Sunday nights we had short services of carols, which were much appreciated by both inside and outside congregations. Our handsome Church looked still more beautiful on Christmas Day. The tasteful and chaste decorations were due to the care and forethought of Mr. and Mrs. Maslen, Mr. Henry Chandler and Mr. Donisch with one or two others. The number of communicants was much larger than on any previous occasion.

The thanks of both Church and congregation are especially due to the Ladies' Committee. We owe more than we can express to the unwearied devotion of Mrs. Bechtel, Mrs. Willocks, Miss Boyns, Miss Harries, Miss Carson.

Services have been held regularly at Croydon King and Tabletop, but the population at both places has dwindled so much—at one of them there is only one protestant family left—that we are afraid we shall have to limit our ministrations for want of congregations.

Towards the end of last year, the rector escorted by Mr. Bechtel made a tour of the Georgetown and Etheridge District. They had everywhere a most flattering reception. Services were well attended at Georgetown and Cumberland and anxious enquiries were made as to future visits. After calling on nearly every family in Georgetown, Donnyville and the Rocky were visited, where disappointment was expressed that no services could be held. Wherever there was a house or even appearance of habitation Mr. Bechtel and the rector made their way. They came across one old pioneer who had lived in the Etheridge in a tent for over thirty years and was still looking for his fortune. Encouraging services were also held both going and returning at the Gilbert River, where our travellers were royally entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Doyle.

Since my last we have been enlivened and cheered by a visit of two Sundays from the Rev. D. M. Jones, M.A. His striking personality and ancient British impetuosity drew crowded congregations, and we have all felt better and stronger and more willing to endure the burdens of the place in consequence of his helpful sojourn with us.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE.

The evils of drink are too plain to be denied. Probably we shall be well within the mark if we say that 50 per cent of the poverty and insanity and 75 per cent of the crime of the country is directly or indirectly due to it. It causes widespread degradation and misery and the liquor interest is a self-regarding organisation of enormous power, making huge profits often dominating elections and opposing its secret but tremendous influence to the cause of freedom and progress. Surely with regard to such a gigantic evil the Church should speak with no uncertain voice and should have a definite policy to uphold. In the first place we would say that it should be a practicable policy. Half a loaf is better than no bread, and any system which without introducing a vicious principle would reduce drinking by only one half ought to be welcomed by all Christians. Unfortunately there are fanatics who, like sulky children, say they will have no bread at all rather than take anything less than the whole loaf. Nothing plays better into the hands of the liquor interest than this policy which divides those who should be solid against the traffic. Let us aim at total prohibition if we like but let us have some common sense, let us recognise that at present it is not within the range of practical politics. Let us strive first to reduce the evil to manageable proportions; when that is done we can proceed if necessary to exterminate it: to say that we will have nothing but total prohibition and to refuse to work with those who will not cry our 'Shibboleth' is rank folly, and a display of sheer incompetence in the face of a deadly enemy. Messrs. Rowntree and Sherwell have shown that in the United States and Canada Prohibition though successful in the country district, has invariably been an utter failure in towns of even a moderate size, and there are practically no exceptions to the rule. They add "The failure is the more significant inasmuch as Temperance sentiment in the United States and Canada is far in advance of Temperance sentiment in the United Kingdom and the conditions are by so much rendered more favourable for the experiment." If then total Prohibition is for the present an impossible ideal, what possible and practicable ideal is there at which we can aim with some hope of real success? On the whole the propositions of the writers referred to seem to be the best, and we would urge Churchpeople to work for them until at least the measure of success which they indicate is attained. When it is a more healthy public opinion will result, and it may be possible to advance even further, but it is sheer folly to jeopardise the end that may be obtained by harping on aims which at present there is not the slightest hope of attaining.

Their leading propositions may be briefly summarised as follows:—

1. The retail drink traffic must be taken out of private hands. This will render reforms in the conduct of the business easy of accomplishment.

2. While prohibition is at present impossible in the large towns, local veto may be exercised successfully in country and some suburban districts.

3. That if public houses are closed other facilities for cheerful social intercourse must be provided to take their place. The large sum necessary to do this could be obtained if the trade were taken out of private hands.

4. That municipalities and localities should have power to organise and control retail traffic but always under the direct supervision of the central government under statutory limitations.

5. That the whole of the profits be paid to the State, a sufficient amount being returned for the support of adequate local counter attractions.

6. That the amount spent in providing counter attractions locally should be in proportion to the population and not to the profits earned.

7. That every locality should have the power of prohibiting the traffic locally.

8. That the places, where liquor is sold should not be made attractive.

9. That compensation should take the form of a five years notice, with money compensation if the license is surrendered earlier. The great danger that is here guarded against is making it in any way profitable for the municipality or locality to push the trade. If this danger is steadily kept in view and guarded against we consider that the adoption of the above proposals would immensely aid national temperance and we urge all who care for the welfare of Church and State to consider whether they cannot unite in advocating them. Of course private effort and moral suasion must go hand in hand with legislation which can accomplish little unless public opinion be behind it. We must remember that however strongly we may believe in the advisability of total abstinence, it is not a precept of the Gospel that all men should be total abstainers and that if they are ever to be made so it must be by precept and example and not by mere force. If we show ourselves reasonable we shall gain the help of many who will have nothing to do with fanatical extremes.

THE BISHOPRIC.

There are two matters in connection with the Bishopric which call for careful consideration on the part of our churchpeople. The first is the question of the appointment of a Bishop in the case of a vacancy in the See. The Carpentaria Canon of the Diocese of North Queensland under which the See was formed provided that the first Bishop should be nominated by the Archbishop of Sydney, but no provision was made for the appointment of his successor. Of course if we had a Synod the matter would be simple, but there are grave objections to the formation of a Synod while the number of the benefited clergy is so small, and when the distances are so great that it would be practically impossible for the lay representatives of more than a single town to be present. Failing a Synod, the only way seems to be to vest the appointment in the Bishops of Australia, or supposing a Province to be formed, in the Bishops of the Province. General Synod is approaching and a short determination passed at it would put the matter in order. The other matter is this. When the Bishop of North Queensland collected the funds for the endowment of the See in 1899 he fixed the capital at £10,000 under the impression that if it were invested in Australia it would provide a sufficient income. The English societies, however, who subscribed a considerable part of the amount, decided that the money must be invested in England and the rate of interest was fixed at 3 per cent. During his last visit to England, however, the Bishop of Goulburn succeeded in persuading the authorities to consent to the money being invested in the "Provincial Trustees of New South Wales," with a view of a higher rate of interest being obtained. It is not ascertained whether the Provincial Trustees of New South Wales would accept the trust or what rate of interest could be permanently obtained. It remains also to be considered in view of the heavy losses sustained in their investments by many Australian dioceses whether the additional gain in interest would fully compensate for the lessened security. In any case the diocese owes a further debt of gratitude to the Bishop of Goulburn for his disinterested efforts on its behalf. No hurried action will be taken in either matter, and those interested will do well to express their opinion before a decision has been arrived at.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH.

As the Virgin Birth of our Lord has of late been fixed upon as a subject of assault, it may be well to indicate very briefly the reasons why Christians believe it to be true.

1. We believe on other grounds that the life of Christ was a manifestation of God on earth, that the Son of God really became incarnate in time. We are convinced of this by His words, works, and character, and by the results which followed and still follow from them.

2. If God did become incarnate, then there is more reason to expect than not to expect that the moment when the new power entered into human life would be marked by some sign of that power, some new start or impulse of physical life. If there ever was adequate cause for a miracle it is here.

3. The incident is recorded by St. Matthew and St. Luke, but not by St. Mark or St. John, who begins thirty years later with Christ's Baptism. The two accounts given are clearly derived from independent sources. St. Mark's Gospel was probably written down about A.D. 60, St. Luke's about A.D. 70, and St. Matthew's probably a little later; St. John's probably about A.D. 100, when he was very old.

4. A close study of St. Luke's account shows that it was almost certainly derived from a woman; of St. Matthew's that it came from a Jew full of memories of prophecy. It is extremely probable that the two narratives came ultimately from the only persons qualified to speak—the Virgin herself and St. Joseph.

5. It is not at all probable that the facts would have been made known to anyone until after the Resurrection; probably not until the time of the Virgin's death.

6. The fact was believed by the Church from the earliest times. St. Ignatius about A.D. 110 writes, "Hidden from the prince of this world were the Virginité of Mary, her child-bearing, likewise the death of the Lord."

7. The idea of an actual virgin birth was contrary to Jewish expectation, and the theory that it could have been imported from Buddhism has been given up by critics.

8. It seems impossible to account for the immediate reception of a story which did not fit in with antecedent expectations, was contrary to prevailing ideas, and not at the time recognised as an essential idea of the Gospel.

cept on the supposition of its truth. Those who wish for a fuller statement would do well to read "Some Thoughts on the Incarnation," by Dean Robinson, 2s. 2d., or "The Virgin Birth of Our Lord," Bishop Gore, in "Dissertation," 6s.

PASTORAL LETTER.

Dear People—

The return of Lent gives me the opportunity of addressing to you some words of pastoral counsel. Firstly I would bid you beware of false teachers, and false teaching. Beware of the common assumption that getting money is the end of life. Money does not bring happiness. Remember the words of Christ. "Be not anxious saying what shall we eat? Or what shall we drink? Or wherewithal shall we be clothed? (For after all these things do the Gentiles seek) for your Heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things. But seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." Take God at His Word. Beware of those who teach that the lusts of the flesh are natural and therefore pardonable. We are made to rule our passions not to be ruled by them. The lawful purposes of marriage are clearly laid down in the Prayer Book, and every departure from or perversion of the Law of Marriage is a deadly sin against the Law of God. "He that soweth to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption."

Beware of shallow sneerers against religion. Ask them boldly what they have to offer you in exchange for the bread of life they would take away. In nine cases out of ten, they have not even a stone to give you. Do not be misled by specious arguments. Remember that all these arguments have been in use since the time of Plato and long before, and they have failed to convince the wisest of men since they failed to convince him. Modern science has we are told by its greatest modern exponent, not only not disproved God, but absolutely demands God. Christianity is more living to-day than it ever was. Above all I bid you beware of your own selves, of the weakness, ignorance and perversity of your own nature. Use well the time of Lent for spiritual stocktaking. Be sure that you are making no mistakes. If you are not a communicant ask yourself how you can be an honest Christian while you ignore Christ's own command. If you feel unworthy ask yourself why you do not repent and strive to become worthier? "Work while it is day, for the night cometh when no man can work."

Secondly I bid you remember for your encouragement that if you do turn to God to serve Him you will have on your side the whole power of the will and purpose of Almighty God. As a diocese we have had abundant cause during the past year to acknowledge the good hand of our God upon us, doing these things which of ourselves we should have been powerless to do.

I bid you remember the vast influence of even a few who are strongly set to do right. The great mass of men follow for the most part in the way which the stronger wills and more determined purposes point out for good or evil. Remember the poor widow and the unjust Judge. Be importunate for the good at true and men will often follow just because they are too weak to resist. Do not let the devil's agents be more active than you are. Do not forget that good has an inherent advantage over evil in its stronger purpose, and unimpaired force of will. "Be about your Father's business."

I bid you remember that the things that are seen are temporal, but the things that are not seen are eternal. It costs a far greater effort to acquire self control, patience and reverence, humility, than to conclude a good bargain, or gain a seat in Parliament, but in the one case you have something which will stand by you for ever, in the other something which you may and eventually must lose. Put your efforts into something permanent then, do not fritter them away on things which you cannot keep.

Thirdly and lastly I bid you pray constantly. I bid you pray for your country, that God will pardon our many sins of dishonesty, intemperance and unchastity, that He will be pleased to send us men who may set before us higher ideals of life, and more worthy objects of labour; that truth and justice may be established and that the fear of God may bring forth fruit in the deeper love of men.

I bid you pray for your Church, that ancient and honourable Church of your fathers, which has survived so many assaults alike from open foe and professing friend, and which sets before us to-day the same type of sound faith and sober worship which has taught and trained so many heroes of our race in the past. It is very well to be charitable to other Christian bodies be they Nonconformist or Roman, but your first and paramount duty is to your own Church and to no other while your own Church has need, and calls for your aid.

I bid you pray for the whole human race that the nations may be drawn nearer in peace and justice one toward another and that the knowledge of God and His Christ may ever spread more and more widely. Especially I bid you pray for the effort we are making in this diocese to teach and aid the unhappy aboriginals to whom we owe not a little reparation. Finally I bid you pray for yourselves that you may not drift past this opportunity, that you may be drawn nearer to God and nearer to one another, that no selfwill a self indulgence may blind your eyes to God's truth here, that you may have grace to use such discipline with yourselves here that you may not shrink from appearing before His Judgment seat hereafter. May He, the God of Peace and Truth, give you his fullest blessing for evermore.

Your faithful servant,

GILBERT, Bishop of Carpentaria.

LITERATURE.

It seems almost superfluous to insist on the necessity of Literature. But we need constantly to remind ourselves, by watching daily events, that what should be the common heritage of the nation is still the possession of the few, and this literary aristocracy threatens to become even more exclusive. The masses read, but what do they read? they are content to sit in the armchair of their mind and to have their literary pabulum carried to them in the form of patent foods—otherwise newspapers, magazines, ephemeral novels. Their food must be in small packets, ready labelled, it must require no preparation, no cooking, no mastication, this is the work for the literary oligarchy. Naturally the literary teeth of the nation as a whole are decaying because they are not supplied with solid food on which to work in their early stages.

This growing tendency amongst the people to neglect good books, must be fought against by those working for the progress of the Nation and the most important of these workers are the teachers, they must enlist the interest of the children, children on whose education depends the welfare of the next generation. For our present purpose literature means all the best matter bearing upon the life of man written in the mother tongue; it includes the best writings in all tongues if they have been reduced to a medium intelligible to those concerned.

Man is distinguished from the lower animals by an addition to the physical or animal life; that is by the spiritual life—the soul.

The soul is the embodiment of all the finer qualities peculiar to man. It is with this spiritual being in man that literature is concerned, for it is itself the product of the soul of man, it is the medium by which soul commences with soul, for 'the soul of man is audible, not visible.' It is by the medium of literature that the souls of the mighty dead still inhabit the earth commercing with, strengthening and purifying the souls of those men who are awakening to the fact that their birth has been but a sleep, and a forgetting, and that what their forefathers have been makes them what they are, and they in turn must help to make or mar the souls of those who come after.

It is because we fail to realise the universality of the human soul that we strive to force into the mind of the young isolated pieces of soulless knowledge, instead of leading them by joyous paths to the golden gates of literature within which they find the saints and heroes of the ages waiting to receive them.

When our Great King Alfred determined to save England, he saw that ultimate salvation must come through the soul of man; and he worked with his own hands, and head, and heart, upon the foundations of education and literature. He translated Æsop's Fables, and the Hebrew Psalms, and we have only to recall the words of the first psalm to realise how in this way the wise teacher-king was able to set high truth and seriousness before an undeveloped nation.

Shall we not do well, to continue the work of using literature as a means of national development. Let each of us honestly face the question, as to what use in our teaching we make of our noble English literature; if we are conscious of neglect because opportunities seemed small, and the results rather difficult to gauge, let us begin at once to do what little we can in making fruitful the work of great writers.

From literature men gain self-knowledge self-respect, self-reliance, and inspiration to all forms of nobility. Literature provides the mind with potential energy, it provides means of recreation, independent of rank, age, profession or wealth; and if a teacher has put into the hands of a youth the means of employing and enjoying his free time to good ends, the teacher has done well—no one can do it so well for the boy after he has once entered upon an independent course—although there are many waiting to sell him pleasure (not joy) wherewith to fill up his leisure hours. The boy who leaves school with a love of good books, will inevitably learn to love the good things which make good books; he will already have much towards learning that "Joy is not laughter and gaiety of soul but it is the free play of all the highest faculties of Love, and Trust, and Worship."

And Love being the Mother of all Virtues is not this knowledge the pre-eminent aim of Education and Literature alike?

DIOCESAN ACCOUNTS.

We desire to call our readers attention to the statement of Diocesan accounts which we publish in this issue. For the fourth time we end the year practically without debt. The sum of £100 noted below should be paid over to the Endowment Fund but this has not yet been done as it will be seen that the margin is so small as to leave no account to work on monies being sometimes paid considerably in arrear. We have happily no other Diocesan liabilities, and this will be liquidated at the earliest opportunity. We have received roughly £425 from England, £218 from Australia, and £50 from the diocese itself. The College expenses include tuition and maintenance of house and students. The Wilkinson Fund is money subscribed for a holiday for Rev. W. M. Wilkinson after his severe illness. It will be seen that the "Carpentarian" involved a loss of about £10. The paper has been improved and the price reduced and we hope this will result in a wider circulation. Clergy travelling expenses does not include those of the Bishop but does include those of students and lay workers.

Notes.

Rev. S. Lewis remained at Thursday Island during December, January, and February and was licensed as private Chaplain to the Bishop. He leaves for Cooktown on March 20th to act as assistant curate there.

Rev. H. P. Gocher, B.A., late Rector of Palmerston has been appointed locum tenens at St Luke's, Toowoomba.

Rev. W. P. Glover, Th.L., Dalby has been licensed as commissary to the Bishop of Carpentaria in the Diocese of Brisbane.

Mr. Justice Dashwood the retiring Government Resident at Palmerston has been a good friend to the Church, and we wish him all future success and happiness.

Mr. C. Herbert his successor is also a loyal Churchman, and will be warmly welcomed at Port Darwin.

Rev. F. C. Hall, Th.L., is working the Ethel district thoroughly. We hear rumours of the chase of errant horses through the bush, and are sure that the pursuits of erring parishners will be as pertinacious.

The engagement of Rev. G. H. Smith to Miss Baker is announced; we wish them every happiness. The wedding will not take place until the end of the year, when we regret to say Mr. Smith leaves us for the south after 16 years of faithful service.

Mr. Millar has been appointed to the staff of the Mitchell River Mission and is studying methods at Yarrabah.

We have to acknowledge the great services rendered to the Diocese by Mr. C. H. Hindmarsh who has devoted constant care to the counts as Hon. Diocesan Secretary.

The Bishop left for the Gulf on February 1st by the Maranoa. He will visit Georgetown if the weather permits.

GOLDEN GATE.

During last year we lost so many of our most helpful people through removals and such like, that for a long time the work has been very slow, up-hill and somewhat discouraging. But now we are thankful to say that things are much brighter and more hopeful. We have put together a very fair choir, who sing their different parts from Tonic-sol-fa music with great gusto. Our greatest fault is our smallness in number. But this is a fault which we gradually hope to amend.

Here again as in Croydon the Sunday School has our greatest encouragement. The number of children is so great that the Church is far too small. We are looking anxiously forward to the time when we shall be able to enlarge it.

Our Christmas Services were bright, cheerful and well attended. The new choir rendered the music and Christmas carols very creditably. We are very much indebted to Mrs. Duffy and Miss Boyle, who do so much to help things along, their practical help and encouragement together with that of the Sunday School teachers make many other things possible.

The Rev. A. E. Smith has filled the place of the Rev. S. Lewis who left us last November. He has got well into working order and we trust that he will carry on the work so well begun to still greater success.

We enjoyed a visit and a service from the Rev. D. M. Jones, and also from our old friend Rev. F. C. Hall, Th.L., whose former residence amongst us made him a favourite of everyone. We are glad to know that his work in the Georgetown District is meeting with deserved success.

THE MITCHELL RIVER.

The following extracts from a report sent by Rev. F. M. T. Palgrave, M.A., to the Bishop on his visit to the Mitchell River will interest our readers:—

At Beboombah, and elsewhere along the river, we found considerable interest shown in the Yarrabah Mission, and the behaviour of the aboriginals in our company highly commended. It came as a surprise to some, that beneficial results could be obtained from teaching black fellows, and still more so, when Mr. Gribble exhibited his two miniature albums of Yarrabah views, shewing the band drawn up and the children at physical drill, plantation work, and in a few cases the interest became so practical as to result in a donation in aid of the mission, a generous old squatter, even going so far as to promise Mr. Gribble a bull for the use of his own Mission. This seems to point to the fact that Yarrabah needs more advertising, not only in fairness to the work itself, and the workers, but also in the interests of many who would doubtless be glad of an opportunity of helping on so useful an undertaking, if it were but known to them. There are many who pooh-pooh the purely "other worldly" mission, but to whom an industrial mission with its various avocations at once appeals. The Mitchell River reserve, too, if worked as a cattle station, should induce many white people in Queensland to take an interest in that mission which they otherwise would not do.

We passed some mosquito camps—gridiron-like erections some four feet from the ground, on which the blackfellow sleeps, whilst his woman below keeps a fire burning all round, whose smoke may choke off the mosquitoes from her sovereign lord.

When we reached the reserve and came across the blacks, the mosquitoes not being very troublesome, they used to camp in a circle on the ground, amongst a multitude of smouldering firebrands, with strips of bark to lie upon. At first they were suspicious of our motives, although we had Yarrabah boys with us who spoke their language. Camping almost in our pockets at night, they kept up counter watches to ours, stacked their spears in a conspicuous place near our tents, and at intervals throughout the night would rise and steal round the camp, engaging in a whispered consultation with those lying down. But before Mr. Gribble had left, they had come to look upon him, and on the future mission as their friend, and some two or three undertook to do all they could in forwarding the mission next year.

The reserve is well watered with creeks and lagoons, the water being not only plentiful, but good in quality. It is also well stocked with such food as the blacks love, so much so, indeed, that the variety of the supply permits of their assigning a close season to and variety of food in turn. Thus they ring the changes on opossums, flying foxes, bandicoots, kangaroos, wallabies, kangaroos rats, ducks (referred to as whistlers, burdekin or pigmy geese, and others), turkeys, native companions, turtle, mussels, iguanas, frilled lizards, snakes, ants eggs, honey, rice, yams, turnips, nuts, passion fruit, and the stalk, root, and seeds of the water lily. The southern portion of the reserve, which we traversed, is rich in grass, and would admirably suit horse breeding in time to come as well as a cattle station as soon as the mission is fairly established. Mr. Gribble's idea was that there should be constant communication between the Mitchell River reserve, and Yarrabah, and that cattle should be driven across the peninsula, and an exchange of commodities effected between the two aboriginal missions-stations.

The blacks around the Mitchell compose the following tribes: Koko-Wangarra, Koko-Widdy, Giwinning (or Giwinning), Koko-Mingahno (or Koko Mindyuno). The Koko-widdy are a timid race, much in fear of the Koko-Mindyuno. We only saw four (?) of these last, and although a message was sent from our camp to invite them to come and see us at Tobannaman Creek, they would not come near, and we had to decamp, after waiting a whole day in expectation of their arrival, in order to avoid the threatened wet season, of which we heard much, but saw little.

The Koko-Mindyuno are said to be the only aboriginal tribe that has compelled the white settlers to evacuate their country, they have a name for being treacherous, and hostile to the presence of whites within their territory.

The Giwinning tribe extends southwards to the Nagsan River, and the Koko-Wangarra occupy the land just eastward of the point where we entered upon the reserve.

With regard to the proposed site of the mission Mr. Gribble inclined towards Tobannaman Creek, about eight miles from the coast, and in the country of the Koko Mindyuno. This place is a favourite rendezvous of the neighbouring tribes, and is well supplied with wood and water, besides being out of reach of the floods. Moreover it is conveniently placed with regard to the transportation of supplies from the coast, the intervening space consisting of a level plain, suitable for the construction of a dray road. The water in this locality, however, was inclined to be brackish, and certainly a more attractive looking spot was Yeermundo, waterhole or lagoon, about two miles from Rutland Plains and (I think) 24 miles east of Tobannaman, with excellent drinking water, highbanks, and abundance of good timber in the shape of bloodwood, out of which Mr. Gribble and his party, aided by a gang of wild blacks, whom he paid in tobacco—erected a stout building 14 x 14 feet, and thatched with grass after the manner of the huts on the South Sea Islands.

Yeermundo has also the advantage of being within easy reach of the hunting grounds of several of the tribes.

When this mission is able to support that most useful being, a medical missionary and to provide the natives with tobacco (thus releasing them from the temptation of his visiting periodically such places as Normanton and Croydon, and when the young girls who are now obliged to be kept secreted in the bush are better protected, then we may hope that a happier time is in store for these people, whose interests must be guarded and watched at once, if they are to escape the fate of their unfortunate brothers and sisters, the hangers on in the towns of this, "Commonwealth" as the phrase goes.

The majority of the wild blacks wear no clothes, with the exception of the young girls who wear a fringed apron of twisted opossum hair; and Mr. Gribble was strongly in favour of keeping the dress as simple as possible, and not burdening the mission members with shirts, which only bring on chest disease when worn in wet weather. None of the Yarrabah people wear boots, and only a few use hats, but they are allowed to use European clothing, because they were accustomed to it on joining the mission.

Food will not have to be supplied to these blacks for some time to come, as they thrive well upon their own native diet and the reserve is plentifully stocked with game as already observed, supplying them at present with their sole industry.

At one college in Cairo 11,000 students are being trained as Mohammedan Missionaries.

THE DIOCESE.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east, by the Northern Territory on the west, and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19deg. 30min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east par. 144 and thence N. to lat. S. 16deg. 40min., and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory of South Australia, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 sq. miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 16,500 whites, 7,000 Japanese, Chinese and other aliens, and 35,000 aboriginals. The white population is chiefly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre N. of Cape York.

FINANCE.

The Diocese has no endowment beyond the Bishop's income of £300 per annum.

MISSIONS.

Missions are carried on among the Japanese at Thursday Island, among the S. Sea Islanders at Thursday Island and Mosman, and among the aboriginals on the Mitchell River.

SPECIAL OFFERTORIES.

On Easter Day the offertories are given to the Clergyman of the Parish, and on Good Friday to the Australian Board of Missions.

ANNUAL FIXTURES.

(1) March 31st—Parish accounts to close, and to be prepared for presentation to Easter meeting.

- (2) Week preceding the Annual Easter Meeting—Roll Book to be revised to date, and copy thereof to be forwarded to the Bishop.
- (3) Easter Meeting to be held within twenty-one days after Easter Day; for election of Churchwardens, passing accounts, etc. N.B.—Copies of Easter Report and Balance Sheets to be sent to the Bishop. ("Parishes Regulation Canon," clauses 6, 10, and 24).

CANONS.

The Canons of the Diocese of North Queensland will continue to be the rule of the Church in the Diocese of Carpentaria, except in so far as they are abrogated in any point by special and published direction of the Ordinary, or are plainly inapplicable through change of circumstances and conditions. They may be obtained from the Diocesan Book Depot; price 1s.

DIOCESAN ASSESSMENT.

Each Parish or District within the Diocese shall pay annually to the Church Management Fund such sum as may from year to year be assessed by the Diocesan Council, provided that such sum shall not exceed eight guineas nor be less than four guineas.

BUILDING REGULATIONS.

Plans for the building or alteration of Churches, Church Rooms, and Rectories must be submitted to the Bishop for approval before any contract is entered into, but such approval does not imply any Diocesan responsibility for the cost of the same.

No alteration may be made in any consecrated building without a faculty from the Bishop.

MARRIAGE REGULATIONS.

1. The clergy are recommended to the Registrar-General by the Bishop that they may be registered for the solemnization of marriage, and no clergyman may solemnize marriage until so recommended and registered. The registration gives the clergy no right to celebrate marriages otherwise than as the customs and laws of the Church allow.

2. No marriage may be celebrated otherwise than by banns or by Episcopal license.

3. Clergy who hold the Bishop's leave to issue his licenses are termed Surrogates.

4. No Surrogate may issue a license for, or any clergyman celebrate the marriage of, any divorced person whatsoever without reference to the Bishop, and permission obtained from him.

5. No marriage may be celebrated otherwise than in a Church or accustomed place of public worship except by express permission of the Bishop; provided that in urgent cases founded on special circumstances, when reference to the Bishop is practically impossible, the clergyman shall act on his discretion, and forthwith report the circumstances to the Bishop.

6. Surrogates may not issue licenses for the celebration of marriages in Churches other than those within their own parishes or districts, but where the clergyman of a parish or district has not been licensed as a Surrogate, application must be made to the Surrogate appointed to issue licenses for the celebration of marriage within that parish or district.

7. The authorised fee for the Bishop's license is £3 3s. The Surrogate is authorised to retain for his own use this fee, with the exception of 10s. 6d., which is payable to the Church Management Fund. Where only £2 2s. or a smaller sum is paid, the Surrogate is authorised to retain three-fourths of the fee paid.

8. Quarterly returns must be made of all marriages celebrated, and the fees due to the Diocese must be transmitted at the same time.

9. No fee may be demanded for marriage by banns, and if any free-will offerings are made in such cases they may be entirely retained by the clergyman.

THE RIGHT REVEREND ST. CLAIR GEORGE ALFRED DONALDSON LORD BISHOP OF BRISBANE.

The enthronement of the Bishop of Brisbane took place St. Thomas' Day, December 21st, 1904. The visiting Bishops were his Grace the Primate, the Bishops of Rockhampton, New Guinea, Carpentaria, and North Queensland. There were 47 clergy of the Diocese present, and among the congregation were His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor (Sir Hugh M. Nelson), and the Premier (Hon. A. Morgan). The service was most impressive. The Bishop was installed by the Administrator of the Diocese, Archdeacon David. The Pastoral Staff was placed in the Bishop's hands, the Administrator saying at the same time:—

Reverend Father in God: On behalf of the clergy and laity in this Diocese I place in your hands this Pastoral Staff, the emblem of your Episcopal Office.

Long may you hold it and rule this Diocese in justice and sanctity to the Glory of God and the edifying and well-governing of the Church. May the Good Shepherd be with you, and bless you at all times and in all things. Amen.

With this beautiful piece of symbolism the Bishop was duly installed in his See. A little later after the Lord's Prayer said partly by the Bishop, and the versicles and prayer for the Bishop said by Canon Oakley, came a further touch of a similar nature when, whilst the choir sang the 133rd Psalm, "Behold how good and joyful a thing it is, brethren, to dwell together in unity," the visiting Bishops headed by the Primate came over one by one from their places to the Bishop standing in his throne and gave him each his right hand. That welcome by the Primate and the Bishops of the State of Queensland was the welcome of our Church in Australia. Then the Primate standing on the altar steps and facing the Bishop kneeling in his throne pronounced this solemn blessing:—

May the Lord be thy strength: Whatsoever thou askest of Him may the Lord grant thee together with truth, purity, knowledge, liberty, love and humility. May thy people honour thee and mayest thou be worthy, just, sincere, a true apostle of Christ. May the angels of God be upon thy right hand and upon thy left hand; may God establish thee in righteousness and holiness in His Holy Church; and may everlasting peace be with thee both now and for evermore. Amen. After the hymn "Now thank ye all our God" the Communion office commenced, the Bishop of Brisbane being the celebrant.

The service was admirably arranged and carried out.

The consecration took place at St. Paul's Cathedral. The Archbishop of Canterbury was the celebrant and there were thirteen bishops present including the Bishops of

THE BISHOP OF BRISBANE.

Salisbury, Stepney, St. Albans, Bishop Montgomery, and Bishop of Tugwell of Western Equatorial Africa. Besides the Bishop-Designate of Brisbane there were to be consecrated two others, one to the See of Trinidad and the other as Assistant to the Bishop of Western Equatorial Africa. The sermon was preached by Dr. Gibson, Vicar of Leeds (appointed recently to the See of Gloucester). We give the following extract:

"He who is called to preside over the See of Brisbane—a See the importance of which is bound to increase—is qualified in no ordinary way by personal gifts and varied training and experiences in the past for the work to which he is now summoned. Early training at Eton, and Cambridge, and Wells, a curacy in East London, a chaplaincy under Archbishop Benson, the headship of the Eton Mission, visits to the Mission-field in Africa and India, the care of a large London parish, the chairmanship of the Junior Clergy Missionary Association—the mere enumeration of these is enough to show the varied experience of men and things he will bring to the work. But one of them deserves a special notice. Ever since the days of Selwyn and Chapman, Eton has recognised her obligation to give of her best for mission work abroad. The spirit which has led Etonians in every other department of public service to be in the front has been conspicuous here also; and in days when the cause of foreign missions had not obtained the recognition as it now receives, there were Etonians who led the way in asserting its claims upon the Church. Some here may remember an incident in one of our unhappy wars in South Africa—worthily illustrated by the artist's pencil in the Royal Academy—the gallant young soldier shot down as he dashed forward to the charge, in the act of cheering on his old school-fellow with the cry, "Come on, we must be in the front: Floreat Etona!" And one who is not an Etonian may perhaps be pardoned to-day if he notes with admiring reverence that in St. Clair Donaldson, for the second time in its history, the Eton Mission at Hackney Wick has proved a training-ground for a larger sphere of service abroad, and sent forth its head to the front. Nor can the preacher forget that while Eton will claim him as one of her bishops, it was under the shadow of Wells Cathedral, and beside the crystal waters of St. Andrew's Well, that he received his special training for the Ministry. The fellowship of a theological college is a sacred thing, and the ties formed there are among the most intimate and most lasting of any that there are; and I know that the prayers of Wells men all the world over are not only rising to-day for him who is now added to the lengthening roll of those whom we proudly call our Wells bishops, but will follow him to his distant diocese to sustain him in his work for his Master."—"Brisbane Church Chronicle."

THE FALLACY THAT CHARACTER DOES NOT MATTER IN POLITICS.

When it has been pointed out that the party candidate returned for Parliament on some particular occasion is a man of no moral character we are frequently told that it does not matter, that so long as he can speak and so long as he votes on party lines his private character is a matter of no concern. We hold that this is a fallacy even from a narrow party point of view, while from a national point of view it is simply disastrous. It is a fallacy from the narrowest point of view firstly because it weakens public confidence in the cause that is unworthily represented. Character is after all a valuable asset and men put confidence in an honest and honourable man even when they differ from his opinions, and fight shy even of a good cause when championed by men of shady reputation. Does any one suppose that Gladstone would have won the triumphs he did for the Liberal cause, had his eloquence not been backed up by a consistently noble life? We hold strongly that the same holds good still, and that it is sheer infatuation in the leaders of popular movements to-day not to see that every man of bad character brought forward as an official candidate weakens the cause as much as every honourable and right living candidate strengthens it. The personal equation may not count for much with hot-headed partizans but it counts for a great deal with the quiet and moderate mass of men whose vote so frequently decides an election.

Secondly, we believe that it is a fallacy from the narrowest point of view because the man without a character cannot be trusted to be true to his own side any longer than it is his interest so to be true. There is much underground political history that never comes to light, but it is obvious that it is often easier to win over an opponent when elected than to prevent his election. Now with a man of good character this cannot be done, the man is not there for profit but to work for a cause in which he believes. Hence you are sure that when elected he will be really true to his principles.

But if it is foolish policy even from a narrow party standpoint to bring forward a man without character it is simply disastrous from a wider national standpoint. The aim of politicians ought to be the welfare of their country; how can that aim be advanced by men whose main desire is to serve their own ends?

We have said before and we say it again that we believe that it is more important to vote for men of good character than for men of any particular party. Suppose that you want to build a hospital and you appoint twelve men to do it. If the men are good, true men, loyally desirous of doing the duty entrusted to them without any private ends or aims whatever, then it makes very little difference whether they appoint the most capable man to do the work and act simply as his subordinates, or whether they appoint one man with limited powers, or whether each man has an equal voice; the work will be done and well done. If on the other hand you have twelve men who are not single-minded, honest, and loyal to duty, then whatever method they adopt there will be quarrelling, suspicion and bad work. So with the state. Forms of government may differ in value but they neither kill nor cure. It is the men that matter, and we shall never have good laws and good administration, until it is required of every Parliamentary candidate, that he should be what the name implies, 'a white man' with a clean record in the past and so far as can be judged an intention to serve duly in the future. Meanwhile we recommend Churchpeople to vote for the best man rather than for any policy, for the best policy may easily become the worst in the hands of bad men.

MAN'S PLACE IN THE UNIVERSE.

Professor Alfred Wallace's most interesting book on man's place in the universe can now be obtained in a cheap form and has already reached a fourth edition. Dr. Wallace is one of our most distinguished scientists and shares with Darwin the honour of discovering those more or less generally accepted theories of evolution which have had such a profound effect on all modern thought.

Dr. Wallace's theory as to the earth is sufficiently startling, and it is no wonder that it has aroused violent opposition among those who have been accustomed to speak of the relative insignificance of the earth, and to found thereon reasons for asserting that it was only man's pride that made him think that God could have any interest in such a little corner of the vast whole.

Whether or no Wallace's theories are borne out by facts it is difficult for one who is not an astronomer to say, but he appeals throughout in support of his statements to the most recent astronomical science of the day, and it is difficult for the reader not to conclude that he has at least made out a prima facie case for believing that if the earth is not, as he thinks, the only globe on which habitation is possible, yet at least it is probable that the possibilities of habitation elsewhere in the visible universe are very much smaller than was formerly thought.

Mr. Wallace's conclusions are briefly these.

1. That our universe is pervaded by a unity of substance and law, and its parts form a mutually interdependent system.
2. That, although there may be other universes for all we know beyond our ken, our universe is limited in extent and the stars are not infinite in number.
3. That our solar system is situated very near the centre of the universe and that this position is the only position in which conditions of life and growth are sufficiently stable to allow of life and growth.
4. The combination of all the following conditions is necessary to life.

The planet must be a certain distance from its sun.

It must not be greater or less than a certain mass.

Its ecliptic must have a certain inclination. There must be a certain amount of water. This must be distributed in certain relations to the land.

There must be an atmosphere of a certain density and of suitable component gases.

There must be sufficient dust in the atmosphere, and a sufficient atmospheric electricity. These all are found on the earth—not on any other solar planet.

5. Certain conditions are necessary for suns to have life supporting planets, and these conditions are fulfilled only in a small number of the whole cases.

6. In this small number of residuary cases the mathematical probabilities are against there being life-supporting planets, and Wallace is not afraid to carry out his conclusions to the end and to assert that it is at least conceivable that the whole universe does exist for the sake of this tiny planet on which we live, and in order to perfect its conditions for the existence of man. It is indeed strange to find the old beliefs championed once more out of the mouth of the most modern science. If Dr. Wallace does not absolutely convince he may at least suggest a doubt whether many of the supposed infallible statements of modern scientists are after all grounded in many cases on more than ingenious theories.

KNOWLEDGE AND USE.

A long time ago people thought that the sun was a god driving his chariot across the sky and watering his horses in the Western Ocean, but the sun warmed their bodies and made their corn to grow just the same as it does to-day. Then they thought that the sun was a planet revolving round the earth, and still it gave neither more nor less life and heat; then they thought that it was the centre round which the earth revolved, but of its size, distance and substance nothing were known, and still it shone just the same; then came more knowledge, and ever more, and above all the spectroscope until today we know, or think we know, all about the size, distance, and composition of the sun, but it gives not one whit less or more light and heat than it did of old. So it is with the Bible. Once people thought that every word and letter, nay even every point and comma were divinely and separately inspired, so that every part was of equal value and force, and yet the Bible was not bound by a narrow theory and gave light and life and comfort all the same. Then men came to see that room must be allowed for the human element, and that it was not honouring God to attribute equal value to every dim groping after him and still the Bible gave light and life and consolation. Then men have gradually after much study and thought come to see, or to think they see, exactly how the Bible was made, how the books were written and when, and how often in the ways we had not realised; and how still larger allowance than we thought must be made for the human element through which God worked then, in the same way as He works through good men to-day, inspiring without annihilating or nullifying their personalities, and still the Bible has just the same power of giving life and light and comfort. While at the same time many serious difficulties are removed.

The truth is that it does not lessen the value of a thing to know how it is made. The value is in the thing itself and that is absolutely untouched by any theories as to how it came to be, unless there were deliberate fraud, which no one has even ventured to suggest.

CRESCENDO.

A stout, florid man of between forty and fifty rolled his way up to the parson's gate, and leaning his hands on it commenced as follows: "Hi, parson, are you Mr. —?" The parson meekly admitted the fact. "Well I want to see you about a very important matter. You see I am a job master by profession, but all the people I had to deal with were such rogues that I've had to go through the court, but it is not that I came about. The fact is, sir, that I've been thinking that I ought to be confirmed, and I've come to you to arrange about it." The parson mildly questioned whether the bankruptcy court was the best of preparations. "Not at all your honour? I'm a true Christian. Why, I went to Church when Bishop—was here last, and I gave a subscription to the Sunday School picnic last year, or else it was to the Jockey Club. I know it was one or the other." "But, are you a member of the Church of England?" "I don't seem to remember you," "Yes, shure your reverence didn't I black Pat Molloy's eye when he said that he heard that the Church of England was a branch of the Catholic Church?" "But do I not perceive a certain aroma somewhat suggestive of recent acquaintance with spirituous liquors?" "Me drinking your lordship? No, not the leastest little drop have I tasted for the last hour or more, and then 'twas but to oblige a friend who felt lonely like myself." "Well I'm afraid you will have to be a little less ambitious, and begin knocking off drink and coming to Church a little oftener than once a year." "Well your eminence, I thank you very much for your good advice, and may be you'll speak to the Bishop about the confirmation." "Well, well; we'll see about that when you have begun to show some signs of being earnest in your request." "Indeed, and that I am. Could your holiness see your way to make me a trifling advance of half-a-crown?"

Diocesan Notes.

GIFT TO THE DIOCESE.

We have this issue the great pleasure of announcing the gift to the Diocese of a Mission Boat. We tender our warmest thanks to Mrs. Pritt who has generously given the Diocese the sum of two hundred guineas to purchase a boat in memory of her husband the late Archdeacon Pritt of Townsville and to be named after him. The boat is to be used to work the Mitchell River Mission, which has been established, and also to do work amongst the pearling fleets in Torres Straits employing nearly 2000 men, and for other mission work as the Bishop may direct.

We are delighted to make this acknowledgment and to find that our great need has been so providentially supplied. The boat will be purchased in a few weeks and work will be immediately commenced. In order to meet the working expenses for crew, depreciation, etc., a fund will be immediately established. We feel sure there will be a ready response. It is difficult to over-estimate the uses of such a boat. It will enable us to reach scattered Europeans, South Sea Islanders, Japanese, as well as the natives of the Mitchell River Mission. We are sure that many would like to help forward this new and important development of our work. Contributions will be gladly acknowledged by the Diocesan Secretary, Bishops College, Thursday Island, and should be marked "Boat Fund."

CATHEDRAL FURNITURE.

Mrs. Bowden has kindly supplied the following notes of the donors of the Cathedral furniture, etc. The Lectern was given by Mr. E. Jefferson who perished in the Cape Melville cyclone, and the Altar Rails by Messrs. W. Mogg and W. Outridge. The Choir Stalls were given by Mr. Seldon and the Altar Cross by Mr. H. Hodder. One Altar Cloth was given and worked by Mrs. Keating wife of the pilot of the Quetta and one by Miss Lacy who miraculously escaped. The four coloured windows were given by Messrs Pearson, Brown, Lacy and Dr. Salter, the Alms Desk by Mr. and Mrs. Dawson, the pulpit by Mr. George Smith, and the Bible by Mr. and Mrs. Abi. Murray,

The Font was given by the friends of the late Rev. J. Chalmers of New Guinea.

The Australian Board of Missions, per Rev. John Dixon, West Balmain, Sydney, has forwarded £100 9s. 6d., contributions collected by the A.B.M., for the work of the diocese. We beg to acknowledge most gratefully these efforts on our behalf. We hope later to publish a detailed list of subscriptions.

Rev. F. M. T. Palgrave writes from Kuwata Assa, Canada to say that his leg is sufficiently recovered to enable him to return to his work among the Indians of the north-west. He has promised a generous contribution to the funds of the Mitchell River Mission.

As we go to press we have received a wire from the Bishop, stating that the Mission party reached the Mitchell Reserve safe and well on May 30th. The wire must have been sent in from the Rutland Plains Station. It was sent from Normanton on June 11th. Thus taking nearly a fortnight to get any communication from the Mitchell. We thank God for His protecting care of the Mission workers during their long and arduous journey.

The Bishop has received a generous gift of £50 for the diocese from Mrs. Pritt in memory of the late Ven. Archdeacon Pritt who was a warm friend to the diocese.

NEW EDITION OF HYMNS A. AND M.

The new edition of Hymns A. and M. has been received with the usual chorus of disapproval which generally greets anything that is new, but sober judgment seems to be in its favour. The "Guardian" says the new edition is in many ways a great advance upon the old. Most of the unreal and depressing hymns are cut out, the tone of the whole is brighter, the arrangement is much more satisfactory, there is better proportion and a greater sense of unity; the selection has been guided by better taste and has provided for many felt wants; the Ancient has been discriminated from the Modern with an earnest endeavour to give it a worthy dress and its rightful place in the structure of the book. No doubt at first some will not welcome the revision, but the book will be found to improve upon acquaintance, and in the meantime the publishers have promised to keep the old edition in type as long as there is any demand for it.

With regard to the musical part of the book it says: "No reasonable judgment will deny that the committee has carried out its work with remarkable success. It has still left a few tunes which we should gladly see excised. It has still omitted a few which we should gladly see included. But if we judge it by what it has done, and not by some ideal—at present impracticable—of faultless perfection, we shall not hesitate to declare that it contains the greatest and most comprehensive collection of good congregational hymn-tunes which has yet appeared in this country."

On the occasion of the late visit of the Archbishop of Canterbury to America 35,000 people gathered on a hill to hear an address, or rather to see him as hearing was impossible.

The total population of Cape Colony was last year 2,400,000 of whom 575,000, were European and 1,829,000 were native or coloured. For the whole of B. South Africa the figures are white 1,135,000, coloured 5,195,000.

DOUGLAS MEMORIAL FUND.

The Diocesan Secretary has received the following contributions to the Douglas Memorial Fund. As a permanent memorial to the late Hon. John Douglas the Diocesan Council have resolved to attempt to complete the south aisle of the Cathedral and to fit it as a side chapel to be known as the Douglas Chapel.

The estimated cost is £300. We beg to acknowledge with thanks the following subscriptions:—

PALMERSTON NEWS.

Good Friday was well observed, the Church wearing a very sombre hue, the altar and ornaments being draped in black. On Easter Day the sanctuary was beautifully decorated with flowers and plants. Fifty per cent of the congregation made their communion as ordered. The gifts were crotons, by Mr. Dashwood and purchased by donations, a handsome carved superaltar and stand by Mr. Johns, a magnificent lace chalice veil, white bookmarkers, and a Bible and Altar book by Mrs. Waters, a sanctuary carpet by the Church Council and hymn and prayer books by Mr. Cole. The Sunday School children received their prizes on Easter Day afternoon from the hands of the Government Resident. The children in Easter week visited the Rectory bush house and added their Easter offering of plants to the scanty stock, afterwards partaking of billy tea and indulging in games.

The annual meeting was held on May 12th. The financial report shows an expenditure of £302 and a credit balance of £20. The Rector nominated Mr. C. Marsh as his warden: Mr. N. Waters was elected people's warden, and the church councillors were re-elected with the addition of Messrs. Snow and Corr.

At Pine Creek the local committee have much improved the appearance of the church by erecting a platform on which stands the altar and prayer desk, Mrs. Wilson presenting new altar rails. At the annual meeting held on May 1st the Treasurer's statement showed an expenditure of £68 and a credit balance of £7. The Rector is absent for three weeks, having been invited to accompany the Governor's party to the western and central parts of the parish. He is expected back in time for Whitsun Day when the handsome new red frontal will be used for the first time.

At one college in Cairo 11,000 students are being trained as Mohammedan Missionaries.

Volume V. - No. 19. Thursday Island, July 1, 1905

BISHOP'S DIARY.

I left Thursday Island by the Maranoa on April 11th. The night was somewhat thick and we had to anchor, and consequently did not reach Cooktown until the morning of Thursday April 13th. I went immediately to the Rectory and found that Mr. Field, whom I expected to find at Yarrabah, and wanted especially to see with reference to the Mitchell River Mission, was on a visit to Cape Bedford Lutheran Mission, and that there was no means of communicating with him before I left the following day. After a hurried breakfast I went down to the wharf and after making some enquiries found the master of a bêche-de-mer fishing boat who was willing to take me out for a fairly moderate sum, and who was willing to start in half an hour, which gave me time to return and put a few things together; in spite of which delays we were off to sea at 9 a.m. the boat being a cutter of about 10 tons with an aboriginal crew. The master made me as comfortable as possible, but I do not on the whole recommend bêche-de-mer boats, as the cockroaches are large and the accommodation scanty. At first we had a stormy breeze, but it soon died away and was followed by torrents of rain. I tried to sit it out on deck, but when rivers began to run down my neck I dived below only to hurriedly put my head out again into the rain as a refuge from the heat and compound odours below, which came within an ace of making me sick. The rain lasted until we reached Cape Bedford at 3 p.m., when I landed in a dripping condition, transacted my business with Mr. Field and went round the settlement with Mr. Schwartz the missionary in charge. The buildings are all well and compactly constructed, and though the numbers of the natives are not very large they seem to be all very happy and all the work is done with German care and thoroughness. Mr. Schwartz has been eighteen years at his post, and was married a few years ago to a daughter of Mrs. Allen of Cooktown, a family noteworthy for their devotion to the Church. I should like to have seen more, but was anxious to get back, and so left at 4 o'clock after an hour's stay. Mr. Field has offered his services for the Mitchell River Mission with the same generous disregard of self and devotion to duty which has marked his work at Yarrabah. We should have been back in few hours, but this was not to be our fate. By sunset we had only reached the northern end of the Indian Head range, and then the wind died away almost completely, and we spent twelve hours till 6 a.m. in tacking backwards and forwards, so barely making up for lost way that at daybreak we had not reached the southern end of the Head three miles away. Sleep was impossible from the rolling and creaking of the boat and the flapping of sails and blocks, but I managed to acquire a good deal of information about the bêche-de-mer fishing. The master of the boat curiously enough told me that he had never tasted the fish even in the form of soup. The fish, of which there are many varieties, is now pretty well exterminated from the reefs, and has to be collected from the bottom by swimming diving, six to eight aboriginals being employed on a boat. The enemy more feared by the blacks appear to be not sharks but snakes, immense numbers of which of every colour are said to haunt the reefs. The life must be a very hard one, and as the boat has to go fortnightly for wood and water and cease work in rough weather, not more than half-time is made. The slug is first boiled, then slit and pegged open and thoroughly smoked over a hot fire in a kind of smoke house erected on deck, care being needed to maintain the heat fully until the fish is thoroughly dry; otherwise it is spoilt. I noticed that one of the blacks seemed to be consumptive; they seemed to be kindly treated, the master of the boat giving this man his own macintosh to put on, but the constant wet and cold must tend to shorten life. About dawn we got a bit of a breeze which carried us on a few miles before it, too, died away, and we finally got in about 9 a.m., having taken twenty-four hours to do twenty-four miles with only an hour's delay. It is, however, only fair to Cooktown to say that such calms are of very rare occurrence, the chief trouble being usually the violent winds. As I had had neither sleep nor practically food for twenty-four hours I was glad to get a wash at the Rectory before proceeding to my letters, over which I must frankly confess I went to sleep. In the evening I licensed Rev. S. Lewis as assistant curate of Cooktown, and left at 10 p.m. by the steamer Arrawatta for Cairns, where I spent the Sunday, leaving on Monday for Yarrabah in wet and stormy weather. We had a somewhat rough passage out in the launch which behaved itself very well. The numbers at Yarrabah have largely increased, and all seemed to be working with its accustomed smoothness. In the afternoon I rode out to Reeves Creek settlement, where twelve married couples have neat houses, gardens, and plantations, and a well built common room and church. The system of these settlements seems to me to be most excellent. It prevents crowding and develops self-reliance and local energy. It is remarkable here as elsewhere that whereas the South Sea Islander is superior to the Aboriginal in power of work, steady application, and reliability, yet the aboriginal is far ahead in education, power of expression, and all that relates to the non-practical intelligence. Thus in each of these settlements, while a well-tried and experienced Islander is in charge and directs all that relates to field and manual work, yet so far as the services, reports, and business requiring an educated intelligence, he is entirely subordinated to the orders of an aboriginal lay reader. Yet scientists would have us believe that the Australian Aboriginal is almost below the range of human intelligence!

In the evening I listened to the brass band which performed excellently. All the music is played from note and not from ear; almost all the performers were pure-blooded blacks, only one or two being half-castes. At evensong I addressed the natives and endeavoured to interest them in the Mitchell River Mission. After breakfast on Wednesday I left to return to Cairns. It was not so rough as on Monday, and we passed a number of dugong in the channel. I reached Cairns at 11 a.m. and found that a little steamer, the Muriel, was leaving almost immediately for Port Douglas. I was the only passenger, and to get on board I had to cross the Woolahra and descend her left side by the most primitive of rope ladders. By noon we were off, and aided by a sail and the remnant of the southerly gale we reached Port Douglas in the record time of a little over five hours, and with less inconvenience than might have been expected from the somewhat rough sea.

Good Friday.—I came out to the Mossman on Thursday morning, and found a resting place at the Rectory. This morning the solemn service of the day was well attended by South Sea Islanders, but the attendance of whites was small. It is not altogether strange, for a Mr. Gladstone long ago pointed out, one of the chief characteristics of our present day civilisation is an inadequate realisation of the fact of sin, and it is to those who feel keenly the horror of sin, not merely the fear of punishment, that Good Friday appeals so deeply. It is this realisation of the fact of sin that or misses in all the popular semi-philosophical substitutes for Christianity that are being offered us in such profusion. I have just been reading "Haeckel's contribution to Religion" by A. S. Mories. The author, who, though he calls himself a Christian, loses no opportunity of denying the truth of Christianity (which is to presume the reason why the book is published by the Rationalist Press Association) shows with a good deal of force that if the premises of Haeckel and Herbert Spencer are logically carried out to the conclusions short of which these authors arbitrarily stop, they establish not materialism but spirituality, the absolute unity of nature in a God Who is unknowable but only unfathomable. So good; but how are we really advanced by merely intellectual conception of God? The which really tells in life, which really makes and mars man's happiness, is good and evil. Now good and evil are just what these semi-philosophical religions miss out. They land finally in an unsatisfactory pantheism, with the distinction between good and evil blurred and practically destroyed. If Christianity ever to be superseded it must be by something different to this. Yet it is to be feared that vague and ill-thought-out liberalism in religious matters is leading even some of our clergy into deeper waters than they are aware of.

Easter Monday.—On Saturday evening was invited to a "banquet" given by the directors to Mr. Kidston, the State Treasurer. At first the guests were to arrive at 4 p.m. then at 6 p.m., then at 8 p.m., and it was finally 10 p.m., before the banquet, for which I had fortunately not been reserving my appetite, began. There was a large gathering of cane farmers, the proceedings were most orderly, and speaking extremely good although almost every man present was strongly opposed to the policy of the Treasurer and of Mr. Dunsford, M.L.A. who accompanied him and also spoke, although the farmers spoke with strong feeling as men who believed that their whole business was threatened with destruction, there was bitterness or harsh language, and a general determination to make the best of what nevertheless all believed to be a bad job. As I was courteously seated next to the principal guest, I had a good opportunity of observing everything, but of course refrained from expressing political opinions. Mr. Kidston spoke strongly on his favourite theme of economy, and Muntz stated the case of the farmers with remarkable clearness and force. The proceedings terminated very quietly a little before midnight. Easter Day was wet though not continuously so, and even allowing for the weather and the excitement of the Treasurer's visit, the attendance at Church was not what it ought to have been. In the afternoon I confirmed seven South Sea Islanders. The reverence, devotion, and earnestness of these Islanders is in striking contrast to the spiritual carelessness and indifference of too many of the white population. The most fair comparison may be made between the after-conduct of the white and the Island confirmees, and the comparison is greatly in favour of the latter, who for the most part remain faithful to their solemn promises. It must be remembered that here at any rate Church membership offers to the men absolutely no material advantages. There is no home, no inducements beyond the opportunitis of class and worship, yet they remain faithful in their attendance. I fear that it cannot be denied that there is at present a very wide-spread religious indifference. Certainly opportunities of worship are not welcomed and taken advantage of as they were when I came to Queensland twenty years ago, and yet the labour and earnestness of the clergy is not less, but I am sure greater, than it was then. The same thing has been noted and caused much discussion at home in England. I have sometimes wondered whether the whole Church has not fallen into the error, into which we see sects and parties so continually falling, of neglecting the due proportion of the faith, of insisting strongly on some truths to the neglect or disparagement of others not less important. The following passage in the preface to the new edition of Hymns Ancient and Modern is suggestive. "It is often urged as an objection to Christian Hymn Books, that so great a proportion of the Hymns contained in them are addressed to our Blessed Redeemer rather than to the Father to Whom He brings us. The defect lies largely with the composers of our hymns, and not with the compilers of the collections." It is also noteworthy that in the same edition only, I think, 19 out of 643 hymns are addressed to the Third Person of the Holy Trinity.

I have further wondered whether there be not a close connection between the present period of religious unsettlement and critical enquiry and the opportunities now being presented of winning for Christ that vast Eastern world which is being brought into such close touch with us to-day. Is it possible that while the Church has not taught as necessary to salvation anything that was false, she has, under the influence of Latin theologians lost some of that breadth which was so characteristic of the Greek Fathers? May it not be that she needs a fuller and deeper recognition of the great truths of the Universal Fatherhood of God and the ever-present indwelling power of the Holy Spirit? When we remember how pitilessly all the heathen were not so long ago doomed to perdition, and when we recollect how many even to-day hold theories of Biblical inspiration which practically exclude the Holy Spirit from any present working almost as completely as did the traditionalism of the Scribes, we may venture to hope that out of apparent evil may come good, and that we may yet be on the verge of a wider and far fuller understanding of the mind and the glory of God.

On Friday the Police Magistrate came up from Cairns to try a case of cross summonses in which much strong feeling was involved. The parties concerned were Churchpeople; and finally, I am thankful to say, the influence of the Church was sufficient to cause a mutual withdrawal of charges and claims before hearing, a result creditable to both parties. On Friday evening I went out to stay with Mr. Barnard, the people's warden, in the midst of his canefields on the Mossman River. I opened my eyes in the night to a curious effect. The large room was full of mysterious moving lights, coming and going and flashing in and out as the host of fireflies played about. Mr. Barnard has a number of beautiful crotons, which grow luxuriantly out of doors in this humid climate. I found on the tramline what I believe to be a very rare form of aboriginal stone adze, unless it turn out a companion to the famous inscribed stones in Pickwick and the Antiquary. On Saturday I returned to the Mossman and took the train into Port Douglas, where I held services on Sunday in the Church which is far too large for the present population of this once flourishing town.

On Tuesday the Easter Meeting was held at Mossman. It was a great success. A parish tea was held at 7.30 p.m. and this was followed by the Easter Meeting, an address of welcome to the Bishop, and some sacred music. About seventy people were present, some having come in from a considerable distance. Mr. Devine was appointed rector's warden, and Messrs. Rex, Lock, and Blackburn parochial councillors.

Thursday, May 4.—Heard that Mr. Williams is ill with fever in Cairns. I trust that it may not delay the start of the Mission. In the evening confirmed five candidates of various ages.

Friday—I went to Port Douglas by train. On my arrival received a telegram with the joyful news that Mrs. Pritt would give a mission boat to the Diocese in memory of Archdeacon Pritt, and to bear his name. I was kept busy with my mail until the latter part of the afternoon, when I walked up the hill. It is difficult to conceive any more lovely views of water and mountain than one gets from here when light and shade are favourable. Next morning the mail arrived from Thursday Island and I was kept writing hard until noon, when Mr. Taffs arrived with the horses and I set out on the first stage of my long journey to the western from the eastern waters. Although so late in the season, the weather was intensely hot, and my horse, a strong but somewhat heavy animal, felt it so much that we travelled slowly, arriving about 2 p.m. at the house of Mr. Devine the newly appointed rector's warden, where we were hospitably entertained. Leaving again at 4 p.m., we had a good shade up the range and arrived at 8 p.m. at the house of Mrs. Groves who is well known to all travellers on this road, beside which she has lived for twenty-three years. In the old days, eighteen years ago, when I used to travel this way so often, Mrs. Groves's milk and buttered scones used to be the feature of the road. On Sunday morning I confirmed her three daughters, who had been carefully prepared by Mr. Taffs, and celebrated the Holy Communion; and in the afternoon went on to Mount Molloy, where a site for a Church has been given by the company and vested in the Bishop. Here I held service at night.

The service at Mount Molloy which was held on the veranda of Mr. Hastie's house was hearty and well attended. The syndicate has given and vested in the Bishop an excellent block of land on the hill above the smelter for the erection of a Church. A beautiful view is obtained from the site over the wooded Rifle Creek to the great overhanging mass of Mount Fraser on the north and the hills of the coast range to the south and east. Next morning, Monday May 8th, we left Mount Molloy about 9 a.m. and followed down the left bank of Rifle Creek for about 12 miles until we crossed the Mitchell close to Bakers Homestead where we received a warm welcome and some delicately stewed parrots for dinner. As we crossed the just running waters of the Mitchell I looked with some interest at the river whose course we were to follow so far. The Mitchell rises in the coast range less than 7 miles from the east coast and runs right across the Peninsula, converting it in the wet season almost into an island. In the evening I held service on the station veranda, and by the aid of the piano we sang four hymns creditably. It was I believe the first service held there during the 22 years that the station has been established.

Baker's, May 9th.—The expedition did not turn up during the day, and in the afternoon I walked some way up the granite range, very rough and very long grass, but a magnificent view where it could be seen for the trees, which was not often. On the opposite side of the Mitchell valley was the great mass of Mount Fraser, and to the left a long range ending in a hill surmounted by a curious granite pillar 80 feet high, called the lighthouse, which forms a conspicuous landmark for many miles round. About 6.30 p.m. Mr. Gribble appeared, having left the party camped three miles back. They had been delayed a day at Biboorah, trying to get a horse shod.

May 10th.—A thick fog early, which dispersed soon after seven with beautiful cloud effects on the mountains. About 10 a.m. the expedition appeared, Rev. E. Gribble, Messrs. Millar, Williams, and Field, and the aborigines James Noble, Grady, Bendigo, and Ernest, with 31 horses. I said good-bye to my hospitable hosts and left immediately. About noon we reached the spot where the road crosses the Mitchell, and while the rest of the party camped I rode across the river to Brooklyn Station, about 2 miles distant, to call on Mr. Ord. He had just left to drive Mrs. Ord, who was ill, into Mareeba. We left camp again at 3 p.m., and travelled down the river through well grassed country till 6 p.m., when we camped on a lagoon. After tea we had our evensong, and the hymns sounded well sung by so many voices. One of our party is a sailor, and the horse is a mystery to him though he sticks to it gallantly, as he remarks "The steering gear is all right, but I can't get the run of the engines. They seem to be always dead slow or full speed ahead." Heavy dew at night and cold.

Thursday May 11th.—Up at 6 a.m.; making up packs till 7 a.m.; breakfast and packing horses and ready to start by 8 a.m. (Saddling and packing 30 horses is hard work). When all ready to mount we had a short service holding our horses and then off. Travelled all day through rather poor country. Weather very hot. I rode ahead to make the pace, but some of the pack-horses were very tired and we made only moderate progress. Camped for dinner about ten miles further down the Mitchell on a waterhole near a dry creek. Soon after dinner we left the Mitchell, leaving behind a Yarrabah pony which was done up, and travelled through dry ranges south of the river all the afternoon. About sunset we reached the top of the watershed between the Mitchell and the Hodgkinson, and had a fine view of the great cliffs of Mount Mulligan to the south. There being no water, we had to travel on after dark till 7.30 p.m.; found water in a little creek a few miles from the Hodgkinson. The pack-horses and their drivers had considerable difficulty in following in the dark; fortunately there was a young moon. It was 9 p.m. before we finished tea, and after short Evensong all turned in pretty tired. Distance travelled about 24 miles.

Friday May 12th.—Up early, but had to wait a long time after breakfast, as four of our horses had not come in; got off at 9 a.m. Crossed the Hodgkinson about a mile and a half from camp at a deserted station; then made much southing to avoid rough country till we struck the old road, from Thornborough; along it for many dreary miles over small ranges to the junction of the little Watson with the Mitchell at 1 p.m. Every one assimilated a large pint mug of the clear fresh Mitchell water, and then on without a halt until 4.30 p.m., when we camped on a rocky waterhole near the Big Watson, and enjoyed dinner and tea in one, being all hungry. Distance travelled about 23 miles. At evensong I gave a short address on the second lesson. All is working well and smoothly under Mr. Gribble's skilful organisation. As soon as a halt is called every man catches the nearest of the nineteen packhorses and unpacks; all the saddles and packs are arranged in a square and covered with a tarpaulin, except those needed for the night; every one has two horses to ride and carry his pack alternately morning and evening, the rest being only packs. At the midday halt the same business has to be gone through and we can now pack up in less than half an hour; but it is only Mr. Gribble's energy and decision that render the job such a quick one. The black boys have other work, so that each white man has to pack four horses in addition to catching and saddling his riding-horse. About 6 p.m. some travelling cattle passed, and the owner, who had just killed, offered to send us over some fresh beef, but it never turned up.

Saturday, May 13th.—Got off at 8.15 travelled till 12.30; passed a fine water hole in a large stream about 10.15 a.m.; camped in a gorge in the hills where there was water. Country hilly and dry, but less rough than yesterday. In the afternoon we had a thunderstorm which wet everyone thoroughly and soon afterwards we camped on the Dry River and put up tents, as the weather continued threatening, about three miles from the O.K. copper mine. Distance travelled about 24 miles.

Sunday, May 14th.—At 7.15 a.m. celebrated the Holy Communion in the open air. With the just risen sun shining in his morning beauty behind the little temporary altar one appreciated the force of the words "Heaven and earth are full of Thy glory." After breakfast Grady and I rode into the O.K. Mine. We passed a long string of camels, at which Grady and our horses opened their eyes wide. I was hospitably welcomed by the mine manager, Mr. Gibbs, and his wife, and made arrangements to hold evening service in the office. The town is mostly canvas, but a large number of men are employed. It is about 12 miles from the southern border of the diocese, on the road from Mungana to Maytown.

Sunday, May 14th.—In the afternoon Mr. Gribble came in from the camp, and after tea we had service in the assay-room of the office which was fitted up with temporary seats.

There was a good attendance at this the first religious service ever held at the O.K., and the singing of the hymns was very hearty. I hope to arrange for it to be visited in future from Cooktown, as it is only 100 miles south of the Laura, though the road is very bad. Mr. Gribble went back to camp and I stayed the night.

Monday, May 15th.—Mr. Gibbs kindly undertook to have three of our horses shod, and Mr. Gribble and two of the boys came in with them about 10 a.m. The boys were very much interested in the camels. "They have an island on their back" said one referring to the hump. There are about 400 on the road to Mungana, but they cannot carry away the matter fast enough to keep the smelter running full time, and it works only two shifts a day. The lode seems to be very large and very rich. Several of the shoes had to be made, and we did not get away till 12.30, when we returned to camp, had dinner and packed up, getting off about 3 p.m. We passed through the outskirts of the township at three miles and then followed down the Dry River for about seven miles, camping on a good waterhole at 6 p.m. Distance travelled about 10 miles.

Tuesday, May 16.—Left camp at 8.20 a.m. Crossed the Mitchell after about five miles and then on another five to Bellevue Station where there was only the cook at home. Camped about 1 p.m. to rest the horses, tired with last week's hard travelling over the ranges; spent the afternoon fishing and exploring. Travelled 11 miles. The river is here a beautiful broad running stream.

Wednesday, May 17th.—Left camp at 8 a.m. grass long and dry and track difficult to find. Reached Mount Mulgrave, twelve miles distant, at 11.15 a.m., and camped just beyond the station which commands a fine view of the river. Mr. Callaghan, the owner, kindly sent a boy off to the Walsh station, 22 miles distant to take in some telegrams for me, and to fetch any awaiting me. At 3 p.m. the party moved to a camp six miles further down the river while I waited overnight at Mr. Callaghan's to await the return of the boy with the telegrams. Mr. Callaghan most kind and hospitable.

News of the Parishes.

THURSDAY ISLAND NOTES.

We record with thankfulness a bright encouraging Eastertide. During Lent addresses were given by the Vicar each Thursday at Evensong on "The Book of Common Prayer."

The morning services on Good Friday were well attended.

At the evening service the story of the Passion was told by the Vicar—Tissot's pictures were thrown on the sheet by Miss Buchanan's fine new lantern. The Cathedral could not accommodate all the would-be hearers, the congregation comprising both Christians and heathen of many creeds and nationalities.

The Easter communion services showed a substantial increase. There were 71 as compared with 51 the previous year.

A small orchestra helped to make the evening service very bright.

The 'experiment' of a Parish Tea was put to the test on the Thursday following Easter Day. Great was the success, although no one had been asked to contribute anything, generous offers poured in with the result that there is a substantial balance of 9s. 11d. to reducing the debt on the Vicarage. The tea-tables presided over by the ladies of the committee looked very pretty and the provisions said much for the cooking skill of the ladies of the Island. During tea sweet music was discoursed by the band of the R.A.A. The tea was followed by a lantern entertainment and concert, the only disappointment was that the Institute could not accommodate all comers, but many cheerfully listened to the entertainment through the open windows.

The Temperance Society is now an accomplished fact there is already a good number of members and the open meetings have been attended by many who we hope may decide to become active members. The two open evening have been devoted partly to music and partly to discussion. 1—A paper by Mr. Leighton on Total Abstinence—versus Moderate Drinking. 2—A lecture by Mrs. J. Jones on "Should women be total abstainers."

The formation of the Temperance Society was followed by that of a "Band of Hope." We are full of hope that the latter will become the seed good of many virtues for the young people. Almost all the eligible children above the age of six have joined and appear extremely keen. We are told the children can hardly talk of anything else at present, and they begin dressing for the 6 o'clock function immediately they arrive home from school in the afternoon. Thanks be to God for his great blessing—the children's enthusiasm.

The annual parish meeting was held in the Parish Institute on Tuesday, May 2nd, when Mr. H. G. Hodder as Churchwarden read the statement of accounts for the past year and presented his report. He was glad to announce that in spite of the bad time there was a small credit balance amounting to £16 8s 1d. He advised that in view of the financial depression on the Island strict economy would be necessary. The balance-sheet and report were unanimously adopted.

The Vicar then read his report of the year's work. He pointed out that there was considerable room for improvement in attendance at public worship especially at the early Communion Service. This service besides being a service expressly commanded by our Lord should therefore be binding on us, has the advantage of being short, and is also held in the cool of the early morning. The 10 a.m. service should also be more largely attended.

There were many encouraging signs—a well-attended Sunday School. The thanks of the parents are due to the earnest work of the teachers; the Quetta Club, with its increasing roll of members, and attached to it the Gynasium with over thirty members and a capable and capable instructor; the Temperance Society and the Band of Hope. In reviewing the work of the year the Vicar thanked the Churchwardens and other Church officers—the lay lecturers for the Society of the Treasury, the teachers and lay workers, and all who assisted in any way to advance the Kingdom of Christ in the Parish. For the past year thank God, and for the future we take courage. May the year be marked by enthusiastic and loving co-operation in the worship of God and the service of man.

The Vicar appointed Mr. Hodder to act as Parson's Warden for the ensuing year. Mr. Hodder kindly accepted. Mr. Hindmarsh was unanimously re-elected People's Warden.

The following were asked to serve on the Parochial Church Council:—Messrs. Milman, Brien, Shiress, Sullivan, Smythe, and Imbrust.

COOKTOWN.

The Easter meeting took place after service on the evening of Sunday, May 7th. The Rector's report dealt chiefly with the improvement in the number of communicants and the increase in the size of the congregations; pointing out that there was yet very much to be hoped and especially with regard to the congregation on Sunday morning. The report of the churchwardens ended more especially the response by the congregation to the appeal for the renovation of the church and for the liquidation of the debt of the organ: the result was that £200 was raised over and above the ordinary income.

The balance sheet showed that despite these extra efforts the church was able in depressed times to meet all the current liabilities for the year. Messrs. A. S. L. Wells (rector's) and J. Thomas (people's) were re-elected the churchwardens; Messrs. Boddington, Marsfield (rector's) F. Brown, Perry, Reid, E. Sigreen were appointed parochial councillors. With the Sunday School staff there have been changes, some of the teachers have withdrawn though want of time. Misses Cran and J. Fuller have been appointed.

Rev. S. Lewis has been licensed by the Bishop as curate of this parish and surrounding district, thus the rector has been enabled to visit some of the stations at distance from Cooktown. He has also paid visits to the lighthouses at Archer Point and Rocky Island, and is now on a protracted visit to the Coenall Ebagoolah goldfield, some 250 miles distant from Cooktown.

We plead for more realisation by our own people of the presence of the Living and Personal God by His Holy Spirit, a deeper appreciation of the privileges extended to us as members of the ancient and apostolic church of the nation, a greater love for our Blessed Redeemer to Whom we owe all. This can only result in love and unity prevailing among us who are all fighting the common enemy of souls.

CROYDON.

Our Good Friday, a short service for the children was held at ten o'clock, and was well attended. For the second time in the history of the church a three-hours' service was held, with a short address every half hour, people coming and going at intervals. During the last hour we had quite a good congregation proving that there are some of our people who realise the real meaning of the day, and the events, which it commemorates.

In the evening a lantern service was held in the church. Mr. O'Hare having kindly loaned the use of his lantern and slides. The pictures of the "passion play" were slow and interspersed with musical selections. Mrs. Stuart sang "The Holy City" in her usual good style, and Mr. J. Morrison gave a good rendering of "Calvary." Mr. Stewart presided at the organ, and the choir sang some selections from Stainer's "Crucifixion."

The church was more than filled, the pictures and music were thoroughly enjoyed by old and young, and the evening was a fitting conclusion to the day's devotions.

We are greatly indebted to Mr. O'Hare for lending and working the lantern.

Easter Day.—The morning service was well attended. At Evensong the church was full (which is a rare occurrence). Mr. Stewart had taken great pains with the preparation of the musical part of the services. The choir did their part well, and we are much indebted to them and their able leader and their organist for their service on Good Friday and Easter Sunday. The decorations were much admired. Our local paper used the adjective "magnificent" when describing them.

Mrs. Hudson had many willing helpers, amongst whom were Mrs. Maskin, Mrs. Willocks, the Misses Scott, Harries, and Macgregor.

Mrs. Scott kindly lent her handsome pot plants, they added greatly to the beauty of the decorations. Numbers of people who could not come and help, sent flowers and greenery.

The annual vestry meeting was held on a week night, and there was a good attendance of ladies and gentlemen.

Rector's and churchwardens' reports showed a falling off in contributions, chiefly owing to departures of Church members.

Mr. Bechtel was re-elected Rector's warden, and Mr. Kerridge elected people's warden. Messrs. Gregg and Morrison were appointed Rector's councillors and Messrs. Stephens, North, Chandler and Thomas were elected by the parishioners.

A strong ladies' committee was also appointed—Mesdames Bechtel, Maskin, Willocks, Bickerton, and Scott, and Misses Carson, Boynes, Harries, and Nesbitt.

Mr. Eric Frost, our church secretary, has been transferred to Charters Towers. He has done his work most faithfully. We congratulate him on his promotion. He and his mother leave Croydon with the good wishes of all. Mr. Frost was the recipient of a travelling case as a small token of esteem from the committee.

S. JOHNS' GOLDEN GATE.

It is encouraging to be able to write of the improvement in Church work at this centre. The parishioners seem to be waking from their long slumber to a sense of their responsibilities in regard to the furtherance of Christ's Kingdom here on earth.

The Sunday morning services are not very well attended. The evening services are very encouraging.

The Easter services were exceedingly bright and cheerful. The Holy Eucharist was celebrated at 9.30 a.m., when a goodly number availed themselves of the opportunity afforded them in the sweet morning hour to feed on food Divine and to worship their Risen Lord and Master at the highest of all services.

At Evensong the little church was comfortably filled.

On the Tuesday evening in Easter week the Rector gave a lantern service in the Church which was much appreciated and very largely attended.

Our Sunday School is most encouraging, and the Church lately has proved itself far too small for the number of children who attend. We hope the time is not far distant when we shall be able to enlarge it and make it more comfortable.

The choir, under the baton of the rector and the organists, Mr. Wilson and Miss Grant, is making rapid strides towards efficiency. Many thanks are due to Misses Boyle and Usher, as also to Mrs. Duffy, for the interest they have at all times taken in the work of the Church.

MOSSMAN.

On Wednesday, April 19th., the Bishop visited this district and made a rather lengthy stay. He was able to give a Sunday to each of the three centres, Mossman, Port Douglas and Mt. Molloy. At Mossman and Mt. Molloy he administered the rite of Confirmation. There were twelve candidates for confirmation at Mossman and three at Mt. Molloy. A subscription has been started at Mt. Molloy in order to build a Church on the land that has been given us. We are about to put up a fence around the Church property at Mossman. Mr. Spon has most kindly given the posts, which were delivered free of cost. The bell tower has been erected at Mossman and the bell now preaches its short sermon daily to those who have ears to hear.

On Tuesday evening, May 2nd, some 50 or 60 people met in St. David's Church, Mossman, at the invitation of the rector, at what was called a "Parish Tea," partly in honour of the visit of his Lordship the Bishop and partly as a social gathering prior to the annual Easter Church Meeting. After the tea was over the Easter meeting took place, and was attended by a large number of parishioners. The annual report and balance sheet were read. The churchwardens in their report referred to the improvement in the church finances as compared with the previous year. The balance-sheet showed a substantial decrease in liabilities, and a very satisfactory state of things financially.

The rector in his address pointed out the various material wants of the church, among which the most pressing were the lining and painting of the church and the carpeting of the sanctuary. Besides speaking about the improvement of the building he also referred to the improvement of the worship and asked those who could sing to give up some time, during the week, for preparation for the Sunday services.

The Bishop gave a sound, practical and eloquent address upon the parishioners' church duties.

The following officers were elected for the year;—Churchwardens: Messrs. T. T. Devine (rector's) and F. W. Barnard (people's). Parochial Councillors: Messrs. R. D. Rex (rector's), E. Blackburn and G. B. Lock (people's). On Monday, May 8th, His Lordship the Bishop proceeded to Baker's Station, about 12 miles from Mt. Molloy, where he was joined by the Rev. Mr. Gribble on Tuesday evening. The party from Yarrabah Mission Station joined them on Wednesday and the whole party went on their way to the mouth of the Mitchell.

THE DIOCESE.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east, by the Northern Territory on the west, and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19 deg. 30 min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east par. 144 and thence N. to lat. S. 16 deg. 40 min., and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory of South Australia, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 sq. miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 16,500 whites, 7,000 Japanese, Chinese and other aliens, and 35,000 aboriginals. The white population is chiefly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre N. of Cape York.

FINANCE.

The Diocese has no endowment beyond the Bishop's income of £300 per annum.

MISSIONS.

Missions are carried on among the Japanese at Thursday Island, among the S. Sea Islanders at Thursday Island and Mosman, and among the aboriginals on the Mitchell River.

SPECIAL OFFERTORIES.

On Easter Day the offertories are given to the Clergyman of the Parish, and on Good Friday to the Australian Board of Missions.

ANNUAL FIXTURES.

(1) March 31st—Parish accounts to close, and to be prepared for presentation to Easter meeting.

(2) Week preceding the Annual Easter Meeting—Roll Book to be revised to date, and copy thereof to be forwarded to the Bishop.

(3) Easter Meeting to be held within twenty-one days after Easter Day; for election of Churchwardens, passing accounts, etc. N.B.—Copies of Easter Report and Balance Sheets to be sent to the Bishop ("Parishes Regulation Canon," clauses 6, 10, and 24).

BUILDING REGULATIONS.

Plans for the building or alteration of Churches, Church Rooms, and Rectories must be submitted to the Bishop for approval before any contract is entered into, but such approval does not imply any Diocesan responsibility for the cost of the same.

No alteration may be made in any consecrated building without a faculty from the Bishop.

MARRIAGE REGULATIONS.

1. The clergy are recommended to the Registrar-General by the Bishop that they may be registered for the solemnization of marriages and no clergyman may solemnize marriage until so recommended and registered. This registration gives the clergy no right to celebrate marriages otherwise than as the custom and laws of the Church allow.

2. No marriage may be celebrated otherwise than by banns or by Episcopal license.

3. Clergy who hold the Bishop's leave to issue his licenses are termed Surrogates.

4. No Surrogate may issue a license for or any clergyman celebrate the marriage of any divorced person whatsoever without reference to the Bishop, and permission obtained from him.

5. No marriage may be celebrated otherwise than in a Church or accustomed place of public worship except by express permission of the Bishop; provided that in urgent cases founded on special circumstances, when reference to the Bishop is practically impossible, the clergyman shall act on his discretion, and forthwith report the circumstances to the Bishop.

6. Surrogates may not issue licenses for the celebration of marriages in Churches other than those within their own parishes or district but where the clergyman of a parish or district has not been licensed as a Surrogate, application must be made to the Surrogate appointed to issue licenses for the celebration of marriage within that parish or district.

7. The authorised fee for the Bishop's license is £3 3s. The Surrogate is authorised to retain for his own use this fee, with the exception of 10s. 6d., which is payable to the Church Management Fund. Where only £2 2s. or smaller sum is paid, the Surrogate is authorised to retain three-fourths of the fee paid.

8. Quarterly returns must be made of a marriages celebrated, and the fees due to the Diocese must be transmitted at the same time.

9. No fee may be demanded for marriage by banns, and if any free-will offerings are made in such cases they may be entirely retained by the clergyman.

deck. The boat came to recover two prisoners who had made their escape and after incredible hardships reached Daru. Fortunately for them the Government Resident determined to give them fair play and they were mixed up with other prisoners at the gaol and when lined up the Dutch warders and guards were unable to identify them.

From our anchorage we had a beautiful view of Thursday Island with its houses, palms and fleet of pearling luggers at anchor nestling under the green hills topped by the frowning forts. After tea we had evensong in the cabin. Our crew of S. Sea Islanders was a new one, but it was pleasant to see each boy bring his own prayer and hymn book, join in the well known responses and read the psalms in a slow ing seas, and the host of islands to the north and east with the silvery channels between them. Soon after my arrival at the two houses we had Sunday School, the three houses turning out 20 children old enough to attend. Evidently the depopulation of Australia does not hold good here. The children were well taught and it was a pleasure to catechise them and distribute the prizes for the past year. As evening fell the sea to the west became a mass of golden light in which one could just get a glimpse of the black outline of Booby Island 14 miles away, and in the east the reflections clothed the islands in a golden mist, out of which we presently saw a steamer creeping, depriving our evening service of the presence of the pilot and his men. Nevertheless we had a hearty service up aloft in spite of the nor-west monsoon which began to howl round the buildings, and I descended the hill in the moonlight with part of our congregation from below and got back on board about 9.30 p.m. The anchorage is perfectly sheltered at this season but during the night it blew so hard that I was driven off the deck where I was sleeping into the cabin. We were off at 7 a.m. en route for Friday Island, where I had told the lepers to expect me, having been down on Friday night with the doctor to take a funeral, a weird scene in the darkness. We had to anchor a long way out as the bay is very shallow and I had a somewhat lumpy pull ashore in the dinghy. After a service in which the responses and singing were most hearty and inspiring, I had out in front the 14 candidates for confirmation and examined them. Tom, one of their members, had undertaken to teach them from a simple catechism on the subject. I listened to the answers as they went steadily through the first half of the book and was amazed at the accuracy with which they had learnt everything. Slow as they are to learn and memorise it must have meant im-

TRIP TO GOODE AND FRIDAY ISLANDS.

BY THE BISHOP.

I went on board the "Francis Pritt" on Friday afternoon. We tried to beat down Goode Island but wind and tide were too strong for us to pass Vivian Point and after a day of hours of vain attempt we anchored at night under Prince of Wales Island. I did so a Dutch Gunboat, the "Valk," in painted a cheerful white instead of the prevalent neutral tint. These boats are armed with armament and have every convenience for a tropical climate, the living sleeping rooms practically occupying the painstaking voice. Next morning after an early cup of cocoa we made a start again and were two hours slowly beating past the point and it was eleven on Sunday morning before we reached Goode Island too late for the service I had arranged to hold on shore. Several luggers and schooners were lying there and I arranged for Mr. Field, our skipper, to hold a service on board the schooner Norna at night while I was ashore. In the afternoon accompanied by the Port Pilot's children I climbed the long hill up to the lighthouse and signal station from which one gets a magnificent view of the great expanse of ocean to the west with the reefs off Friday and Prince of Wales marked by breaking seas, and the host of islands to the north and east with the silvery channels between them. Soon after my arrival at the two houses we had Sunday School, the three houses turning out 20 children old enough to attend. Evidently the depopulation of Australia does not hold good here. The children were well taught and it was a pleasure to catechise them and distribute the prizes for the past year. As evening fell the sea to the west became a mass of golden light in which one could just get a glimpse of the black outline of Booby Island 14 miles away, and in the east the reflections clothed the islands in a golden mist, out of which we presently saw a steamer creeping, depriving our evening service of the presence of the pilot and his men. Nevertheless we had a hearty service up aloft in spite of the nor-west monsoon which began to howl round the buildings, and I descended the hill in the moonlight with part of our congregation from below and got back on board about 9.30 p.m. The anchorage is perfectly sheltered at this season but during the night it blew so hard that I was driven off the deck where I was sleeping into the cabin. I listened to the answers as they went steadily through the first half of the book and was amazed at the accuracy with which they had learnt everything. Slow as they are to learn and memorise it must have meant im-

of free and busy life. It was interesting to notice the change in the men themselves. When I first used to hold services and preach down here before any had been baptised the congregation used to come untidy in rags and squalor. Now each man was shaved and clean and dressed in his best and neatest clothes, making even the ravages of disease seem less noticeable. I left with a promise to try to obtain for them a Church bell which they much need and was back in Thursday Island by about eleven o'clock, to find the unpleasant news that a number of plague rats had been found in the stores across the street from the Church grounds.

Through the Waters.

For thirty hours the man had been sitting in the fork of a tree, almost without motion. All day the yellow flood swirled by, carrying its spoil upon its breast, great logs of wood that wallowed and plunged, and lifted up unexpected arms as they turned from side to side; carcasses of horses and cattle, still and deeply sank; fruit trees with the fruit ripe and inviting to the hungry watcher; household goods and utensils; part of a house itself; a huge tree with roots and branches looming out, and bringing his heart to mouth as it hung for a moment over his frail refuge, and then swung off down stream. Once the body of a man, with wide, staring eyes, passed within a few feet; and again he saw, a hundred yards off, the colour of a child's frock; and through it all the ceaseless drip of the rain, as it swept in grey, misty columns across the stream. The night had been the worst of all; the noise of the river as it whirled against the tree grew till it beat in his ear an intolerable din; the darkness grew deeper until it was an impenetrable pall, until he could not see his own hand; out of the night came strange sounds, weird gurgling sobs as the water sucked itself into eddies; dull thuds as timber struck the trees; ceasing every now and then to fall again with redoubled violence. Once or twice he heard sudden, shrieking cries, as some night-bird swept past; once a great shock nearly threw him from his post; and once he heard the hiss of a snake from some floating bough as it wriggled past him higher up the tree. He seemed to be buried in a living, moving grave; would it never end? Would the moaning darkness never cease to rush past? He could scarcely refrain himself from the impulse to fling himself into the water. At last the darkness became less dark; slowly the grey, miserable dawn appeared, and another hopeless day begun. More timber and now and then a dead beast floated by, but nothing living. When would it end? His head was bewildered; another huge log came sweeping down on his refuge, but he felt no terror, only gazed at it in stupid wonder as it hung a moment in the balance and rolled past within an inch of his involuntary extended arm. So passed the day slowly and wearily until noon, when he noticed a hundred yards above him a small plank on which stood a frightened kitten. When she saw him she mewed pitifully and ran towards the nearest end of the plank. It was the first living thing he had seen, for the snake had gone as mysteriously as it had come. He watched anxiously to see whether the plank would pass within reach. There was an appeal about the miserable animal which went to his heart. Why should it look for help to one as miserable and helpless as itself? At first he thought that would come straight for the tree. Then a current caught it, and he saw that it would pass at least a dozen feet away. The kitten redoubled its cries. The man hesitated a moment, then, overpowered by some strange influence, he leaped into the water as the tiny creature came opposite to him. He could only swim a few strokes, and his limbs were so cramped and stiff that he could hardly move; but instinctively he threw his arms and breast over the plank, which partly supported him. As he did so he felt the kitten's sharp claws as it sprang on to his head. He felt a sense of relief; anything was better than that miserable watching on the tree. Then the bewilderment returned again. He struggled to remember where he was, what he was doing, and then remembered no more. He was recalled to life by the persistent mewing of the kitten: he opened his eyes and found that the plank was jammed in a bush, on which his head rested, and his feet were touching the ground. With a great effort he struggled into a standing position, and but the kitten inside his sopping shirt. The rain had ceased, and only three hundred yards away he could see dry land. Slowly he staggered towards it, and reaching it, fell a second time into unconsciousness. When he awoke the kitten was gone. His first feeling was one of blind anger. He felt as if his mate had betrayed him. Then he laughed hysterically and struggled to his feet. As he did so he heard the tinkle of a horse-bell, and staggering through the bushes he came on a waggon, a tree, and by it two men who were laughing loudly and playing with a kitten, which, dry and purring, had left all care behind. The man checked himself in an oath, laughed again, and made his way to the group.

Bishop Stanton.

The following sermon in memory of the late Bishop of Newcastle was preached by the Bishop in the Cathedral Thursday Island on Sunday, December 10th, 1905.

"The Memory of the just is blessed"—Prov. x, 7.

Few of the elder residents of the North are likely to forget the name of George Henry Stanton, first Bishop of North Queensland, who passed peacefully away at his official home in Morpeth last Monday night, but in memory of a great and loveable personality, and for the sake of those who knew him not, I would say something of his life and character.

He was born in 1834, some four years before the accession of Queen Victoria, and from childhood his thoughts seem to have turned towards the ministry of the Church. When about 18 his mind received a strong impetus from the writings of an earnest Evangelical writer of the day, and he made a resolve, which he afterwards renewed on every successive birthday to the end of his life, to devote himself entirely to the service of Almighty God. Educated at Hertford College, Oxford, he was ordained deacon in 1858 and priest the following year, and after serving for nine years as an assistant curate he was appointed Vicar of St. Giles-in-the-fields in 1867. Here he spent nine years, the late Bishop Dr. Webber being Vicar of the adjoining Parish of St. John's, Red Lion Square.

In 1878 he was selected as the first Bishop of the newly formed diocese of North Queensland, then and throughout his episcopate including the Queensland part of the present diocese of Carpentaria. It is characteristic that his first action on hearing of his appointment was to go to a riding school and a swimming bath and arrange to be taught to ride and swim. Before leaving England he attended the Lambeth Conference of 1878 and was deeply interested in its proceedings. On turning to his diocese he found himself confronted with the gravest difficulties. To begin with the Bishoprick Endowment Fund was almost non-existent, a sum of about £1300 being all the capital available. Diocesan funds there were none, and, as soon as the Bishop was appointed, the Bishop of Sydney, of whose diocese North Queensland had formed part, withdrew all his clergy, leaving every parish but one vacant, and the new Bishop found himself faced by an expenditure of over £900 for passages of clergy and other initial expenses. He set to work with characteristic energy, collected £3370 before leaving England, and by 1881 the Bishoprick endowment was completed.

On his arrival in Townsville the diocese had to be organised from the beginning with clergy and bishop alike new to their work. I need not here dwell on the thirteen years of his administration of his Northern diocese, how he built up the Church from the beginning with unceasing labour, how he traversed the country from end to end when means of transit were far more primitive than they are even at present, how in all places and under all circumstances he preserved the most cheerful good-humour, making a jest of all hardships and discomforts, how he displayed the keen interest of the truly great mind in every person and thing with which he came in contact, how he used to the uttermost his own private means in gifts, only too generous, to the Church, how he came to be the most considerable figure, not only ecclesiastically but publicly and socially in the North, without bating one jot of his wonderful humility and deference to and consideration for the feelings of others; all these things are too well known to many of you for me to need to repeat them.

In 1891 he was elected to the see of Newcastle, and after much hesitation accepted the change. While I have no right to say that he ever regretted the step yet it is certain that he that he missed the freer and less formal atmosphere of the North and that his heart ever went back in affectionate remembrance to the scenes of his earlier labours. In his new diocese his labours were as constant as of old, and in late years the long drives to country parishes were a severe strain on his advancing years. On the Sunday before his fatal attack of illness he drove, though over 71 years of age, 40 miles in an open buggy and took three Confirmations, hard work for a young and vigorous man. As senior Bishop of the Australian Church an additional weight was lent to the influence he had acquired from his wise sagacity, his powerful grasp of great problems and his large hearted charity. He was frequently in Sydney aiding the Primate, and adding the cares of the whole Church to those of his own diocese. Fourteen years he administered his large and important diocese, and then God gave him rest as he would best have liked it to come, in the midst of his work and amid his own people.

We have spoken of his life; it remains to say somewhat of his character. Probably what most struck strangers was his extreme friendliness to all with whom he came in contact, his almost effusive welcome of mere acquaintances. This sometimes exposed him, and not altogether unnaturally to the accusation of unreality or affectation, yet in reality it was neither. He had no two manners. He was the same to his intimate friends as he was to others. His heart was really larger than most men's, and the charity and kindness that came out in his words and manner were not assumed. He was always ready to make them good by acts, and countless kindnesses were done without ostentation and without hope of return.

I think that what most struck those who knew him was the wideness of his vision and the clearness with which he saw the great things through the little, the strength and certainty with which he grasped the underlying verities. This power came out in his sermons, his speeches, his Synod addresses and his conversation. His sermons held men spellbound. He had left behind the Evangelicalism of earlier days without adopting the position of a High Churchman. If it is needful to define his position, he was probably more a Broad Churchman than anything else, but he had a keen appreciation of the need and value of decency, order and beauty in worship, and his mind was so large and tolerant that it is almost impossible to class him with any party. His theme was nearly always a large one "Man does not live by bread alone but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God" was a favourite text. The attributes of God, the workings of providence, the blindness of unfaith, the reasonableness of Christianity, the supreme

The Resurrection.

We are about to celebrate the greatest festival of the Christian Year—the Resurrection from the dead of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ; and it may be well to consider very briefly what the objects of the Resurrection were.

First, it was meant to be a convincing proof of the divine authority of Christ, the seal and witness to His life and teaching. He Himself constantly referred to it as such; it was the Resurrection that transformed His faint-hearted and trembling followers into the confident and fearless witnesses who changed the beliefs of the world. The Resurrection is still the central fact of the Christian faith. All attempts to explain it away, to give a mere allegorical or spiritual meaning, are practically attempts to depose Christ from His divine right into merely the best of men, a Revelation of God in no deeper sense than that in which every good man is a revelation of his Maker. Men question the Resurrection just because they instinctively feel that it is the seal and proof of Christ's authority.

Secondly, Christ rose in order to teach and instruct his disciples. A great part of His teaching was not intelligible to them until it had been exemplified and explained by His death and rising again. The forty days was full of teaching and exhortation, that could not have been given earlier because the disciples were not in the mental attitude to receive or understand it. When we compare the attitude of the Apostles before the Crucifixion and after the Ascension, we see how utterly different it was, not only in courage but in understanding. The former could not have been, the latter were the teachers of the world.

Thirdly, Christ rose from the dead in order to found His Church and to commission its leaders to act in His Name. Before the Crucifixion there was nothing that could be called a Christian Church. There were a few disciples and apostles under instruction, a considerable number of people moved and stirred to a new life by His wonderful teaching, but no organised Church, no rules, services, or ordinances. Within a short time of the Ascension, we find all these things have assumed their permanent and for the most part final form. We find the Apostles vested with a spiritual authority and ordaining others to the same. We find an infant Church possessing, if in germ only, yet fully, all that she was afterwards to become. No wonder that we hail the Resurrection Day as the greatest of festivals, or that our Church orders that her every loyal son should celebrate it by the highest ordinance of Christ, by receiving in faith and thanksgiving the Body of the Lord.

The Mitchell River

Owing to the wet season and the cessation of the mail via Normanton, we have not had much news from the Mitchell; but the last letters dated January 6th were very cheerful, and Rev. E. S. Chase, with the help of Mr. Williams and Bob Ling, is evidently holding the fort gallantly.

A grand dinner was held on Christmas Day, and the menu of wild duck, turkey and plum pudding sounds quite civilised. The rain so far had not been very heavy, and they were pushing on with the construction of a house on piles before the heaviest wet set in. The school work was progressing and relations with the adjoining stations seemed to be satisfactory.

The urgent want of the mission is workers. Surely it would be a disgrace to the Church if the work should fail for want of men to carry it on, when other conditions are all so favourable.

Owing to the unsatisfactory character of the mail service, it will be as well for letters, etc., for the mission to be sent to Bishop's College, Thursday Island, whence they can go down by the "Francis Pritt."

Mr. Chase writes that the whaleboat is of the greatest possible service. He does not know what they would have done without it.

Diocesan Council.

A meeting of the Diocesan Council was held on January 29th at Bishops College, Thursday Island. Present—The Bishop (in the chair) Revs. J. Jones and W. M. Wilkinson, Messrs. Ogilvie and O'Brien. The Chairman stated that he had appointed Rev. W. M. Wilkinson to fill the vacancy caused by the retirement of Rev. G. H. Smith. The Diocesan accounts for 1905 were read and adopted on the motion of Mr. O'Brien seconded by Mr. Ogilvie; and Mr. A. Murray was appointed auditor. Mr. H. Milman was elected a member of the Diocesan Council in place of Mr. H. G. Hodder resigned on leaving. It was resolved on the motion of Mr. O'Brien, seconded by Rev. J. Jones, that the sum of £100 belonging to the Bishopric Endowment Fund should be transferred from the General Account to the Savings Bank.

Diocesan Accounts.

We would draw attention to the Diocesan accounts published as usual in this number. We have to note a great increase in the amount received during the year, £1257 18s. 8d., as compared with £746 17s. 11d. last year. This is partly owing to two generous gifts of large amount, but also to an increase of collections on behalf of the diocese from £57 9s. 3d. to £201 11s. 5d., showing a much wider interest in its work.

On the side of expenditure, the college expenses and clergy travelling expenses are considerably less (£269 9s. 10d. and £68 10s. 1d.) as compared with £324 11s. 10d. and £81 9s.). The expenditure on missions to the coloured races has increased from £130 8s. 7d. to £200 15s. 8d. The Francis Pritt has cost £78 8s. in addition to the money received for that purpose. A large portion of the maintenance expenses (£49 17s. 7d.) has been credited to the Mitchell River, as they were incurred in its service.

It must be noted that the balance of £204 7s. 3d. in the hands of the Brisbane treasurer includes £100 belonging to the Bishopric Endowment Fund. It has been resolved to transfer this to a separate account in the Savings Bank. Our actual balance, deducting this and the debit balance at Thursday Island of £7 14s., is £136 9s. 11d.

We are profoundly grateful for the help that we have received during the past year, but with extra expenses of the maintenance of the Francis Pritt and our increased missionary responsibilities, we shall need it quite as much or even more during the present year.

It will be observed that there are no office expenses beyond stamps and telegrams. This is owing to the very large amount of labour voluntarily bestowed on Diocesan business by Rev. J. Jones, B.A., Diocesan Treasurer.

The Bishop's Movements.

The Bishop leaves Thursday Island on March 27th, arriving at Normanton on 30th; Leaves Normanton on April 2nd for Georgetown, arrives Georgetown April 4th; leaves April 7th; arrives at Croydon April 8th, and commences mission the same evening. Leaves Croydon Easter Monday and visits Burketown by the Francis Pritt if possible. Then to the Mitchell River. Arrives Thursday Island about May 5th. Leaves for Cooktown May 15th; Visits Coen and Ebagoolah and Maytown; Leaves Cooktown June 17th; arriving at Thursday Island for the Conference on June 19th.

Cyclone at Croydon.

News has been received of a terrible cyclone at Croydon which has wrecked the town; though happily there was no loss of life. The storm began on Saturday evening, March 3rd, and on the Sunday increased to hurricane force with floods of rain. Most of the houses were unroofed or blown down, and the heavy rain deluged their contents. The Church, large and well built as it is, was blown off the piles, and will cost a large sum to replace, at least £150. The Rectory was also damaged to the amount of £50. It is needless to point out what a severe blow this is to the Croydon Churchpeople who with a heavy debt on the Church had hard work to make both ends meet. We hope that sympathy will be shown in a practical way by liberal subscriptions, which may be sent to the Rev. W. Hudson, Croydon, or to the Diocesan Secretary. Special offertories have been already given by several churches in the diocese.

Some Books.

"Asia and Europe." By Meredith Townsend 3s. 6d.—This is a most fascinating book, and of especial interest at the present time. It goes as far as any book we have seen to help us to understand the profound differences between East and West, and the difficulties of permanent union. Missionary questions are treated with fairness and discrimination. Of especial interest are the articles, "Will England retain India?" "The great Arabian" "The standard of Comfort."

We cordially recommend "Our Lord's Resurrection," by Rev. W. J. S. Simpson, Longmans 1905. Price 5s. It is a thoroughly capable and up-to-date account of the evidence for the Resurrection by one who is fully alive to the most modern criticism. If any one has an idea that criticism has in any way weakened the evidence for the central fact of our Christian belief, we can confidently recommend this book as an antidote.

"The Criticism of the Fourth Gospel" William Sanday, D.D. Clarendon Press 1905. Price 7s. 6d.—This is an exceptionally valuable book. Dr. Sanday has a European reputation as scholar and theologian, and he defends the conservative view as to St. John's authorship of the Fourth Gospel with a weight of learning and a bright and most interesting style. Perhaps the most valuable part of his book is that in which he criticises the critics, and shows that many starting from a preconceived opinion are more solicitous to a score a point like a lawyer with a brief, than to seek soberly for the truth. Professor Sanday is by no means blindly conservative; but argues with much power that the Fourth Gospel must be the work of an eyewitness to the events he describes. We should like to have seen the resemblance which he notes between Ignatius and St. John set out more fully by examples. It seems almost impossible to believe that Ignatius was not saturated with the phrases and ways of thought of St. John.

"Mon Oncle Celestin" (Paris 1904), is another of M. Ferdinand Fabre's interesting studies of the French clergy, sympathetic but not indiscriminating. The tragedy arises from the kindheartedness of a saintly old priest who takes a young girl as servant in defiance of regulations to save her from a drunken father and brutal stepmother. The most interesting character is the young nephew of the priest, a true boy, not too good to be unreal. As in L'Abbe Tigrane, M. Fabre gives a high character to the clergy, but points out pitilessly how the close ecclesiastical organisation leads to petty tyranny and servility, and sometimes to pride and self-seeking. These books are an interesting supplement to those of M. Yves-Guyot.

"Christian and Catholic" by the Bishop of Fond-du-lac (Dr. C. C. Grafton)—Longmans 1905—is a beautifully written and forcible book without being needlessly controversial. The Roman claims are trenchantly dealt with. The three divisions are Christian, Catholic, Catholic not Roman. The Church teaching is, it is needless to say, very sound.

"The Education of Jesus." By Prof. Ramsay. 2s. 6d.—Everyone should read this beautiful little book. It avoids the somewhat reverent touch to which we are accustomed in books of this character, and ends with a most clear confession of faith in the Divine Son of God. It is needless to say that Prof. Ramsay has a keen eye for every point of geography in its relation to life.

Personalia.

His Grace the Archbishop of Brisbane will pay an official visit to Thursday Island on or about August 1st.

Rev. E. Harris, D.D., the Bishop's Commissary in England, hopes to visit the diocese in June or July.

Miss F. Buchanan returns to Thursday Island about the middle of March.

Rev. L. J. Trevor, M.A., Oxon., has been accepted for work in the diocese, and will arrive from England in June.

We congratulate Rev. J. Jones, Sub-dean of the Cathedral, on the birth of a son and heir on Saturday, February 24th.

We welcome Mr. H. Milman, Government Resident at Thursday Island, as a member of the Diocesan Council.

John Wesely has been appointed to the charge of the Francis Pritt in the place of Mr. A. Field resigned. He is an experienced seaman and has had many years experience of the Straits in charge of a diving lugger.

Miss White, who has been staying at Charles Towers since December, hopes to return in April. Her health is very greatly improved.

MR. FIELD.

We deeply regret that owing to unforeseen circumstances Mr. E. A. Field has had to resign the command of the Francis Pritt. Mr. Field has practically given his services and has bestowed an amount of care and thought on the boat. The Bishop, in accepting Mr. Field's resignation, expressed his sense of the obligation which we were under for his past services, and the loyal way in which he had subordinated his own interests to those of the Church.

New Guinea Children.

The New Guinea boys and girls have crazes for certain amusements just as white children have. One craze will last a couple of months or perhaps longer, and then it will be succeeded by another, and so on, all the year round. At one time every child you meet will be making a cat's cradle. No matter if she is carrying a heavy load on her back, her hand will be disengaged and busy. The boys are equally keen on this, and some are very clever at it. During "cat-cradle season," when school begins it is quite a business collecting the string from the various children. At another time toy spears will be the rage, and occasionally these prove really dangerous. Bows and arrows are another delight, but quite the most popular thing to make is a schooner. The schooner craze seems to come more often than any other, and you then see boat building going on everywhere, while any odd scrap of calico, white or coloured, is eagerly seized upon for the sails. The prettiest craze is flower decoration. Boys, as well as girls, adorn themselves this way, and to some faces it is very becoming, a starry crown of white flowers, or circle within circle of the tiniest cream-coloured petals. When they stick large blossoms of hibiscus in their ears the effect is not pleasing, but any colour on the hair looks particularly well. Often, too, a large spray of flowers or leaves will be stuck into their armlets, and these show up beautifully against the dark skin. Next to flower decoration, but less attractive, is the feather craze. A white pigeon, or cockatoo is shot, and an hour afterwards every child on the place, big and little, will be adorned with the plumage. Even an ordinary farm-yard fowl will supply adornment to the whole station for days afterwards.

Forms of Prayer.

The Bishop has received the following interesting letter from Lord Nelson with regard to the "Forms of Prayer" referred to in the last "Carpentarian."

Trafalgar, Salisbury.

My dear Bishop,—I am much obliged to you for your letter with its two enclosures. The Salvation Army Altar Service is very interesting, and I was very pleased to find that they did not attempt any parody of the Sacrament by lay hands. They are teaching as a good work the duty of all members of Christ, lay as much as the clergy, to work to increase the kingdom of our Lord by winning their brethren and sisters back to Christ. This witness to the duty of self-sacrificing love for the sake of others is very noble. At present they have no idea of the Sacraments as a continuation of the work of the Incarnation. In time that also may come.

"The Presbyterian Prayer" book is also most interesting. I have a Presbyterian friend in Scotland who holds all the truth of the Sacrament, and though he firmly believes in the Presbyterian succession would accept Episcopacy to-morrow, not the Prince Bishops of the middle ages, but the Bishop attended with his council of Presbyters. We are just on the verge of the general election. We shall have a hard fight to preserve denominational teachers for our Church schools, but as an Ecclesia Docens we must defend this right at all risks. The current idea that Jews and Roman Catholics have a faith that must be preserved, but that the Protestant Establishment has none, will soon leave the Roman Catholics in complete possession of the field. Without the foundation truths of the Creed innumerable heresies will crop up on every side. The Free Churches have no power to keep whole the deposit of truth committed to us, and if the Church does not maintain her teaching power as a Church we shall soon become a nation of unbelievers."

importance of character, these and such like were themes which he unfolded with trenchant and unanswerable logic and enriched with a wealth of illustration in which I doubt if he was equalled by any living preacher. In his speeches he gave full play to his marvellous powers of observation, illustration and quaint humour to such an extent that his more serious hearers, while carried away by the infection of his gaiety, were apt to regret that comparatively little time remained for those more weighty subjects on which he could speak, when he would, as a master in Israel. It is, however, fair to remember that his style was like his illustrations, original and spontaneous.

His Synod addresses were always listened to and read with profound attention. Written in strong nervous English they were remarkable on the one hand for their minute accuracy on points of detail and on the other for wide sweep and strong master touch of their references to ecclesiastical and social problems.

His conversation was always interesting and often illuminating, and, however bright and sparkling it might be, it never wandered very far from those great first principles which always occupied the foremost place in his mind.

In spite of the activity of his life he was essentially a student, and although he suffered much from imperfect sight every fresh contribution to modern thought was eagerly read and shrewdly judged. He did not confine himself to any one line of thought. Now he was carefully annotating Karl Marx, or pointing out the joints in the armour of "Scientific Meliorism," now he was criticising the latest biblical criticism or deep in moral philosophy, now full of the most recent discovery of science, then plunged in some problem of archaeology. His keen intellect enabled him to grasp any subject and he was deeply interested in all that bore in any way on the life and character of man. I do not think that he cared for science in itself but simply as it bore on the problems of human life.

Although a man of such varied gifts, he was simple and humble as a child. Abstemious and plain in his personal habits to a marked degree, he used to give his friends pain by the persistent way in which he always insisted in putting himself in the background. He would never allow anyone to carry his bag and I remember that when travelling with him some 17 years ago we had to sleep in a room in which was a bed and a makeshift on the floor. The Bishop retired first and when I arrived I found him on the floor and apparently asleep, having left the bed for me. I should be inclined to say that an undue depreciation of himself was his chief fault as a bishop. Over and over again he would listen patiently to others and refrain from humility or the fear of exercising undue influence, from expressing his own opinion while all the time men were waiting for a lead from one who by wisdom and position was, they knew, far more qualified to give it than they were themselves. At the same time if any wrong were done, especially to the poor and helpless, his indignation was intense and expressed in vehement language.

Of all that he was to those who had the happiness of knowing him intimately it is not becoming for me to speak. He was at once a father and an inspiration to his clergy. It is a remarkable fact that out of the little band of ten priests who were present at his last synod in the diocese of North Queensland no less than three have since been made bishops of the Church in Australia. I for one cannot think without emotion of one who drew forth whatever capacity of service I may have possessed, who loaded me with undeserved kindnesses, and gave me the gift of a friendship that I should not have ventured to seek.

What lessons may be drawn from the life and character of this Father in God who has just passed to his rest from the midst of his toils?

First, I think we may note that it is possible for a powerful and original thinker, who made a special study of all the assaults on the Christian faith, to remain a humble and faithful believer in the old, old Gospel of Jesus Christ. In these days of unrest it is strengthening to know of one who to the last days of his life faced every new problem courageously as it arose and found nothing in any to shake his well reasoned faith.

Secondly, we may note for our encouragement that the high qualities by which he edified the Church were not simply a natural endowment. No doubt he was highly endowed by nature, but the most of his qualities were acquired by constant study and ceaseless labour. His profession was his life. I do not think I ever saw him take up a book for mere amusement or unless he thought it had some bearing on the great purpose of his life.

Thirdly, we may take example from his abundant charity and the greatness of his heart towards all men. It was this which gave him an influence without which his skill and learning would have been of little avail. Charity never faileth, and the charity of George Henry Stanton was like a clear deep well spring bubbling up from the very heart of his being.

Lastly and dominating the whole man was the self-dedication to the service of God. He cared to do nothing, know nothing, do nothing but in so far as it might be to God's honour and the advancement of His kingdom on earth.

Brethren, it is good for us to have had such a man among us and to have still with us the inspiration of the memory of his life. Let us thank God for His servant departed hence in the faith and fear of His Holy Name. We cannot doubt that the rest to which God has called him is not the rest of idleness which would have no attraction for a nature like his. Rather let us remember the words of an eloquent writer "The rest of inaction is but the quiet of a stone, or the stillness of the grave or the exhaustion of a spent and feeble nature. But there is a nobler rest than this. There is rest in health, there is rest in the repose of the exquisitely balanced power; there is rest to the desiring faculties when they find the thing desired; there is rest in the rapture of congenial employment; rest in the flow of joyful strength; rest in the swift glide of the stream where it meets with no impediment. Such is the rest of the glorified, perfect beings in a perfect world, rejoicing in their native element, having no weakness within, and no resisting force without to check the outflow and expression of their loving natures. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord, for" they rest not from their works, but only "from their labours."

A picture was recently exhibited at Tokio entitled "The Lost Child". It represented the four figures of Confucius, Loatze, Buddha and Christ and in the midst a lost and doubting child.

DIOCESAN CONFERENCE.

The third biennial conference of the Diocese of Carpentaria will be held at Thursday Island on June 19th to 25th. The members are all licensed clergy and one lay representative from each parish who must be a communicant, but need not be resident in the parish. These lay representatives should be elected at the Easter meeting of the parishioners. The following is the order of the business for the conference:—

Bishop's Address.

Presentation of the following for consideration:

Audited Financial Statement for the years 1904, 1905.

Parochial Statistics for the years 1904, 1905.

Terrier of Church Lands.

Boundaries of Parishes.

Votes of thanks to S.P.G., S.P.C.K., C.C.S., Rev. E. T. Palgrave, M.A., Lord Beauchamp, Mrs. Pritt, Bishop's Commissaries, and Miss Paige.

Committee of Whole on Diocesan Regulations.

Sunday School Course for 1907.

Consideration of Transfer of Deeds.

Ratification of Provincial Constitution.

Acceptance of Canons of General Synod.

Disposal of Douglas Memorial Fund.

Reconsideration of Questions for Pan-Anglican Congress.

Election of Members of Diocesan Conference.

Election of Representatives for Provincial Synod.

Resolution re late Bishop Stanton.

Consideration of Pan-Anglican Congress Offering.

Any other business of which due notice shall be given.

It will be seen that many important matters are already down for discussion, and others will doubtless arise. The Bishop had invited His Grace the Archbishop of Brisbane to be present, but he is unable to visit us until the end of July.

Rev. E. A. Peacock, M.A., who was to have been present, has been appointed Archdeacon of Warrnambool, and has to defer his visit to us.

The conference is the only opportunity we have of discussing diocesan affairs, and we trust it will be fully taken advantage of.

GILBERT, BISHOP OF CARPENTARIA.

FIRST SERVICE ON HORN ISLAND BY THE BISHOP.

On Sunday morning, February 18th after taking the early celebration at the Cathedral, I went on board the Francis Pritt and we were soon beating up to the east against a fresh breeze. The boat had just been cleaned and showed her sailing powers to the full. It was a most lovely morning and the eye travelled with delight from the nearer islands, clothed in their greenest wet season robes, to the far-off mountains of Moa and the peak of Naghi, blue against blue-white background of the sky. We had to make a number of tacks and did not arrive at King Point until after 1 p.m. As soon as we had had dinner I landed with two of the boys and set out to look for the track which leads to the little mining camp, about 3½ miles distant. We soon found a good road and I sent the boys back and set off alone with my bag. The sun was tremendously hot, and as I came under the shelter of the big double-peaked hill which gives its name to the island it got hotter and hotter, until at last I came to a little creek and caught sight of an iron roof, and knew that I was at my destination. I was most hospitably received by Mr. Cockburn and his stalwart young sons, and after a cup of tea I had a look at the melancholy ruins of the big battery, and also the efficient little plant with which work is now being done. The ore lies on the surface and about half a dozen white and as many coloured men are employed and seem hopeful about the future. After tea we all gathered for service in the dining room, a motly assemblage including, in addition to the white men, three Japanese a Manilaman, a South Sea Islander, a Chinaman and a pure-blooded negro. We ventured on one hymn with but moderate success, but the deficiencies in this way were made up for by the heartiness of the responses, the congregation also joining in all the prayers—a novel, but under the circumstances desirable innovation. After the conclusion of the service Mr. Cockburn made a little speech, very appropriate if somewhat unconventional, and presented an offering on behalf of the congregation. It was said a great satisfaction to them to feel that they were not altogether forgotten in their out-of-the-way camp. After service we had a long talk about many things and I was provided with an excellent bed and mosquito net, which I liked if it did not altogether exclude my unwelcome winged visitors. In spite of everything to make me comfortable I could not sleep, but lay listening to the howling of the wind and the roll of the breakers, congratulating myself that we had anchored under the shelter of the point instead of off the settlement as I had at first intended. Clouds drifted over with a light sprinkle of rain, and about 3 a.m. the moon rose with a watery light, and a promise that the dawn would come some time. I was not sorry when the cook came round soon after 4 a.m. and after a cup of tea and a roll I bade adieu to my hospitable entertainers and set off at 6.30 a.m. to walk back to the boat through the morning which was already beginning to grow warm. I found one of the crew shore cutting wood, and putting off through the rollers which were beginning to come in with the rising tide I finished my breakfast aboard. With tide and a strong wind in our favour we raced homewards as fast as steam, and forty minutes later were at our anchorage, and I landed at once to answer my mail. Unfortunately the anchorage was very crowded and in shifting later to a safer place the anchor was carried away and before anything could be done a strong wind and tide swept the boat ashore, fortunately in a soft place and it was next day before she got off again.

THE FRANCIS PRITT.
During the past quarter the "Francis Pritt" has been more or less laid up owing to the wet season and stormy winds. The skipper has been very busy painting, repairing, fumigating and generally getting everything in order for the first trip to the Mitchell at the end of March or beginning of April. Some short trips have been made for the purpose of holding services at Goode Island, Friday Island, etc. On Sunday, January 7th, the Pritt with many other boats had a narrow escape of going ashore. The Field had just returned on board after morning service when the wind with no warning the barometer began to blow a gale from the south-east and most of the boats to drag their anchors. The crew being ashore Mr. Field was unable to get out the heavy anchor, and the boat dragged in against the head of the jetty, fortunately sustaining no more damage than a broken rail. Willing helpers came aboard and got out a kedge to hold her clear, and finally the heavy anchor was taken out to windward. Fortunately after about an hour the wind shifted and all danger was at an end.

THURSDAY ISLAND NOTES.

The Band of Hope entertainment on Boxing Day was a great success.

The Victoria Memorial Institute, engaged for the occasion, was packed to its utmost capacity. Many preferred the comparatively cool verandah to the heated room.

The first part of the programme consisted of orchestral selections by Mrs. Riley and Messrs. Claes, Sullivan, and Smyth; and songs and recitations by the children. Two lads gave an excellent gymnastic exhibition. After an interval of ten minutes began the performance of "Cinderella." Preparations for this had entailed very hard work for Mrs. Mackenzie, Mrs. Jones, and the performers. The children were very excited when everything was ready for the rise of the curtain. It was no small thing for children who had never before attempted anything similar to stand before an audience of 300 people. But after a few minutes they settled down to it splendidly, and the performance was punctuated by frequent applause.

The audience were particularly pleased with Cinderella, the Prince, the Elder Sister, the Fairy Godmother, and the Fairies. We congratulate all who took part, on the great success of this, their first venture.

Mrs. Mackenzie took no end of trouble and coached the children untiringly. Mrs. Jones was responsible for the musical selections.

The Band of Hope Tea, held in the Parish Institute on Thursday, January 4th, was an unqualified success. The weather held up well, and consequently part of the evening was spent in the open air.

The tables were laid by the elder Band of Hope girls, and their efforts met with great success. When 6 o'clock arrived the tables looked as attractive as we have ever seen them. The children trooped in at 6 o'clock and sat at the tables, presided over by the head girl or boy of their form. The head boys "fetched and carried" what was required, while the head girls supplied tea and eatables. The arrangements worked well. The head girls and boys are to be complimented on the way they managed their own Band of Hope tea. As some of our readers know the work of keeping order, and part of the management in their own Band of Hope has been given to the elder children, and this method has proved its usefulness in many ways. This was particularly noticed at the Band of Hope tea, when the young workers helped ungrudgingly through the evening for the enjoyment of the younger members.

After tea an adjournment was made to the Cathedral grounds, which enabled the helpers to clear the Institute. At 8 p.m. we were again indoors, and various indoor games were indulged in, interspersed with songs and recitations. The children were highly delighted with the evening's programme. Those who so kindly helped to make this tea a success deserve our warmest thanks. The kind friends who made such excellent cakes, we have never seen more suitable cakes or tasted better ones; we have also to thank those who helped to cut up, and also to arrange the programme: Mrs. Mackenzie, Mrs. McKie, Mrs. Jones, Miss Shppard, Miss Fisher.

The Annual Sunday School Prize Distribution was held on Thursday, February 1st. The evening was fine and consequently we had a large attendance at the Parish Institute, not only of children but also of parents and friends. We note with pleasure a larger attendance of parents than was the case last year. Proceedings commenced at 8 p.m. with a short musical entertainment provided by the children. Then the Vicar reported briefly on the attendance for the past year. In the upper classes, especially among the girls, the attendance marks were very high. The Vicar also announced that next year certificates would be given to scholars who have not been absent or late through the year. The Government Resident, as was the case last year, very kindly distributed the prizes, and commented on the very good selection of books.

We were very pleased to have the Bishop of the Diocese with us. He proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. Milman, which was seconded by Mr. C. D. O'Brien, Sunday School Superintendent.

COOKTOWN PARISH NOTES.

Since the departure of the Rev. G. H. Smith in December last, the Rev. J. Boon was in charge of the Parish for a month when he left for Normanton to succeed the Rev. W. M. Wilkinson, whom we are all pleased to welcome back here as Rector. Rev. J. Boon intended distributing the Sunday School prizes the Sunday before he left, but owing to boat leaving earlier than usual he was unable to, so asked Mr. Grant to do so. Mr. Grant also acted as Lay-reader while we were without a clergyman. Rev. J. Jones, B.A., Vicar of Thursday Island was with us for a few days in January, during which time he conducted the services. Rev. S. Lewis who for some time past was Curate here left for Georgetown some months ago to relieve Rev. Mr. Hall. Mr. Lane passed through here on the 11th February on his way to the College at Thursday Island.

We have to thank the Bishop of Carpentaria for a handsome set of Altar linen which was sent to him from England.

The 10th February Rev. W. M. Wilkinson distributed the prizes to the children attending morning instruction, the Bishop's prize was awarded to Dolly Evans, several other prizes were given by the Rector. On the 17th February the Bishop of New Guinea, after spending some months in the south, passed through here on his return to his Diocese; we were pleased to see him looking so much better, also Miss Cumlev who is returning to New Guinea after her furlough in England.

It has been arranged that the members of the Scripture Union meet every third Sunday afternoon in the month after Sunday School.

THE DIOCESE.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east, by the Northern Territory on the west, and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19deg. 30min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east for 144 and thence N. to lat. S. 16deg. 40min., and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory of South Australia, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 sq. miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 16,500 whites, 7,000 Japanese, Chinese and other aliens, and 35,000 aborigines. The white population is chiefly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre N. of Cape York.

FINANCE.

The Diocese has no endowment beyond the Bishop's income of £300 per annum.

MISSIONS.

Missions are carried on among the Japanese at Thursday Island, among the S. Sea Islanders at Thursday Island and Mosman, and among the aborigines on the Mitchell River.

SPECIAL OFFERTORIES.

BUILDING REGULATIONS.

Plans for the building or alteration of Churches, Church Rooms, and Rectories must be submitted to the Bishop for approval before any contract is entered into, but such approval does not imply any Diocesan responsibility for the cost of the same.

No alteration may be made in any consecrated building without a faculty from the Bishop.

MARRIAGE REGULATIONS.

1. The clergy are recommended to the Registrar-General by the Bishop that they may be registered for the solemnization of marriages, and no clergyman may solemnize marriages until so recommended and registered. This registration gives the clergy no right to celebrate marriages otherwise than as the customs and laws of the Church allow.

2. No marriage may be celebrated otherwise than by banns or by Episcopal license.

3. Clergy who hold the Bishop's leave to issue his licenses are termed Surrogates.

4. No Surrogate may issue a license for, or any clergyman celebrate the marriage of, any divorced person whatsoever without reference to the Bishop, and permission obtained from him.

5. No marriage may be celebrated otherwise than in a Church or accustomed place of public worship except by express permission of the Bishop; provided that in urgent cases, founded on special circumstances, when reference to the Bishop is practically impossible, the clergyman shall act on his discretion, and forthwith report the circumstances to the Bishop.

6. Surrogates may not issue licenses for the celebration of marriages in Churches other than those within their own parishes or districts, but where the clergyman of a parish or district has not been licensed as a Surrogate, application must be made to the Surrogate appointed to issue licenses for the celebration of marriage within that parish or district.

7. The authorised fee for the Bishop's license is £3 3s. The Surrogate is authorised to retain for his own use this fee, with the exception of 10s. 6d., which is payable to the Church Management Fund. Where only £2 2s. or a smaller sum is paid, the Surrogate is authorised to retain three-fourths of the fee paid.

8. Quarterly returns must be made of all marriages celebrated, and the fees due to the Diocese must be transmitted at the same time.

9. No fee may be demanded for marriage by banns, and if any free-will offerings are made in such cases they may be entirely retained by the clergyman.

LETTER FROM BOB LING.

The following letter was dictated in Mota, translated by Mr. T. A. Williams. It was sent to the Subdean by Bob Ling, one of the mission workers, who went down in charge of Minnie to take supplies for the mission in June, 1905.

Saturday Night,
July 22nd, 1905.

Mr. John My Father. His Mother.

My inside is very sore (i.e., I am sore), the reason, that I came here in great storms, and seas. Some of the things
I did, but not all.

The charts that were given me were not true, and did not correspond to the coast. It was not a sign of the rivers. One week
I left Thursday Island I was at
boat, then I counted three days which I thought as the chart showed was the South Mitchell, appears I was on the North Mitchell. Here I remained two and three days. By this time I was four days without food and had to go to get some.
I went up to the Archer; here I drank water. On my return winds struck the ship and seas washed over the boat.
This is how some of the things happened. The boys were frightened to me to save them. I did not help them, but told them to go below, and I remained at the boat all night and day while the storm lasted. Eke! it was cold!

Before I left for my search of water, I went in a small boat as far as I could up the river.
I was alone because I am already old, my years are great, and should the wild people want to kill me they could only get me. I went up the river until I saw some people digging with poles in the ground. I went near them and saw that they, when they saw me, beckoned and made signs for me to land. I was afraid, I saw women and children, the men were well armed. This is a very bad sign in my country of the South Sea. I prayed to God the Great
One to shield me, for water I had to get. I landed as I said, but when I looked across the plains I saw men all armed running. They were a great multitude, like a lot of ants running towards me. One man saw that I greatly feared (for fear ate me up completely, there was no strength in my bones). He called out that they were to put their spears down before they came near, which they did. I asked them in English "Me wantum water," they replied "Me wantum water." I then pointed to my throat "Him dry." They answered, "Him dry." I then made signs and pointed to my mouth.

They did the same; but in the end they made signs that I was to drink the salt water, then I left them. At another place when I landed a man called me, I landed, but as soon as I did he

THE BETTER HALF.

The first time the parson called the man was drunk; the second time he called, the woman was drunk, the third time both were drunk together, and only the wild unkempt children peered round the tumble down shed at the rarely seen stranger. Then the parson used strong language, and the woman kept sober for six months. Then the parson called again. The man was sitting staring through the open door at the broken down cow-yard, towards which the eldest boy on a raw-boned horse, was driving a few wretched cows. The woman was not to be seen. Suddenly a voice came from the inner room. "John, give Mr. X. a pound for the church. He's done his best to keep us straight."

"Humph," said John, "I don't know whether it's good enough."
No answer, but the door was opened a few inches and a bare arm flung a cheque-book on the floor at John's feet—"Well, I'm —," said
John, then suddenly stopping, he got up and disappeared too. There was a sound of violent altercation, then John came out and ruefully picked up the cheque book and wrote out the price of many drinks, while the parson with a smile, undertook to convey it to his wardens. As he rode away, a voice murmured in the open doorway of the hut "She gave me right away, she did. Well I'm —," and the sound died away in the parting yelps of the mangy curs and the beat of the horse's hoofs.

ran away as fast as he could. I remained at the Mitchell nearly a month until food gave out, then I felt sure some harm had come to the Mission party, for the people here look very wild and are all very big men. I left for Mapoon where I saw the Bishop in the Government ship. Then I came back again to the Mitchell. We went up the river of Trubana-man and landed stores.

My Father and my Mother, I have finished, but talk to you in great love—I am

Overland from Cooktown to Cape York.

[By THE BISHOP.]

Friday, May 18.—Left Cooktown at 9 a.m. by train for Laura, distant about 60 miles, Mr. L. B. having kindly promised to convoy me as far as Coen. In the afternoon I rode out and visited one of the few settlers $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles down the river. The Laura is almost deserted.

Saturday, May 19.—Left Laura 9 a.m., and called at Fairview Station, about 9 miles; then on to Fairview Telegraph Station, about three miles further on. Here I heard that all the stations were expecting me, and would help me on my way. On 13 miles to Black Dog Creek, crossing the Kennedy about three miles previously. Very little water for the time of year. Country uninteresting. Travelling N. along telegraph line.

Sunday, May 20.—Remained in camp at Black Dog all day.

Monday, May 21.—Left camp at 8 a.m. and travelled about 36 miles at a pretty fast rate to Morehead Spring, a bad camp with little water; and we were some time in finding the horses in the morning.

Tuesday, May 22.—Left camp at 8.45 a.m., and rode over 22 miles to the Alice, a small field opened about two years ago. There is a battery, but it will shortly have to be closed for want of water. We camped alongside of the store.

Wednesday, May 23.—After breakfast rode to Red Hill and the P.C. mine, and went down the shaft. Payable gold is being got here and in the claim near the battery, but the water is almost done. At night held service at Mr. Coghill's store; a good and attentive congregation of miners.

Thursday, May 24.—Left at 8.50 a.m., and had a hot ride over dry country for 26 miles to Potalla Creek, where we found two empty houses, but no inhabitants. On the door of the better house was the hospitable inscription—"Should any traveller come along, if he will push this bolt the door will open. He will find two spare bunks inside." We took advantage of the invitation, and a pumpkin from the garden, and spent a very comfortable night.

Friday, May 25.—We had a long day of about 36 miles, camping for dinner on the Coleman River, and for the night on a small lagoon which we reached at sunset after a long, dry stage.

Saturday, May 26.—Rode 21 miles to Yarraden. It is a very small township with two batteries and several claims producing payable gold. In the afternoon visited the people and held a very well attended meeting at night at Mrs. J.'s boarding-house. Mrs. J. had a terrible experience some months ago. She went out with her small boy of about four to bring in a goat with two kids, and got lost. The weather was dry, and they were out for two nights without water, though at first they got some milk from the goat. Finally, Mrs. J. tried to kill one of the kids with a hairpin to relieve the child's suffering, and the remonstrances of the victim attracted the search party to the spot just in time to save the boy. The kid, too, is still alive, none the worse for its experiences.

Sunday, May 27.—Rode 14 miles to Ebagoolah, visiting two small mining camps, the Lukin and the Violet, on the way. Arrived at Ebagoolah, a pretty little township, about noon. The place is not prospering, and many people have left. In the afternoon addressed the Sunday School, which has been excellently managed and taught by Mrs. Smith. At night a full congregation assembled at the Provisional School for service.

Monday, May 28.—A busy day. At 8 a.m. had a Celebration of Holy Communion, and spent the morning in writing, visiting, and preparing a candidate for Confirmation. In the afternoon held a Confirmation and visited a number of families. Among the boys at Sunday School was a sturdy little fellow of five who was lately lost for three days, fortunately in the wet weather. He was found at last ten miles away marching, travelling along in the opposite direction under the impression that he was making for home. He was quite composed, and explained that he hid in the long grass at night that the dingoes might not get him. The rest of the day was spent in visiting the people.

Tuesday, May 29.—Left Ebagoolah at 9 a.m., and rode 28 miles to the Police Camp at Coen. The road is very sandy and monotonous, but about six miles from Coen it crosses the range and the scenery becomes more interesting. The camp is on the banks of the river about $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles below the township, and is surrounded by hills. Arrived about 4 p.m. and was hospitably received by Mr. and Mrs. W. A swim in the river was a great refreshment after a hot day's ride. The weather has been like the middle of summer instead of nearly mid-winter, and clouds over continually as if it were going to rain.

Wednesday, May 30.—Had a very busy day. Rode into Coen after breakfast with Mr. L. B. Coen is a pretty little township, surrounded by hills, at the junction of a large creek with the Coen River. It is some thirty years old, but only one mine is working. This has been producing gold steadily for some 25 years. Spent the day completing the preparation of some candidates for Confirmation, baptising some children, and visiting as far as I was able. At night held a Confirmation in the School of Arts, which is also used as the Provisional School. There was a very good attendance, and the singing was excellent. Here, as at Ebagoolah, a little school is conducted by the Church.

Thursday, May 31.—Said good-bye to Mr. L. B., who was returning to Cooktown, thanking him for the very great assistance he had rendered to my journey. He kindly sent his man and horses on with me for another day's stage; and we left soon after 8 a.m. and rode over poor country abounding in sand and grass trees to White Bull Creek, on the telegraph line. Here we camped. About 6 p.m. one of the men from the Mein Telegraph Station arrived, having kindly come out to meet me.

Friday, June 1.—Made an early start and rode for over 30 miles over undulating but sandy country. Crossed the Archer River, a fine, running stream. Arrived at the Mein Telegraph Station about 5 p.m. Found two miners there from the Wolfram Camp about 35 miles N.W. A few men also mining for tin on the Archer, and for gold on the upper waters of the Batavia. The station stands on a piece of bare, slightly rising ground, in very swampy country, and is chiefly noted for the prevalence of fever. Was most kindly welcomed by Mr. R., whom I had met on my visit to the Moreton three years ago.

Saturday, June 2.—Was very glad of a day's rest after my almost incessant travelling of the past fortnight. There is a good vegetable garden, but it is suffering much from want of rain. The season has been most exceptionally dry.

Sunday, June 3.—During the day three miners and the mailman arrived, and at night we made quite a number for service.

Monday, June 4.—Left about 9 a.m., and rode accompanied by Mr. R. to a small creek distant about 27 miles, and half way to the Moreton. Here we meet Mr. A., who has come out to meet me, and camped for the night.

Tuesday, June 5.—A cold, foggy morning. Said good-bye to Mr. R., who was suffering from a severe attack of fever, and left for the Moreton with Mr. H. As there was little or no water on the road, we went straight through. The Telegraph station is situated on the bank of the Batavia River, a beautiful, permanent stream, though rising in flood at times above its lofty banks. A bath in the clear running water was delightful after the hot and somewhat dreary ride.

Wednesday and Thursday, June 6 and 7.—At Moreton Telegraph Station. Held service on Thursday evening and thoroughly enjoyed the friendly intercourse with Mr. and Mrs. H. and the men.

Friday, June 8.—Left Moreton at 7 a.m. with Mr. H. and one of the men, and rode through well-watered country to the Duci River, 28 miles, where we met Mr. H., who has come out from McDonnell. The place recalls to me the tragic incident of the shooting of four unfortunate aborigines near here some four years ago, and my journey through the bush in search of evidence on the subject.

Saturday, June 9.—Said good-bye to my Moreton friends, and started with Mr. H. for McDonnell. Mr. H. is such a genial Irishman that no way could seem long in his company. We had dinner on the banks of the Dulhunty River, a fine, broad stream which falls over some rocks into a deep basin showing the very thin layer of ironstone conglomerate lying on the sandstone formation. From the Dulhunty on crosses running streams every mile or two, but the country is poor and sand and the bush stunted and full of grass trees. In one place it is so low that one gets a view of the country for miles round. It has the general appearance of an upland moor. The McDonnell office which we reached at 5 p.m., is on the further bank of the Skardon River, the largest yet met with. It is a lonely but no unpicturesque spot on the side of a ridge and exposed to strong winds from the S.E.

Sunday, June 10.—Spent the day quietly at the McDonnell. In the afternoon I went for a walk and met a number of aborigines camping on the river. The relations with the telegraph men seem to be good in all cases.

Monday, June 11.—Left about 9 a.m., and again crossed a number of beautiful running creeks. Mr. H., said that the country seemed to be getting drier yearly. He showed me one place, Canal Creek, where twenty years ago there was nothing but the softest sand which is now changed into hard sandstone rock. The rapid growth of the rock is remarkable. We camped on Louise Creek, and had some light rain in the night.

Tuesday, June 12.—Left about 8 a.m., and after crossing several creeks came to the Jardine River, a broad, shallow stream running through low, sandy country. A boat kept here, as in flood the river is sometimes 3 miles wide. Here we met and had dinner with two of the men from Cape York, and said good-bye to Mr. H. and continued my journey with my new friends to a small creek which we reached about sunset, having travelled about 28 miles.

Wednesday, June 13—Left early and rode through well grassed and watered country, with large patches of dense scrub land, until we reached the sea near Red Island. My companions were most kind in getting me a number of orchids and other plants. We came out on the beach near the site of the old telegraph office at Patterson, and about 9 miles further on we came to Cape York office, finely situated on rising ground close to the sea, about seven miles west of Cape York. We got about 1 p.m., and I was glad of an afternoon's rest and the knowledge that I had finished my ride of 460 miles. About 5 p.m. the Francis Pitt arrived and anchored about 20 miles off, as the water is very shallow. At night I held service for the men.

Thursday, June 14—Went on board the Francis Pitt immediately after breakfast and had a rough journey out in the dinghy as a heavy squall came on half-way, which carried a fast to leeward, but the Pitt got under way and soon picked us up. Had a fast run of 1½ hours into Thursday Island, where I arrived with four days to spare before the meeting of the Diocesan Conference.

Bishop's Movements.

The Bishop leaves to-day (October 2nd) for Sydney, where he will hold a Confirmation. He then travels through to Brisbane for the Provincial Synod, at which he preaches the opening sermon on October 23rd. He will then visit Ipswich, Toowoomba, Warwick, and Stanthorpe on behalf of the Mitchell River Mission, visiting Port Douglas on his return on November 21st, and Cooktown on November 30th, and arriving at Thursday Island on December 4th.

In the Night.

Out on the bare treeless down, without even grass in the great drought, the moon shined supreme. Her light was more brilliant by far than usual, and the stars had faded in the cloudless sky as she rose in her glory. On earth the few traces of life and man had vanished with the sun, and nothing was left but the cold lifeless stretches of earth, ending in all directions in a hard line against the pallid white sky. Earth and sky were but a frame, but a foil to show off the moon's cold disdainful beauty, which unlike that of the generous sun will tolerate no colour, no life to compete with her single admiration. But stay! on the lower edge of the silver disk is a line, a shadow, a warning from old mother earth to her disdainful daughter, and impalpable finger across the millions of space. The moon seems to sink and fall in an instant from her queenly side. No longer is she solitary, stately and all-orbed; no longer can she look down on the earth in stainless, unapproachable beauty. The shadow finger is a sign of servitude, of an inexorable necessity. She is suddenly become fantastic, ludicrous, a piece clipped from her side, the obvious plaything and sport of some higher power. The shadow grows, she can no longer make pretence of sovereignty, she is fighting for existence; the light fades from the slopes of the down, the shadows grow feeble and blend into the deepening dusking, the diminished stars gaze out again suddenly, vengefully; now at a narrow crescent of light is left struggling against the shame of extinction; the lower part of the limb is glowing with a lurid reddish, copper colour, save in the centre, where a black stain threatens to swallow up all that remains. We look round, the moon no longer holds the eye; a great planet challenges and retains it. The crescent is gone; the moon is a mere ghastly, strangling blot on the sky. It suggests the ludicrous and incongruous image of an expiring Chinese lantern; the red has spread and deepened. It is sinister, prophetic, terrifying. The moon has been "turned into blood." It suggests the instability even of the universe, the possibility of catastrophe and cataclysm; the day when the elements shall melt with fervent heat, and the heavens shrivel up like a parchment scroll. The eye cannot long keep away from that shamed dim struggling horror in the sky, gasping, fighting for light and life, and at length see! it has gained it. Where the shadow had been deepest, the glow most lurid, see a gleam, a tiny streak of pure silvery light. It glows it spreads, and the shadow is retreating before it. Majestically she is sailing out of the gloom as bright as pure and unstained as ever. It is a veritable passage from death to life. The stars pale and shrink back into nothingness, the long reaches of down come out in light and shade, the last stain of shadow slips off the silver disk, and naught is left but a memory and a warning; a memory that at times even the universe groaneth and travaileth in pain together in its waiting and expectation; and a warning that change is secular as well as earthly, and that a time will come amid the throes of a dying world, when the awe-bound souls of men shall behold the veiling in fire and blood of that face of the merely natural, which shall precede the unveiling of that spiritual universe, where the open face of God shall smite the opposers into the silence of utter confusion, and reveal to his children the way eternal peace.

The Happy Bridegroom.

The parson was in his study when there entered an old and weather-beaten teamster, with a heavy horse-whip in his hand which he clutched every now and then in a meaning way. He explained that his daughter wanted to be married to a young man, and that he had come to give his consent. He did not think much of the young man himself, but his daughter had fallen in love with him, and that was her affair; all he wanted was to see that the young man did not back out after so many protestations of affection. He believed in the business being carried through after having once started on it. The time was fixed for the wedding. "He'll be here up to time," he said, "or if not"—and he swung the whip around his head—"he'll know the reason why!"

"They're a-coming! They're a-coming!" he shouted galloping up about an hour afterwards on horseback with the indispensable whip. "They're a-coming! They're a-coming, I seed'em straight into the cart, and I came on to see that it's alright." Presently the bridal party appeared. The bridegroom was a red-haired pasty-faced youth, who looked as if he justified his father-in-law's moderate opinion of him. In the Church the father took up his place a pace or two in the rear of the bridegroom. When it came to the production of the ring, the bridegroom looked at the roof, then at the floor, felt one by one in all his pockets, and finally announced that he had forgotten all about the ring. But the old man was not to be put off. He gazed at the bridegroom for a moment, and then ejaculating "Well, you are a pretty pair!" seized his hat and tearing out the lining, twisted it up into an extempore ring before the astonished clergyman had time to protest. The difficulty was eventually solved, and the happy pair went off in the cart united in the bonds of matrimony, and the old man rubbed his hands, and presented the parson with a donation "for the poor" in addition to his fee, as with his now discarded whip deposited in the cart, he cantered off to superintend the wedding feast.

Light!

We were driving sleepily through the wattle which covered the great plain, and powdered us with its yellow dust, when our companion, a lean old bushman, a queer compound of piety and straight shooting, with thirty years of bush musings written on his face, startled us by the enquiry, "How fast does light travel?" We told him, and he proceeded with an air of great deliberation, "Well, I calculate that heaven must be about three thousand million miles away." Seeing our look of surprise, he added, "Well, you see, it says in the Bible that the angels appeared to Abraham about the sixth hour; now if they started about daylight, they would have travelled about three thousand million miles by midday, so heaven must be somewhat about that distance from the earth."

We regret to say that Rev. E. S. Chase has resigned his post as superintendent of the Mitchell River Mission and has accepted work near Melbourne. Mr. H. Matthews has been appointed acting superintendent in his place.

I have lived to thank God that all my prayers have not been answered.

The Carpentarian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA,
NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Volume VI. - No. 24. Thursday Island, Oct. 1, 1906.

Diocesan Conference.

Abridged minutes of Conference of the Clergy and Laity of the Diocese of Carpentaria held in the Parish Institute, Thursday Island, on June 19th, 1906, and following days.

The Conference met at 9 p.m. after the opening service in the Cathedral at which the sermon was preached by Rev. J. B. Drabble, A.K.C.

Rev. L. F. Trevor, M.A., was elected clerical and Mr. F. T. Lane lay secretary.

Apologies for absence were received from Rev. E. S. Chase, W. Hudson, E. Taffs, H. J. Boon, S. Lewis, A. E. Smith, and Mr. J. Bleakley.

The President then delivered his Inaugural Address.

The following votes of thanks were then passed. To the Bishop for his Address, S.P.G.; S.P.C.K.; C.C.C.S.; Rev. F. M. T. Palgrave; Lord Beauchamp; Mrs. Pritt, Rev. E. Harris, D.D., Rev. E. Snodgrass, M.A., Rev. E. C. Beck, K.C.L., Rev. W. P. Glover, and Miss Paige. Various notices of motion were given.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 20th, 1906.

(1) The Conference met at 4 p.m.

Moved by Rev. W. M. Wilkinson and carried unanimously—"That this Conference desires to express its deep sense of appreciation of the long and devoted service rendered to the Church by Miss F. Buchanan, and to express a sincere hope that her visit to Singapore may so benefit her health that she may be enabled to return and resume her work in this diocese."

(2) On the motion of Rev. L. F. Trevor, seconded by Rev. J. Jones, an amended list of subjects was submitted for the consideration of the Pan-Anglican Conference Committee.

(3) Moved by Rev. L. F. Trevor, seconded by Mr. H. Milman, and carried—"That the offerings of the Diocese of Carpentaria take the form of a freewill offering."

(4) Moved by Rev. J. B. Drabble, seconded by the Bishop, and carried, "That this Conference desires to place on record its sense of the great loss the Anglican Church in Australia has sustained by the death of Rt. Rev. George Henry Stanton, Bishop of Newcastle, who laboured for so many years in the diocese of North Queensland."

(5) Rev. W. P. Glover was elected one of the clerical representatives at the Provincial Synod.

(6) Determinations No 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 11, of General Synod were accepted.

(7) The motion to accept No. 7, (the Clergy Provident and Superannuation scheme) was lost by a large majority.

(8) The financial statements and Parochial Statistics were received and adopted on the motion of Rev. J. Jones, seconded by Mr. C. D. O'Brien.

(9) Proposed by Rev. J. B. Drabble, seconded by Rev. W. M. Wilkinson and carried, "That this Conference welcomes the project for the formation of a 'Diocesan High School' and extends a hearty welcome to Miss Robson and wishes her every success."

(10) Proposed by Mr. H. Milman, seconded by Rev. J. B. Drabble, and carried, "That the donors be written to and informed that an insufficient amount has been collected to enable the proposed chapel to be erected, and that the Conference requests to know whether the donors agree to leave the form of memorial to the decision of the Diocesan Council."

THURSDAY JUNE 21st 1906.

The Conference met at 4 p.m.

(1) The report of the committee on the Terrier of Church Lands, was received and adopted.

(2) The report on Parochial Boundaries was received and adopted.

(3) Proposed by Rev. J. Jones and seconded by Rev. L. F. Trevor and carried, "That in the opinion of this Conference it is desirable to form a Diocesan Branch of the Girls' Friendly Society."

(4) Proposed by Mr. H. Milman, seconded by Rev. W. M. Wilkinson and carried, "That a sub-committee consisting of the Subdean, Mr. B. H. Ogilvie, and the mover be appointed to investigate the matter of the question of the boundaries of the diocese and to report to the next Conference."

(5) The Resolution of the last Conference with regard to a Sunday School course was reaffirmed.

(6) Proposed by Rev. J. Jones, seconded by Mr. C. D. O'Brien and carried, "That the Inter-diocesan Lessons published by the C.E.S.S. Institute be adopted; to commence Advent 1906."

(7) Proposed by Rev. J. Jones, seconded by Mr. C. D. O'Brien and carried, "That this Conference desires to bring under the notice of the Commonwealth Government, the extreme hardship and inhumanity which will result in many cases should the whole of the Pacific Islanders resident in this district be indiscriminately deported from Australia under the Pacific Island Labourers Act of 1901, as many of these Islanders are married and have families, and have been residents in North Queensland for various terms up to in some cases 40 years, and trusts that the Minister will exercise the discretionary powers vested in him by sect. 8 subsect. 2 of the Act so that such hardship and inhumanity may be avoided."

(8) Proposed by Rev. J. B. Drabble, seconded by Mr. C. Armbrust and carried, "That the Bishop and Rev. W. M. Wilkinson be appointed a new committee for the Albert Maclaren Memorial Fund."

(9) The Bishop nominated Rev. J. B. Drabble and Mr. H. Milman to the Diocesan Council.

The Conference elected Revs. J. Jones, L. F. Trevor, Messrs. C. D. O'Brien, and A. T. Sullivan. Mr. A. P. Walker was elected Hon. Diocesan Secretary.

(10) Proposed by Mr. H. Milman, seconded by Mr. A. T. Sullivan, and carried, "That in the opinion of this Conference, assistant clergy may be present at meetings of Parochial Councils, but without the power of voting."

(11) The Diocesan Regulations were reviewed and adopted without change.

(12) The Provincial Constitution was ratified on the motion of Rev. J. Jones, seconded by Mr. A. T. Sullivan.

(13) Proposed by Mr. C. D. O'Brien, seconded by Mr. C. Armbrust, and carried, "That the representatives of this Conference at the General Synod be requested to submit for consideration the advisability of the Church taking united action with a view of furthering and assisting any movement having for its object the diminution of the evils consequent upon the excessive use of alcohol."

(14) Votes of thanks to the Hon. Secretaries and President.

The Conference closed at 9.30 p.m. with the recitation of the Te Deum.

On Friday Devotional Addresses were given by the Bishop to the clergy in the Cathedral.

On Sunday June 24th, Rev. F. C. Hall was ordained priest in the Cathedral, the Subdean being the preacher. Rev. W. M. Wilkinson addressed the children in the afternoon, and the Bishop preached at night. Rev. J. B. Drabble acted as Bishop's Chaplain.

This service closed the third biennial conference of the Diocese.

ROMAN CATHOLICISM AND CHARACTER.

The writer of the following article Miss A. C. White, a sister of the Bishop of Carpentaria, has lived for some years in Italy and has many opportunities of forming an opinion on the subject on which we asked her to write for the "Carpentarian"—viz., the influence on character of the Roman Catholic Church in Italy.

"As I have to do so much with children and with those interested in their welfare, and also because it seems to me the practical test of the real value of a system, I judge of the effect of the Roman Catholic Church on the people of Italy chiefly from an educational point of view. Of course by education I do not mean mere book learning but the mental, moral, and physical development of an infant into a responsible man or woman.

When very young the children are taught to repeat some prayers, chiefly to the Virgin Mary which they never seem to understand, and to kiss a Madonna. They get no religious instruction at all until about 7 when they begin the catechism, and hear stories of the saints and martyrs. They are taken to church when quite babies, but are often allowed to take toys, and are always allowed to talk and fidget. The habit of untruthfulness begins very early, and it could hardly be otherwise as the Italians seem to think that the truth is wasted on children. The nurses who take charge of them from birth, and the maids to whom they are handed over at 5 or 6 years of age, have always the saving of trouble as their chief end, and the mothers never hesitate to lie to their children whenever it seems convenient. Lies of the part of the children are punished severely if they have caused inconvenience, but are otherwise disregarded. The chief points which a child at 7 is taught to "confess" are untruthfulness which is regarded as a matter of course and gluttony which is too often taught by the example of the parents.

Some effort is made to teach the children reverence when it is time to prepare them for their first communion, which varies from 9 to 13. It is literally "teach them reverence" because it is not deepening and developing a sense that has been always felt, but seems to be an attempt to teach something new. School life begins sometimes as early as eight and is always in a convent. The nuns are kind and indulgent and I think they make the children happy. The girls get a religious environment which makes them grow like hot-house plants. They observe fasts and feasts carefully and confess as sins every natural questioning and impulse while they are taught that obedience to the outward observances of religion is a sure passport to Paradise. The prudery taught, though the call it modesty, I can only call indecent, as for instance that it is improper to wash more than the hands and face because to do so they must uncover themselves. Notwithstanding constant supervision and the attempts to keep them all in that state of ignorance which the Italians mistake for innocence, the girls manage to talk of forbidden things and are often very far from pure in mind.

At the age of 17 or 18 the convent life is ended and the girl comes to live in the home which she has only visited every summer. She finds the elaborate edifice of prohibitions and restrictions, which had kept her in check before, gone down like a pack of cards. Idleness and petty lying are not sins in a convent, and at home are as natural as the stuffy air they breathe. The hot-house religion withers rapidly and only the fasts and feasts are left, outwardly observed but with no inward intention to sanctify them.

The boys are sent to seminaries and colleges, where they are treated much like the girls. No liberty at all is allowed them and there are no healthy amusements or exercises to work off their animal spirits. The first opportunities of liberty are made instantly into licence, and the parents seem to think it quite a matter of course that their sons should be so.

Is then the Roman Church really responsible for this state of things? I think so, because the system of convent education which all priests advocate is really at the root of all the trouble. Girls are brought up with no home life, and know nothing of the influence and example of good mothers. They are wives and mothers themselves before they have any idea what real womanliness is, as distinct from the exaggerated maidenliness of their convent ideals. The joys and sorrows of motherhood are overpowered by the delights of the new freedom and gaiety. The children are playthings and pets, but enjoyment is the real business of life. They are left to the nurse when small, and are sent to school when bigger and the mother feels the responsibility off her hands.

I have talked to intelligent Italians of all ages and on all sides are lamentations on the state of Italy. Some say frankly that if there were not such a multitude of points really almost outside the faith which have been made into dogmas by popes and so rank with the Catholic truths, there would be many thousand less unbelievers. As a rule, Italians are ready to blame the enervating climate, or the Government for the national failings which they deplore, but do not seem to see how much is at fault in their system of education. I have met two really nice priests who were men of intelligence and culture, but they seem rare. More than one devout Romanist has frankly said to me that the church was badly represented by the priests. In a devout family the ladies were criticising the coachman, who was afraid of horses, and when I said "What else could he be except a gardener as he is afraid of everything?" I was answered, "He would have done better to be a priest." The clergy have influence in spiritual matters concerning the faithful who go to them for advice, but do not seem to me to have anything like the standing or popularity of the English clergy. In society the worldly and religious sides of a person's character seem to be two distinct things. Self-control is a virtue no one seems to aspire to. The people seem to do more church going than the upper classes (who are virtuous for 25 minutes a week) and perhaps their children get earlier and clearer instruction at the catechism classes, but their devotion seems almost entirely directed to the Madonna, with some one among the saints for a local family favourite. I think it is not only their vivacious character and their incorrigible childishness that makes them so afraid of death. When one sees how they grieve over leaving their pleasures, and how sincerely they pity the oldest and the best people of whom one would expect to hear them say "We have lost them, but they have gone to well-earned rest," one realises that the horrors of hell, and the pains of purgatory are much more real to them than the love of God."

THE EARLIEST VIEW OF CHRIST.

It is stated by almost all critics of the New Testament that St. Mark is the earliest of the Gospels, and that St. Matthew and St. Luke added further details to those supplied by St. Mark; and it is further admitted by all sane critics that the four greater Epistles at least are the genuine work of St. Paul, written from twenty-five to thirty years after the Crucifixion.

As we are often told that the idea of the divine nature of Christ was only gradually evolved, it is important to note what our earliest authorities have to say about the matter, for if their picture is substantially the same as that drawn by later historians, this whole theory falls to the ground.

We propose briefly to examine first what St. Mark and then St. Paul have to say on this point, so simply that anyone with a Bible can examine and judge for himself, not exhaustively, but not dwelling on the more obvious points.

In the first place, the Christ of St. Mark is one who can work miracles. Although St. Mark is only two-thirds of the length of either of the other Synoptists he records 18 miracles, as against St. John 8, St. Matthew 20, and St. Luke 21. It is clear that the miraculous element is no later addition.

Next, our Lord is one who speaks and acts with exceptional authority. "I will. Be thou clean," he says to the leper. "The Son of Man hath power on earth to forgive sins," "The Son of Man is lord even of the Sabbath," he said to the Jews, who believed rightly that the power in each case belonged to God only. The Scribes who attributed his wonders to the power of the devil were "guilty of an eternal sin." He claims power over the wind and waves and rebukes the sea. The man who loses his life for His sake shall save it. It is better for a man to die a violent death than to shake the faith of a little child in Christ. He came to give his life as a ransom for many. His words shall abide when heaven and earth have passed away. All men shall see him sitting at the right hand of power, and coming with the clouds of heaven and attending angels.

Lastly he is one to whom a distinct and extraordinary position is definitely assigned. When he was baptised and again at the Transfiguration a voice from heaven declared "Thou art my beloved Son." The evil spirits know him as "the Holy One of God" and acknowledge him to be "the Son of God," "the Son of the Most High God." He welcomes St. Peter's statement that he is the Christ the long looked-for Messiah; and he pointed out to the scribes that Messiah was no mere son of David, for David called him his Lord; while to the challenge of the High Priest he replied that he was at once Messiah and the Son of the Most Blessed—i.e., of God.

To sum up, St. Mark teaches us that the man Jesus who lived and taught and did wonderful works, and died and rose again the third day, claimed to be and was the long-promised Messiah, and more than that, he was the Son of God in a special and unique sense, and as such spoke with authority words that neither the best of men nor angels have dared to use.

We turn now to St. Paul's Epistles, which are probably from fifteen to twenty years earlier than St. Mark's Gospel which we have been considering. Do we find in them a less advanced view of Christ's position and claims?

In the opening words of the Epistle to the Romans we find the statement that Christ, though "born of the seed of David according to the flesh, was declared to be the Son of God with power." "When the fulness of the time was come God sent forth His Son." "Sent His own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh." The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ is that "though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor." "God spared not His own Son," but purposed "to give the light of the knowledge of God in the face of Jesus Christ," for "the free gift of God is eternal life in Jesus Christ our Lord." "God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ, whom He hath set forth to be a propitiation."

Christ and the Holy Spirit are constantly linked together as, "I beseech you by our Lord Jesus Christ, and by the love of the Spirit." So our Lord and God the Father, as, "Grace and peace from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ." Or all three Persons are linked, as, "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost be with you all."

The Church is "the Kingdom of Christ and of God." "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself." Christ "knew no sin," and shall be judge "in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ." St. Paul says that he is an ambassador on behalf of Christ, "as though God were entreating by us." These quotations only cover those of St. Paul's Epistles, which are absolutely undisputed, and they show that long before St. Mark's Gospel was written Christ was regarded as God's Son in a unique sense, as sharing power and authority and glory with the latter, as the sinless object of worship and praise. In a word, everything vital that is found in the later is present in the earlier conceptions of Christ.

DIOCESAN NOTES.

The Diocesan High School has become an accomplished fact, starting on July 16th with 17 day scholars and 10 night-school scholars, besides music pupils. Miss Robson has thrown herself into the work with characteristic energy and thoroughness. It remains for the diocese and for the people of Thursday Island to show their appreciation of the opportunity which they now have for religious and higher education.

Rev. J. Jones, accompanied by Mr. F. T. Lane, left for the Mitchell River in the Francis Pritt on June 30th. Mr. Jones returned on July 14th very much impressed by the good work which has been done, and by the great opportunities which it affords for the future. The Francis Pritt did the return journey in two and half days, calling for six hours at Mapoon on the way. Mr. Jones had an exciting adventure with an alligator on Trubanaman Creek, but the monster finally decided to leave the Church severely alone.

Mr. Lane volunteered to stay on at the mission until the return of Mr. T. A. Williams.

Visit of the Archbishop of Brisbane.

The first visit to our diocese of our Metropolitan, the Rt. Rev. St. Clair Donaldson, D.D., Archbishop of Brisbane, has been a great and noteworthy event. His Grace arrived by the Maranoa on Tuesday morning, July 31st, and proceeded again in the afternoon, accompanied by the Bishop of Carpentaria, to the Norman Bar. There was a very lumpy sea, and the voyage was not as pleasant as it might have been. At the Bar, where they arrived about 10.30 a.m. on August 2nd, the good ship Francis Pitt was seen pitching and rolling at anchor in a way that did not promise much for the travellers' comfort, but she soon got under way and came up gracefully to the leeward of the big boat, where she anchored. The transit seemed to promise a ducking, but the lightermen kindly offered their big boat, in which all the luggage as well as the Bishops were safely conveyed amid the cheers of the passengers. A few minutes later all sail was set, and the Francis Pitt was speeding away to the north. She ran all night under shortened sail, but although the wind fell, the sea continued to be anything but pleasant, and it was about 5 p.m. the following day when the sharp eyes of the skipper detected the tiny white speck of the beacon, and 6 p.m. before we came to an anchor off our buoy. Early next morning we landed and made a search for an alligator, but it was high water and only the tracks of two were to be found. About 11 a.m. Mr. Matthews, the acting superintendent, arrived with horses and the welcome news that all was well at the mission, which we reached a couple of hours later, and were installed amid all the glories of the new iron house (or room?) which stands on high piles, and is well anchored down by cables to withstand, if possible, the attacks of any wandering cyclone. There is the advantage of abundant ventilation through the slab floor (there is not a bit of sawn timber in the building), and no dull uniformity of lines or levels; and when it does blow, one cannot help wondering where one would come down if the cables did snap; but it is a vast improvement on anything we have had, and will be invaluable in the wet. The boys are now at work on the erection of a hospital, and the materials for an iron store are all ready for putting together.

On Sunday morning there was a celebration of Holy Communion with five white and three black communicants; and at Morning Prayer for the whole mission the address was given by the Archbishop. At 7.30 p.m. a procession made its way to the native camp, where a short service was held and the Archbishop spoke through an interpreter. Later in the evening the Bishop of Carpentaria gave a devotional address to the staff. On Monday the Archbishop inspected the work of the station, and was present at the school house when the younger boys acquitted themselves very creditably. Mr. Bowman, the owner of the neighbouring station of Rutland Plains, drove over to dinner. He told us that he had at first been opposed to the mission, thinking it would do harm; but he was ready to acknowledge that he had been mistaken. Since the mission had been established he had not heard of any cases of spearing cattle, previously so common, and he attributed it to the influence of the mission. He was anxious to co-operate with the mission in every way. Mr. Bowman has shown much kindness to the mission staff during the last six months. In the afternoon the Archbishop and Bishop rode down to the landing on the creek, where a substantial notice board has been erected. On Tuesday morning the Archbishop gave a most powerful and helpful address to the staff on the necessity of maintaining the inner spiritual life in the midst of external activities; and later rode out to visit a wet-season camp of the natives. In the afternoon most successful sports were held, about seventy camp natives being interested spectators. They comprised quarter and half mile foot-races, tug-of-war, and an interesting spear-throwing contest in which the winner, with a wooden-pointed spear, pierced completely through the mark—a six-inch pandanus post, from a distance of about sixty yards. The event of the day was the staff race. Mr. Lane, who for short-distance races can beat the native runners, was put scratch; Messrs. Matthews and Williams coming next, and in advance of them the Archbishop of Brisbane and Bob Ling, the Bishop of the Diocese being allowed a further five yards in virtue of being the senior in years. The race aroused wild enthusiasm, and resulted in the Bishop coming in by five yards, the Archbishop being second, and Mr. Matthews a head behind. In the evening a meeting of the staff was held, and several matters discussed and arranged. Next morning the episcopal party and Mr. Lane left for the coast, and sailed by the Francis Pitt about noon. Mapoon was reached about 1.30 p.m. on Friday and a short visit paid there. The Francis Pitt sailed again about 5 p.m. and reached Booby Island early in the morning, but all the day was occupied in a beat-up against a heavy sea, tide, and wind under reefed sails. On Sunday the Archbishop preached two most helpful sermons at the Cathedral. His simple yet powerful style, with its occasional telling illustrations from personal experience and observation, reminds one of that great master of simple preaching, the Bishop of London. The church was filled by a most attentive congregation, and the music was well rendered.

On Wednesday the Archbishop gave an address to churchworkers, and met about forty at Bishop's Lodge afterwards. On Thursday, in spite of the heavy gale that was blowing, the Archbishop went down in the police cutter to Friday Island, where the Bishop was to hold a Confirmation. The service was a very beautiful and touching one, and the Archbishop won the hearts of the poor lepers by his sympathetic address. After the service they asked if they asked if they might "sing the Archbishop farewell," and they gathered on the veranda of one of the houses and sang, "God be with you till we meet again" with a sincerity and earnestness which were very moving. As the boat left they all gathered on the shore, waving hats and handkerchiefs till she was out of sight. The beat back in the open boat in the teeth of the gale was an exciting experience, as one realised that nothing but the skill of the experienced coxswain of the water police preserved it from capsizing in the fierce welter of wind, waves, and tide running through the rip off the Hospital Point. In the evening the Parish Institute was beautifully decorated for a conversazione, at which the Archbishop was presented with the following address of welcome from the members of the Parochial and Diocesan Councils:—

To Rt. Rev. St. Clair Donaldson, D.D., Archbishop of Brisbane and Metropolitan of Queensland.

We, the undersigned members of the Diocesan Council and of the Thursday Island Parochial Council, desire to offer your Grace a most hearty welcome on this occasion of your first visitation of this diocese.

We look forward to the recent formation of the Province of Queensland as likely to be especially a source of strength to the smaller and distant dioceses, and we find a proof of it in the fact that in the midst of much pressure of other work you have made time to spend so long with us on this occasion. We believe that it will also enable the Church to speak with authority on such matters as religious education and moral and social questions, in which we naturally look to your Grace as our leader and spokesman at the capital of the State.

We have to thank you for your visit to the newly started Mitchell River Mission, and hope that in consequence of it, a wider interest will be taken in its work.

We tender you the assurance of our loyal co-operation in all that tends to the welfare of the Church, and wish you personally all happiness and success in the tenure of your high office.

The Archbishop's reply was a model of force and comprehension, and rivetted the attention of the whole audience. Songs and music brought a most delightful evening to a close.

Friday was devoted to a quiet day for the clergy and students, and the Archbishop's deeply spiritual addresses will not easily be forgotten by those who were privileged to hear them. On Sunday morning, August 19th, a C.O.'s parade of the troops was held at the Cathedral, and the Archbishop preached a magnificent sermon on the need of the rank and file of the Church doing their duty in their own generation. In the evening the church was crowded, and the Archbishop preached a very fine sermon on the fear of God. On Monday evening he distributed the badges and prizes to the members of the Band of Hope, and left the next day by the Yawata Maru, leaving all Church people cheered and strengthened by his visit.

The following letter has been received from the Bishop of North Queensland:

Townsville,
July 7, 1906

My dear Lord Bishop,

The Synod of this Diocese received your message of greeting with great pleasure, and unanimously resolved that the Rev. J. B. Drabble be requested to convey to your Lordship and to your Conference our fraternal regards. We all feel that the problems and interests of Carpentaria are similar to our own, and that whatever we can do to help forward the work of the Church in Carpentaria we will do gladly and faithfully.

Your faithful servant in Christ Jesus,
GEORGE H. NORTH QUEENSLAND.

The Lord Bishop of Carpentaria.

Mr. T. A. Williams returned to Bishop's College after 13 months on the Mitchell River Mission. He has suffered a good deal from malarial fever since his return, but on hearing that a man was urgently needed he again volunteered and left for the Mitchell on July 20th. fill his place while he is continuing his studies, which have been much interrupted by the crying needs of the mission.

THE DIOCESE.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east, by the Northern Territory on the west, and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19deg. 30min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east par. 144 and thence N. to lat. S. 16deg. 40min., and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory of South Australia, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 sq. miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 16,500 whites, 7,000 Japanese, Chinese and other aliens, and 35,000 aborigines. The white population is chiefly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre N. of Cape York.

FINANCE.

The Diocese has no endowment beyond the Bishop's income of £300 per annum.

MISSIONS.

Missions are carried on among the Japanese at Thursday Island, among the S. Sea Islanders at Thursday Island and Mosman, and among the aborigines on the Mitchell River.

SPECIAL OFFERTORIES.

On Easter Day the offertories are given to the Clergyman of the Parish, and on Good Friday to the Australian Board of Missions.

ANNUAL FIXTURES.

(1) March 31st—Parish accounts to close, and to be prepared for presentation to Easter meeting.

(2) Week preceding the Annual Easter Meeting—Roll Book to be revised to date, and copy thereof to be forwarded to the Bishop.

(3) Easter Meeting to be held within twenty-one days after Easter Day; for election of Churchwardens, passing accounts, etc. N.B.—Copies of Easter Report and Balance Sheets to be sent to the Bishop ("Parishes Regulation Canon," clauses 6, 10, and 24).

CANONS.

The Canons of the Diocese of North Queensland will continue to be the rule of the Church in the Diocese of Carpentaria, except in so far as they are abrogated in any point by special and published direction of the Ordinary, or are plainly inapplicable through change of circumstances and conditions. They may be obtained from the Diocesan Book Depot; price 1s.

DIOCESAN ASSESSMENT.

Each Parish or District within the Diocese shall pay annually to the Church Management Fund such sum as may from year to year be assessed by the Diocesan Council, provided that such sum shall not exceed eight guineas nor be less than four guineas.

BUILDING REGULATIONS.

Plans for the building or alteration of Churches, Church Rooms, and Rectories must be submitted to the Bishop for approval before any contract is entered into, but such approval does not imply any Diocesan responsibility for the cost of the same.

No alteration may be made in any consecrated building without a faculty from the Bishop.

MARRIAGE REGULATIONS.

1. The clergy are recommended to the Registrar-General by the Bishop that they may be registered for the solemnization of marriages, and no clergyman may solemnize marriages until so recommended and registered. This registration gives the clergy no right to celebrate marriages otherwise than as the customs and laws of the Church allow.

2. No marriage may be celebrated otherwise than by banns or by Episcopal license.

3. Clergy who hold the Bishop's leave to issue his licenses are termed Surrogates.

4. No Surrogate may issue a license for, or any clergyman celebrate the marriage of, any divorced person whatsoever without reference to the Bishop, and permission obtained from him.

5. No marriage may be celebrated otherwise than in a Church or accustomed place of public worship except by express permission of the Bishop; provided that in urgent cases, founded on special circumstances, when reference to the Bishop is practically impossible, the clergyman shall act on his discretion, and forthwith report the circumstances to the Bishop.

6. Surrogates may not issue licenses for the celebration of marriages in Churches other than those within their own parishes or districts, but where the clergyman of a parish or district has not been licensed as a Surrogate, application must be made to the Surrogate appointed to issue licenses for the celebration of marriage within that parish or district.

7. The authorised fee for the Bishop's license is £3 3s. The Surrogate is authorised to retain for his own use this fee, with the exception of 10s. 6d., which is payable to the Church Management Fund. Where only £2 2s. or a smaller sum is paid, the Surrogate is authorised to retain three-fourths of the fee paid.

8. Quarterly returns must be made of all marriages celebrated, and the fees due to the Diocese must be transmitted at the same time.

9. No fee may be demanded for marriage by banns, and if any free-will offerings are made in such cases they may be entirely retained by the clergyman.

Douglas Memorial Tablet.

On Sunday evening, December 16th, a brass tablet in memory of Hon. John Douglas, which has been erected in the south aisle of the cathedral, was unveiled by the Bishop of the Diocese.

In the course of his sermon the Bishop said: With regard to the tablet which we are about to unveil, let me say at once to prevent misunderstanding, that it is not the memorial to be erected in this Church to the memory of John Douglas; we hope to make that the completion of the side aisle as a chapel for daily service, to be known as the Douglas Memorial Chapel. As, however, we had not sufficient funds to proceed with the memorial, it was thought desirable to erect a brass tablet as an indication of our purpose, and as an interim memorial of one whose memory we desire to always keep with us. It is for this reason that the tablet has been placed in the aisle rather than in a position here for the moment it would have seemed more conspicuous. A strong feeling was expressed by a majority of the Diocesan Council that, as Mr. Douglas had been so identified with Queensland, the work of making the tablet ought to be done in Queensland. It has been made in Brisbane accordingly, as was felt that if the Queensland work did not altogether attain to the perfection of the English, yet this was compensated for by the fact that native art was being encouraged in its application to religious purposes. Now, I want to impress upon you very strongly that we are only at the beginning of the work we are pledged, and are honoured by being pledged, to accomplish with regard to the Douglas Memorial. We have not yet been able to ascertain exactly what the work will cost, but I think we have already about one-third of the amount necessary before we can put it in hand. I should like to point out that nearly the whole of this sum has been subscribed outside of Thursday Island, and it is now time we should do our part. This is largely owing to the fact that beyond giving notice of the fact that a subscription list had been opened, we refrained from asking persons locally for subscriptions until we had made an appeal to those at a distance. This has now been done, and we shall be glad to receive any local contributions towards the work of the permanent memorial, which will consist in substituting concrete for the temporary wall of the aisle, and fitting it up for daily services. The architect's plan provides for a series of double doors, which will greatly improve the ventilation of the building. I know well that times are not propitious for an appeal on a large scale, but I hope that all those who wish to give, not because of any feeling of compulsion, but because they wish and desire to have some part in helping to provide the Memorial Chapel, will send in their contributions at once, however small they may be. My own feeling is that it is better to build with the loving gifts of those who really care than by any very widely spread effort outside. Yet, after all, we feel that it is not in this or any other memorial that our friend really lives. He lives enshrined in many a heart through the length and breadth of this land; in the hearts of those who were privileged to call him friend, and who valued that friendship as one of the great things of their lives; in the hearts of neighbours and acquaintances, who found in him ever gentleness, consideration, true courtesy, and an earnest desire to help and serve; in the hearts of many a humble Islander and native, who looked upon him as a father and the incarnation of all that is highest and best in the race to which we belong. Happy is the man whose memory is inscribed not merely in brass, but in the hearts and consciences of the people. Such was he. Such is he, for we cannot doubt that God has a use and a work for him in the fuller light of his heavenly kingdom—work suited to the fine temper of the character into which he had been moulded on earth.

The Church Missionary Association of Victoria propose with the approval of the Bishop to start an Aboriginal Mission on the Roper River.

A Visit to Booby.

The Francis Pritt with the Bishop and Rev. A. E. Smith and Mr. Ayscough left the Island at 1 p.m. on Saturday, September 30th. There was a light breeze and tide which took us out to Goode Island, and soon after failed us so that we did not reach Booby distant 17 miles until 4.30 p.m. The lighthouse men met us in their whaleboat and rowed us along the fine jagged cliffs full of caves around which the sea gulls flew screaming as we passed, the water was beautifully clear and we could see all the stones on the reef as we passed over it. The island is less than a quarter of a mile in length and breadth and about 60 feet high, the top being a bare rocky plateau breaking away into tumbled cliffs hollowed out into caves and forming half a dozen narrow little sandy coves where a landing can be effected. A cleft in the rock some fifty or sixty feet wide runs across the Island and is filled with shady trees and shrubs forming a grateful shade and contrast to the glare on the naked rock above. Immediately on landing we went to visit the famous post office cave where vessels used to leave letters to be called for by some homeward bound ship, and where stores and water were stored for shipwrecked men. The latter, had anyone explored the rocky plateau, would have been found to be unnecessary, as there are two natural cisterns in the rock, one about 10 feet deep and holding about 4000 gallons and the other smaller. These are filled in the wet weather from the rain falling on the rock and last all the year round; but it is the last place one would think of looking for water, though the same kind of wells are to be found in the dry mountains of central Australia, the water being cool in the hottest weather. In the cave, which runs in some 80 feet, are numerous inscriptions, dating back to 1849, but many are nearly obliterated. Immediately after seeing the cave we went to visit the three families of the lightkeepers and arranged to hold service immediately as some of the men had to go on duty at 6.30 p.m. We soon had every soul on the Island gathered together and had a most hearty service, which was thoroughly appreciated by all. Then we inspected the light, the machinery of which resembles a great clock, the lantern with its ten great lenses revolving so as to cause a flash every minute. It is 108 feet above the water and visible 16 miles.

Life on the Island must be a very lonely one, but happily the three families seem to live peaceably together, which does not always happen in such cases. After tea we went for a walk on the rocks and admired the beautiful effect of the moonlight on the rippling waves as they broke on the rocks. About 8.30 p.m. we went aboard again and set sail with a very light breeze, which by about midnight faded away altogether. However, our skipper was as usual equal to the occasion and getting out the dinghy when the tide turned in our favour, about two hours later, he kept us slowly moving in the right direction, although at daylight we had only made about 7 miles. Sunrise over the glassy water was a beautiful sight as it tinted it with every shade of dull red iridescent colour amid which the dark sharp shapes of the many islands stood black and clear. Very gradually we crept along at the pace of about 1 mile an hour, still it was progress and that is always something, and at last the wind grew stronger, enabling us to reach Goode Island about 1 p.m., much too late for the morning service which the Bishop was to have taken. So we landed Mr. Ayscough instead in the dinghy in the hope that he might find some means of returning after taking an evening service, and went on our way to Thursday Island where we arrived soon after 2 p.m.

Bishop's Tour.

On the conclusion of the Provincial Synod the Bishop went to Stanthorpe for a week's rest (combined with four sermons and an address!) and then returned North, giving addresses on the work of the Mitchell River Mission at Bundaberg and Gladstone. At Bundaberg he was the guest of Mr. G. Bennett, whose interest in the North is as keen as ever. He arrived at Port Douglas on the evening of Tuesday, November 20th, being met by Rev. E. Taffs, and being the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Hoelscher. On the following afternoon he proceeded to the Mosman, where the rectory grounds have been fenced and a beautiful lawn and flower garden have rewarded the rector's efforts. On Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, some of the neighbouring farms were visited. The recent rains have brought on the cane wonderfully, and the whole country was exquisitely beautiful. On Saturday night the Bishop confirmed a number of South Sea-men who were leaving for their Islands. The Bishop said that as this might be his last confirmation of South Sea Islanders, he desired to say he felt a real grief in parting from men, so many of whom had shown a real practical Christianity in their life and conduct. During his twenty-one years residence in Queensland he had received much kindness from Islanders, and was convinced of the genuineness of their religion. Some of them were returning possibly to danger and persecution, and he exhorted them to be faithful to their Christian profession.

On Sunday morning, the newly confirmed and others were present at the Holy Communion at 8 a.m., and at 11 a.m., the Bishop celebrated and preached on acknowledging Christ before men. We could have wished to see a larger white congregation. In the afternoon the Bishop rode to Port Douglas, where at night the church was crowded for the confirmation of four adults—three men and one woman—who were presented by Rev. E. Taffs. The present condition of the sugar industry is very unsatisfactory. While the possibility of white labour has been demonstrated by the fact that a certain number of white men have worked steadily all through the season, it is yet to be seen whether sufficient white men can be found who are willing to do this. So far an immense number of men have been brought up to do the work, and the majority have either thrown it up after a few days' trial or been off work for a great proportion of their time. Consequently the cost of production has been greatly increased, and the farmers, in spite of the good season, are likely to get a very low price for their cane. It is true that a bonus of 5s. per ton is given on the cane, but £3 a ton excise is charged on the sugar (equivalent to 7s. 6d. per ton on the cane) so that it is difficult to see where the benefit comes in.

The only solution on the lines of white labour seems to lie in—(1) making the employment to last all the year through (2) providing better housing accommodation, (3) providing better mechanical means for loading the cane, a work which the white man seems to feel even more than cutting. These reforms might attract a class of sober and industrious married men and solve the present trouble, but they mean a heavy outlay. Meanwhile the amount of sugar produced has almost equalled the Australian demand, and it is of course impossible under our system to export, so that the outlook of the farmer is not a happy one. On Monday the Bishop and Mr. Taffs rode to Mount Molloy, where the new little church occupies a commanding situation on the hill above the smelter. The place has grown much during the past year, and has every appearance of permanency. A new furnace has been erected in which by the simple process of inducing self-combustion by a strong blast of air the percentage of copper in the matte is raised from 44 to 99 per cent, thus saving a large sum in carriage and effecting other economies.

On the following day, a well-attended service was held in the little church, and after it a conversation was held in the School of Arts to welcome the Bishop, and a very pleasant evening was spent. The Bishop in his speech pleaded the cause of the Bible in State Schools League.

On the following day the Bishop returned to Port Douglas, and left for Cooktown next day by the Wyandra. On Saturday evening, he addressed a meeting of communicants at Cooktown, and the following day celebrated the Holy Communion and preached on "Thy Kingdom Come." The churchpeople of Cooktown met their Bishop in the best of ways, at the Holy Communion, there being twenty-nine present at the early celebration and twenty-one at midday. In the afternoon the Bishop addressed the Sunday School children, and left in the evening by the Maranoa for Thursday Island.

THE BISHOP.

The Bishop leaves for Croydon on January 15th. He requests that for the next two months all telegrams be addressed Croydon, as also all letters except those sent by the Maranoa mail, which should be addressed Vicarage, Normanston instead.

JAPANESE MISSION.

Miss Robson has kindly taken the Japanese classes on Wednesday and Sunday evenings, and there has been an encouraging revival in interest and attendance. The Bishop held a Japanese service in the Cathedral on the Sunday before Christmas, and his sermon on the Incarnation was translated by Mr. Kashiwagi. £4 has been sent away to purchase Japanese books on Christian teaching to form a lending library.

BIBLE IN STATE SCHOOL LEAGUE.

The object of the League is to secure for Queensland the system which has existed in New South Wales since 1866, in Tasmania since 1869, in Western Australia since 1893, and Norfolk Island 1906.

The three main principles are—

1. The teaching by the State School master in school hours of selected Bible lessons without denominational teaching.
2. Ministers of Religion to give during school hours Religious Instruction to children of their own denominations only.
3. A conscience clause so that no child receives any Religious Instruction against the wishes of its parents.

The Francis Pritt.

During the past year the "Francis Pritt" has made the following voyages in the service of the church.

On December 15th the "Francis Pritt" was put on the slip and thoroughly examined by Captain Cleveland. He reports that when certain minor repairs have been done she will not need recoppering for twelve months, and that she is perfectly dry and in better condition than when we bought her. The expense of recoppering next wet season will be very heavy, and we shall be glad to receive donations for that purpose. Great credit is due to the master John Wesely for the way in which he has looked after the boat as well as for the careful and skilful way in which he has navigated her. In spite of alternations of storm and calm, she has run with unflinching regularity, often returning before out never after the appointed day, even when little or no margin had been left.

It is obvious that it would have been impossible to work the Mitchell River Mission without the "Francis Pritt," and it will also be seen that she has on several occasions been of great use to the diocese. No record has been kept of the weight of stores every trip to the Mitchell; the total must be considerable.

PERSONAL NOTES.

Rev. W. Hudson, M.A., has resigned the parish of Croydon after four years faithful service in the diocese, on account of the education of his children. He goes as senior curate to All Saints, South Yarra.

Rev. S. Lewis, will be given a year's temporary duty by the Archbishop of Brisbane that he may prepare for his examination in a cooler climate and with more assistance.

Rev. A. E. Smith has been licensed as Chaplain at the Mitchell River Mission until Easter.

Mr. H. Ayscough of Bishops College obtained the fourth place in the second class of the Ph. L. examination of the Australian College of Theology. As only two names were placed in the first class, he was thus sixth out of 48 candidates.

Mr. H. Ayscough was ordained deacon on Sunday, December 23rd, and left two days later for Croydon where he will be licensed at present as assistant curate.

The Bishop will leave for Croydon on Jan. 5th and remain there until the question of a successor to Rev. W. Hudson has been decided.

Mr. T. A. Williams has returned from the Mitchell where he has been filling vacancies for the last eighteen months, and has resumed his work at Bishops College.

Mr. J. Perelle has been licensed as a lay worker at the Mitchell River Mission.

MISS ROBSON.

We are glad to announce that Miss Robson has accepted the post of Missionary Organising Secretary for the Diocese. She will also act as sub-editor of the Carpentarian. She will be glad if any clergy or churchworkers in the diocese will send her any items of news or accounts of their work, whether among our own people or the native races, that are likely to be of interest. She will also carry on the work of the Diocesan High School as usual.

DIOCESAN COUNCIL.

A meeting of the Diocesan Council was held at Bishops College on December 14th. Present, the Bishop, Subdean, Messrs Sullivan, O'Brien, and Walker. It was resolved to ask Miss Robson to undertake the work of Missionary Organising Secretary to the Diocese, to place the Douglas Memorial Tablet in the south aisle, and to ask Mr. Cleveland to inspect the Francis Pritt with a view to necessary repairs. It was resolved also to ask the architect for further details with regard to the completion of the S. aisle and to ask Mr. Smyth to act as Diocesan auditor.

MISSION WORK.

The Bishop of North Queensland has been busy preaching in the South on behalf of the Mitchell River Mission. As a result of the interest aroused it is probable that the Church Missionary Association of Victoria will undertake a Mission to the Aborigines on the western side of the Gulf of Carpentaria, the Bishop of Carpentaria having given his approval to the scheme. No details are however yet settled. The Bishop has secured us a new compass and patent log for the Francis Pritt and iron for the Mission House. We are very grateful to him for his labours on our behalf.

DIOCESAN HIGH SCHOOL.

The Diocesan High School broke up for the Xmas holidays on Friday the 14th December. After Prayers and some carol singing by the children the Bishop gave them an address on the meaning of the name of the school, which was evidently understood and appreciated by his hearers. The Bishop then distributed the prizes as follows:—Form I: Form Prize Rita Corran, Home-work Ruth George, Conduct Nancy Hodel. Special prize for conduct R. Carpenter. Form II: Form Prize Alma George, Special work prize Eileen Curtis, Conduct prize Eric Corran.

The proceedings terminated with the singing of God Save the King and cheers for the Bishop and the School.

Next term begins on Monday, January 28th.

The Carpenterian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA,
NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Volume VII.—No. 25. Thursday Island, Jan. 1, 1907

Bible in State Schools League.

An enthusiastic meeting was held in Brisbane in support of the Bible in State Schools League on Monday, October 29th, with the Archbishop of Brisbane in the chair. The speakers were Right Rev. Dr. Clouston, Moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly; Rev. Dr. Youngman, Wesleyan; Rev. Dr. James, Presbyterian, N.S.W.; and the Bishop of North Queensland. Drs. Clouston and James showed in the most conclusive way from personal experience that there were no difficulties whatever in working the N.S.W. plan, either as regards Bible reading or right of entry; and Dr. Youngman and the Bishop of North Queensland demanded emphatically that Parliament should not contradict a democratic principle in a democratic country by refusing to allow the people to express their opinion on a subject of so much importance. The earnestness of the meeting is shown by the fact that no fewer than 622 of the voters present signed a pledge that they would only vote for those candidates who would vote for the referendum. Many of those who voted against it in the House are now repenting at leisure. The most remarkable thing about the agitation is the way in which the ministers of various religious bodies have been drawn together over this matter in their common care for the children. The leading non-episcopal ministers, including the Moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly, met the Bishops on successive days at lunch at Bishopmount, joined in the midday office in the chapel, and, whatever the effect on them, certainly left the Bishops deeply impressed by their earnestness, capacity, and zeal for the highest interests of religion. Surely nothing but good can come from such a drawing together and personal intercourse, and we all owe a debt to the courtesy and conciliatory spirit of the Archbishop which has rendered such an approximation possible without any sense of compromise of position on either side. If the people are as unanimous as their pastors, there should be no difficulty at all. All the difficulties which have arisen are due to misunderstanding of the position. All we object to is that Parliament should say that the children shall not be taught what we believe a majority of the people wish them to be taught. The question is really a grave constitutional one. Is or is not Parliament to be superior to the will of the people? At present we are forbidden even to appeal to the will of the people. Can such a position be upheld? We shall see.

A Kindly Act.

The Bishop has received the following letter from the Bishop of Rochester: "A copy of the Carpenterian having come into my possession which described the destruction of the Church at Croydon in your diocese owing to the recent cyclone, I ventured to send it to Rev. L. W. Burrows, Vicar of Croydon, England, and asked him whether the sympathies of his congregation towards a parish of the same name in Queensland could take any practical form. I received a most warm and hearty reply, and I am glad to inform you that the morning offertory of the Harvest Thanksgiving Sunday at his parish Church was devoted to this object. I have this morning received from Sir Thomas Edridge, the Vicar's Churchwarden, a cheque for £54 17s. 2d. as the result."

We are sure that not only the parishioners of Croydon but all the diocese will feel grateful to the Bishop of Rochester for his kind thought and to the Vicar and Churchwardens for the generous way in which they responded to it. The Vicar adds, "The evening offertory did not suffer, but was slightly larger than usual."

Visit of the Bishop of North Queensland.

[BY THE BISHOP OF CARPENTARIA.]

On Thursday, August 28rd, I arrived at the Albert Bar by the Maranoa, and went on board the Francis Pritt, which had left Thursday Island the previous Friday. She had a terrible trip down. Although closely reefed down, she met such a gale for the first two days as to make all the crew ill; and when on Monday evening she had got within fifteen miles of the Bar a southerly gale struck her in the night and carried her some fifty miles to the north again. However, she arrived on Wednesday all well. I went on board at 11 a.m., and the wind promptly fell calm and left us for some time admiring the stern of the Maranoa. However, we gradually crept away, and by nightfall were half-way to the Albert Bar. As neither the skipper nor I knew anything of the coast except that it was the shallowest water in the Gulf, it was rather anxious work. We anchored at 8 p.m., and all next morning ran along the low and almost invisible coast-line. We had almost come to the conclusion that we must have passed the river when, at 12.30 p.m., I caught sight of a white beacon, and shortly afterwards we came on the entrance buoys. It was an anxious calculation in the few minutes available for it as to whether there was water for us to cross the bar, which has only 3½ feet at the lowest water; but we concluded we could do it, and as we had an unusually fair wind we did not wait for counsel or assistance from the Waterlily, which had not come out, but picked up our bearings on the excellent large-scale chart kindly given me by the Karumba pilot, and ran in on the flood tide without a hitch, and with, as it turned out, nearly 4 feet to spare. We passed the Waterlily in the entrance of the river and anchored, and I had a short talk with Rev. F. C. Hall, who was leaving Burketown for Georgetown after a six-weeks visit, during which he had been preparing some candidates for confirmation and visiting the people. I was not a little pleased to find that we had entered for the first time safely, as it had been somewhat on my mind; but the chart was very good and clear. After dinner we got up anchor and ran six miles up the river to the Ballast Ground, where we anchored. On Saturday morning I went ashore and saw the pegs marking the trial survey of the Lawn Hills railway and the wharves which it is proposed to erect here. The Albert is a magnificent and deep river from the heads to this point, and if only the comparatively narrow but shallow bar could be improved, it would be a splendid port up to this point.

Early on Sunday morning the Waterlily's whistle was heard and I went aboard her, and after a slow progress up the tortuous river arrived at Burketown at 2 p.m., just in time to take the Confirmation, which had been fixed for 4 p.m. Evening service was held in the Divisional Hall, a well-built and well-kept edifice. About midnight the wind began to blow from the south-east with terrific force making the whole house shake and making me rejoice that the Francis Pritt was safely anchored in the river instead of outside; but even then, I afterwards found, she dragged her anchor for some distance. Next day the wind rather increased than abated, and the town was hidden by clouds of driving dust. I was amused at a story Mr. S. told me of my first visit. I had landed at the Ballast Ground, and Mr. S. sent me down a horse in charge of a very "civilized" blackboy named Peter, who knew English well—too well, his detractor said. Mr. S. told him not to gallop nor attempt any wild feats of horsemanship, as he did not know whether the Bishop could ride or not. He afterwards asked Peter how the Bishop got on, on which Peter replied, "You had no jolly need to worry about that fellow. Why, when I got on, there he was walking about in his riding breeches." On the Monday I visited a number of the people, and in the afternoon the Bishop of North Queensland arrived from Cloncurry after a very dusty and unpleasant journey of five days. On the following day he gave a lecture in the Divisional Hall on "Some Modern Problems," and there was a large and most interested audience. On Wednesday morning we bade adieu to Burketown and drove over sixteen miles of dreary salt pans, across which a dense cloud of dust was blowing, to the Ballast Ground where we found the Francis Pritt waiting. We went on board and ran down the river and out through the Heads to the outer leading beacon where we anchored, as it was low water, and went ashore to fill and light the lamps as high water would be at night and it would not be safe to attempt the passage without the leading lights. The weather all day was intensely cold. About 2 a.m. the water had risen enough to make it safe to start, and guided by the lights we ran out without difficulty; but we had not got very many miles out to sea before we encountered a violent south-east gale and huge seas, the biggest I have ever seen in the Gulf. We shipped a great deal of water, and a sea came aft and floated the compass and put out the light three times. By daylight we were reduced to the closely reefed jigger and jib, under which the Francis Pritt rode the mountainous seas gallantly. With the exception of the skipper, every soul on board was seasick, and the cold was intense. The gale lasted all day, but moderated somewhat towards evening, when we sighted land at sunset and anchored some four or five miles from the shore, spending an unquiet night, as the wind had got to the south and the boat rolled heavily. Next morning we ran along the land, trying to identify our position two or three miles from the shore. We had just found three fathoms of water, and a little later we got two, and before we could go about we found ourselves aground on the inner side of a long sandbank over three miles from the shore. Fortunately the wind had moderated, and our skipper went prospecting in the dinghy and reported deeper water inshore. So we kedged her off without much trouble, as she was barely touching after had shifted the cargo forward; and we soon got two fathoms. So we beat back a little distance, and found the soundings suddenly change to four fathoms, and we had cleared the southern end of the bank after about four or five hours delay. Oh! for the day when the Gulf will be properly charted, and one or two landmarks erected! When we got outside we sailed till dark, and anchored somewhere near the mouth of the Nassau about sunset, the vessel rolling much during the night. Next morning we ran north again, and arrived at our beacon about 1 p.m., and landing after dinner in the dinghy through a somewhat rough sea, we found the horses waiting for us; and Mr. Matthews, the acting superintendent, lying under a tree with a bad attack of fever. However, he was able to get on his horse, and we reached the mission station about 5 p.m. and found all well. Next morning at 7 o'clock there was a celebration of Holy Communion. It was a very beautiful morning, and the service was a great refreshment after the anxieties of the last three days, and amid the abiding sense of the greatness and difficulty of the work here and the inadequacy of the means to do it. It helped one to realise yet again how impossible the whole work is unless with the power of God behind it. Some good people seem to rest content with this thought. They say, "Yes, it's God's work; and if it is His will it will succeed," and forget that His will is that we should work and give and pray for the work, and that He has never promised to make such work succeed while we never give anything to support it, nor take any interest in it, nor pray for its progress. God grant that the people of Australia may realise more clearly their duty to the aborigines. Meanwhile, we want more workers and more help. Nothing could exceed the devotion of the staff. No one is now receiving more than £25 a year, and they are living on less than is needed for health in order to spare the funds of the mission. They are doing their part nobly. Are the Church people of Australia going to be content to let their heroic efforts go for nothing, either because they cannot or do not understand what is being done and what is needed to be done? The whole sum contributed for aboriginal work is shamefully small, and of this the amount contributed to this mission apart from this diocese is absurd. Is it fair to leave to one of the smallest dioceses the chief part of the support of a mission which concerns all Australia, a mission not of this diocese but of the Australian Board of Missions? We had Sunday School and Morning Prayer at the station, and in the evening all formed a procession and marched off in beautiful moonlight to the native camp, singing as we went. At the camp we found over 100 men awaiting us, seated in a large semi-circle, and we had a short service, almost entirely of singing; after which I gave an account of the Parable of the Good Samaritan, in which the rôle of the despised Samaritan was taken by a blackfellow, and the scene laid in the bush. The audience listened most attentively, and for the first time when speaking through an interpreter I felt that I was really more or less grasped. After service we were surrounded by an excited throng, and had to shake hands with no less than three royalties before we made our escape amid loudly shouted farewells.

Early on Monday morning I rode with Bendigo down to the landing, and about a mile below it we met the whaleboat coming up. Bendigo rode back with the news, and presently returned with over sixty men belonging to various tribes camped near the mission, and we soon had a long procession wending its way to the mission, a bag of flour or rice, or a box of stores perched on each head, so that before midday all the stores were safely housed. The rest of the day was busily spent in going into accounts, stores, &c., and preparing for the morrow's start. On the following day, Tuesday, we rode down to the coast, accompanied by a dozen of our boys, got aboard the Francis Pritt about noon, and sailed immediately. The journey up the coast was a somewhat rough one, especially the last day when it was blowing hard, and we came in over the banks in order to save the long beat in from Booby Island. We arrived at Goode Island on Friday night, and reached Thursday Island early the following morning.

The Provincial Synod.

The first Provincial Synod of Queensland met in Brisbane on Tuesday, October 23rd. All the Bishops were present. The Diocese of Carpentaria was represented by Rev. W. M. Woods and W. P. Glover, both late of Thursday Island, and by Mr. J. Hughes, the Diocesan Treasurer; the Diocese of New Guinea by Rev. H. Newton and two natives, John and Francis; the other dioceses by clergy, and in one or two instances by laymen who had come down for the purpose. At the opening service the Bishop of Rockhampton, on behalf of the other Bishops, formally recognised the Archbishop of Brisbane as Metropolitan. The sermon was preached by the Bishop of Carpentaria on the text "He that plougheth ought to plough in hope." He said that the Synod was a new instrument wherewith to do the Church's work, and that its special field of operations was the State. The instrument must (1) be sufficiently in accordance with type to fulfil its original and primary purpose; (2) yet capable of change and adaption to new conditions; (3) capable of being used without mutual jealousy and confusion; (4) as far as possible on the same lines as other similar instruments; (5) not attempting what was beyond its proper sphere; (6) as far as may be, working with other instruments not designed by us; (7) in accordance with the legitimate demands of the State. The preacher concluded by expressing a belief that gradually the higher ideals would be realised by the Church.

The Archbishop delivered a powerful and statesmanlike address, dealing with the three great questions of supply of clergy, missions, and religious education in State schools. He drew special attention to the needs and opportunities of the Mitchell River Mission. The address was listened to with the deepest attention and, together with the sermon, ordered to be printed.

The first proceeding of the Synod was to declare its assent to the Constitution agreed upon by the dioceses, which was done unanimously. Three canons were passed by the Synod:—

- (1) A canon constituting the Provincial Synod. In this canon it was laid down that the clerical representatives must be licensed to officiate in the diocese which they represent, but a special exception was made in favour of the dioceses of New Guinea and Carpentaria.
- (2) An Interpretation Canon. Some considerable difficulty arose on the interpretation of the word "Missionary Diocese," which was happily settled by the suggestion of the Bishop of Rockhampton, "a Diocese declared by the Provincial Synod to be a Missionary Diocese for such time as the Synod shall declare."

- (3) A canon for accepting the Determinations of General Synod. All these were accepted except the determination for providing a Clergy Superannuation Scheme.

A number of resolutions were also passed. These included one in favour of Religious Education in the State schools, which brought out some fine speeches from the Bishops of North Queensland and New Guinea, and others. A resolution was unanimously passed condemning the impropriety of associating raffles, lotteries, and games of chance with bazaars and sales of work in aid of any funds for Anglican Church purposes. A long discussion took place on the advisability of starting a Church Fire Insurance Society. The Bishop of Carpentaria pointed out many serious dangers involved in such a course. It was resolved to refer the matter to the Diocesan Synods for their opinion. It was agreed that the Dioceses of New Guinea and Carpentaria be declared missionary dioceses until otherwise ordered by the Synod. Generally speaking, the debates were of a high order, and there was neither waste of time, nor any serious division of opinion. The most contentious matter was the Tribunal Canon, but this was postponed without debate till next Synod. An important committee was appointed to consider the legal position of the Provincial Synod, and to take action if necessary after submitting their proposals to the dioceses concerned. It was agreed that the next meeting should be held in Brisbane instead of Townville; this action has to be confirmed by a majority of the dioceses.

The Archbishop made an ideal chairman, and our own treasurer, Mr. J. Hughes, was appointed Chairman of Committees.

Many members of Synod were saddened by the evident feebleness of body of the revered Bishop of Rockhampton, though it was abundantly evident that it was a feebleness of body alone. The Bishop of New Guinea, on the other hand, seems to have quite recovered, and was in better health than he has been for years.

The Synod must be pronounced a great success, and it is full of promise for the future. All the Bishops were the guests of the Archbishop at Bishopsbourne, and three meetings were held to consider questions of Provincial interest, among which may be mentioned the scheme for a Provincial Training College for Clergy.

At the recent Provincial Synod of Queensland, the Bishop of North Queensland (Right Rev. Dr. Frodsham) moved,—“That this Synod desires to express its conviction that the question of religious education in the State should be kept above the limitations of party politics and religious differences, and that this can only be done upon the basis of freedom for every citizen. Believing that the facilities allowed under clauses 7, 17, and 18 of the Public Instruction Act of New South Wales allow such freedom, and in view of the urgent importance of the subject, this Synod pledge itself to support the Bible in State Schools League's effort to test by referendum, to be taken at an early date, the feelings of the electors as to the advisability of introducing similar facilities into the State Education Act of Queensland.” He said he thought the motion was only putting in concrete form what had been so ably said by the Archbishop in his address. Education of a Christian character was a subject of great importance, and should be kept out of party politics. It was not a question dealing with this or that Church, and should be kept apart from sectarian issues. The system of education advocated had been tried with success in other states and in Norfolk Island. The whole policy of the Bible in State School League had been to avoid the raising of sectarian differences or religious bitterness. They regretted that the position was now that the matter had to be brought on at the State elections. They deeply regretted that the members of Parliament, when the measure was before them, had not given way to what was the demand of a large section of the community, and given a referendum at the forthcoming elections. (Applause.) But the position had been forced upon the league, and he felt he was voicing the opinion of the Churchmen of North Queensland and of others when he said that they were absolutely determined that this matter should not be buried in any way. (Applause.) If they did not succeed at the next elections they would organise and organise until their cry should be heard all over the State. (Applause.) This matter rested on the great foundation of liberty. They were prepared to give liberty to those who thought differently from themselves, but they felt that their feelings and desires should be received with some respect. He, for one, would never bring this subject into a sectarian dispute. It was one of liberty—liberty to the people to deal with the State schools which they supported, and liberty to have their children taught in the way they conscientiously believed to be fit and right. (Applause.) They did not desire to bring the matter into party politics, but wished to have it settled solely upon the question of liberty. They intended that their voice should be heard, not merely for the sake of the Anglican Church, but for all those who believed that Christian education was essential for the wellbeing of this part of Australia. (Applause.)

Rev. J. B. Armstrong seconded the motion, and said that nobody would more welcome this question being kept out of party politics than would the Bible in State Schools League. (Applause.)

The motion was carried unanimously.

Archdeacon Garland moved,—"That the Synod of the Province of Queensland directs attention to the obvious and undeniable fact that the practices of betting and gambling have now grown to be a menace to the national character and it calls upon all members of the Anglican Communion within the Province to set their faces against the evil by altogether abstaining, even in the more innocent aspect, from practices which are fraught with danger to the whole of the community. And the Provincial Synod expresses the gravest sense of the impropriety of associating raffles, lotteries, and games of chance with Bazaars and sales of work in aid of any funds for Anglican Church purposes. The Provincial Synod further expresses the desire and hope that the Government will so administer the existing law and at an early date introduce such legislation as will tend to limit the evils arising from betting and gambling, and requests his Grace the President to convey this resolution to the Government." He said the first two clauses were taken from the pastoral of the Bishops of Australia. When Bishops poke in those terms there was some great reason for their utterances. With regard to the third paragraph, he hoped that the pronouncement would go forth to every member of the Church of England in the Province of Queensland that raffles and games of chance for Church purposes were most improper. (Applause.) In that day's "Courier" there was a statement in the commercial column—a column, he supposed few clergymen read, to the following effect:—Leading retail grocers, discussing a recent reference in the "Courier" to the dulness of business in the face of the prosperous condition of all the great primary industries, state that October business is invariably affected by the Victorian racing carnival. One grocer states that small weekly grocery accounts, which are normally at 10s. to 12s., will shrink during October to 6s. or 7s., while another grocer stated that he estimated that October purchases of groceries shrank about 25 per cent." What did it mean? It meant that many children of the middle and working classes went without the proper necessities of life in order that money might be found for gambling and betting. This evil would affect the health and the welfare of the future generation. With regard to the introduction of legislation, that would be necessary, because the new South Wales Parliament had adopted a most drastic anti-gambling law. Men who lived by betting were leaving that State, but were met by an even stricter bill in Victoria. In order to protect Queensland it was imperative that similar legislation should be adopted here. While gambling was not the greatest or the only evil in this State, it was a sufficiently great evil to warrant them trying to better the state of things in Queensland. (Applause.)

The Archbishop of Brisbane (Dr. Donaldson) said they must teach the people of Australia to realise that gambling and betting was not sport. (Applause.) He had seen the day when football was a really manly game. Then came the days of professionalism and betting, and the result was that the sport was not now played so largely. He did want to appeal to the members of society. With the Bishop of North Queensland he recognised the limits of legislation. He did not trust to the instrumentality of the power of fashion. Bridge had a peculiar fascination for some people, who could not shake it off. Then, he thought, the time had come when those people should think of their position. He appealed to the leaders of society throughout Queensland to assist by example in overcoming the evil of gambling.

The motion was carried unanimously.

By the Way.

When a preacher fails to convey to his hearers a vivid and convincing representation of a religious truth they are apt to assume either that he is incompetent or that the so called truth has no existence, but may it not often be that the truth cannot be adequately expressed in language at all? Is it not almost impossible to adequately express even physical truths. For instance I am looking down on the ocean from a lofty cliff. By what method can I convey any true impression of its surface touched by a hundred delicate gradations of colour, shot by countless cross lights and wrinkled by a gentle breeze into millions of rippling ever changing surfaces, I gaze at it entranced and I know without words what it is like; but the moment I withdraw my eyes and try to write it down I am conscious of cold.

ness and loss. The representation is not the thing. Even Aeschylus's "many twinkling smile of ocean" leaves me but half satisfied. A preacher speaks of the glory of the vision of God's Holiness, or the joy of self sacrifice he may be expressing a very real fact though his language be ludicrously inadequate.

I once saw a man dive beneath the surface of a filthy canal and bring up from the bottom the senseless body of a boy to be restored again to the fortune of life. So does the Holy Spirit of God come down to the soul of the prodigal lying dead in trespasses and sin, and lift it up through the filthy flood to air of restored life. When this happens a man's friends often run to the canal to fill little phials with the dirty water that they may keep them to show him afterwards least he should forget that which once covered him. It is sad that the man should not always be properly grateful for this thoughtful kindness.

Nature is calming and restful because she never says "I told you so." She exacts absolute obedience to her laws. She punishes the transgressor with unfailing justice and impartial severity, but she utters no recrimination and she is as bountiful to the repentant sinner as to the perfect saint. The penalty is there because by the law of things it has to be there, and it smites the unwitting transgressor as heavily as the wilful one, but the beauty and the love are there out of an overflowing bounty which gives and asks no questions and has no hidden rebukes. Is it not the mirror of God who punishes because to be true to righteousness, he must punish sin. Who is full of love even for the unloving, and who never allows us to remember that the fulness of His forgiveness is undeserved.

What a depth of quiet satire lay in the cry of the last steamer load of expelled Islanders as the ship left the wharf at Cairns "Good-bye Queensland! good-bye White Australia! good-bye Christians!" Whatever may be said in favour of the action taken with regard to the Islanders, nothing can be said in defence of the vile language of abuse employed by many newspapers, or the bitterness of hatred which has been too often exhibited towards a harmless and defenceless people. To talk and write of "the filthy kanaka" "the leprous black man" "the vile alien" is simply to support a perhaps justified economic policy by reckless appeals to passion and prejudice, and it is small wonder if the boys say "Goodbye Christian!" to the land where many of them have learnt the strangely different precepts of Christ.

Earth and Sky.

The swagman woke up from his reverie with a start, something wet had splashed against his hand. He glanced up at the sky, but it was as brass. The sharp circle of the sun was sinking out of a dark quivering indigo blue sky, into the red glow, like that of furnace mouth, that hung over the hard black rim of the down, stretching like an iron bar one unbroken length as far as the eye could reach. A little whirlwind had just passed him and was a fierce eddy of dust and dry ends of grass. In every direction it was the same; above the brazen sky; below, a vast level plain covered with dry yellow grass; no trees, no break, no living creature within sight, a land that might have blossomed as the rose but for one thing; Nature had denied it even one drop of water, save when once a year it seemed like the Garden of the Lord for a few short weeks. The man glanced downwards, and his heart came into his mouth with fear. Confident in his strength he had rejected all advice, and ventured on the 60-mile dry stage with only a waterbag to stave off death. All day he had tramped through the blazing sun, and in spite of the mocking mirages which tortured him with their cool pools and shaded lakes he had refrained from touching the waterbag. He knew that the second day would be worse than the first, and wished to keep all he could. For the last hour he had been tramping on, plunged in a deep reverie, till he awoke by the ominous drop. As he glanced down he saw that the water bag was empty. It had sprung a leak, the very gradual diminution had prevented him from noticing the alteration of weight, and it had been the last drop that the wind had hurled up against his hand. The man flung himself down in an access of rage and despair and gazed with lack-lustre eyes at the setting sun. What was a man there on that vast plain between earth and sky; each went its own resistless way; the sun to rise on the tumbling waves of ocean; and the earth to rest in the shades of night; and neither with a thought for the wretched being that lay with weary limbs and parched throat, and shook his fist at the unheeding sky. By degrees the man grew calmer, as the sun sank and the stars beamed forth from the darkening sky. Earth and sky, earth and sky, were they indeed all? Was man a mere interloper; a mere insect of the day who intertered at his peril with the play of the great powers of nature? He thought of his own life; the hopes with which he had come to Australia; the success that he had first met with; the subsequent failure due his conscience told him entirely to his own folly; the money gained by strenuous toil in the far West; the weak yielding to senseless folly of reckless companions, the drink and gambling at the bush townships that had left him as poor as before; the sudden accident that had brought him to his senses a year ago. The hardly kept determination to waste his life no longer; the year's earning, rather than break into which he had risked this journey instead of going round by coach; was this to be the end of all, a thirst maddened death? Somehow there came back to him words of long ago. "Like as a father pitieth his own children; even so is the Lord merciful unto them that fear him." He thought of his own home; how had his father and mother wept as they parted with their first-born son. How full of hope had been his own letters, written once a week and full of promises of help that he would shortly be able to send. How long was it since he had written home, three years? Nearer four; nor had he heard, for he had neglected to give an address to which his letters could be forwarded; left them to be returned to the sorrowing old folks marked not known. He had resolved to change all that. Every penny should go home, and as soon as possible he would go himself, but now—they would never learn how he had lied; perhaps it was better so. He had wasted his life and he must bear the consequences. Was there no one who cared for him? How the old people had loved him and what a poor return he had made, yet he knew the glad light of welcome that would come into his eyes, and his mother would sob on his breast. Was there no other who would pity him and help him? Yes, there was God the Father Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth, but he had thought of Him as little—well, as little as he had thought of his earthly father—yet he knew that one still loved him, did not the other? What were those words, again? "Like as a father pitieth his children, even so is the Lord Merciful to those that fear him." It was little fear and reverence he had paid him, but what were those words the old parson always began the service with when he used to go to Church as a child? "To the Lord our God belong mercies and forgivenesses, though we have rebelled against, neither have we obeyed the voice of the Lord our God." He looked up into the watchful eyes of stars, and he thought of his wilfulness and his folly till his heart was soft within him, and he knelt on his knees, and cried aloud for pardon and pity to his father in heaven. Then he slept a wild broken sleep, to wake with parched lips and burning throat, and watched the rise of the star that heralded the dreaded, yet wished for, light of day.

The dawn found him with little hope, but with a strong determination to make a push for life. His throat was too dry to eat, but before setting his face along the road to safety he cast a glance around the horizon. Something caught and arrested his eye, by some low bushes a couple of miles away. He gazed intently: there was no doubt about it, it was the flash of wings. Fall of new hope he turned towards the spot and found a flock of Galahs, hovering over a small deep waterhole that had somehow escaped the prevailing drought. Full of new-born gratitude he knelt for the second time, to thank the Heavenly Father; and after resting a whole day by the precious hole he set his face once more, confidently, for the east, a humbler and more grateful man for the night 'twixt earth and sky.

MITCHELL RIVER NEWS.

The Francis Pritt returned from the Mitchell River on December 15th with the latest news of the mission.

On her way down she took Mr. James Perelle, a Victorian lay worker, who has volunteered to assist Mr. Matthews the Acting Superintendant and Rev. A. E. Smith, late of Croydon, who has volunteered to go down and assist on the mission until Easter.

On the arrival of the Pritt at the Beacon it was found that a heavy sea was running but Mr. Smith being anxious to land in order to give notice of the boat's arrival set off for the shore in the dinghy accompanied by Andrew. When about 200yds. from the shore the dinghy filled and capsized and Mr. Smith, who cannot swim, was in considerable danger, but by the help of Andrew he got on to the capsized boat and some of the wild natives swam out with pieces of wood and brought him safe ashore. Next day the sea was quieter and Mr. Perelle landed in safety, but the whaleboat was capsized with a cargo of flour, but fortunately close to the shore and the cargo was not much damaged. Mr. T. A. Williams returned to Thursday Island and will resume his interrupted studies there. The Superintendent writes most cheerfully of the progress of the mission.

The forge given by the Archbishop has been erected and all materials are in hand for a dray with 4in. tyres, which will be built during the wet season. The mosquito-proof room also given by the Archbishop has been erected and has proved an immense boon, as the staff can take refuge within it and laugh at the vindictive little vampires who last season made life almost unendurable.

The boys' dormitory has been doubled in size and rethatched, a new cottage has been built and the old one repaired.

A large garden has been made and the mission is well supplied with vegetables, goats and fowls are multiplying rapidly.

An area has also been planted with corn which is looking well. The conduct of the natives has been excellent and the full number of residents is maintained. The Station has been visited by Mr. Howard, the protector, who expressed himself as much pleased with all he saw, and who advised the planting of cocoanuts on the beach. The boundaries of the Reserve have been marked out by Mr. McCowan, Government Surveyor, who sent a subscription to the mission to express his sense of the good work that is being done. A new store has been erected at the mission capable of holding six months supplies, and the old iron used in the erection of a store near the beacon on the coast which will be very useful for stowing goods on arrival. A well has been sunk 10ft. deep near the beacon and walled with stone. Although only about 100yds. from salt water it has a good supply of excellent water. All the members of the staff are in good spirits and are looking forward to getting a lot of work on the station done during the wet.

NOTICE.

Will friends sending parcels of goods of any kind from other states in Australia, whether for the Mitchell River or the diocese kindly remember to send by the same mail shipping invoice, and also an interstate certificate form. The neglect of these necessary forms has involved us in constant delay and trouble with the customs, and sometimes in pecuniary loss in addition.

It will be seen that over £7 of the above came from a single parish. We hope the other parishes will note and not delay their offerings.

One more relic from the "Quetta" will be placed in the cathedral this month, namely, one of the ship's hanging lamps; it has first to be freed from the impedimenta which it has gathered to itself during its sixteen years sojourn at the bottom of the sea. It was brought up by a party working on the wreck.

THE DIOCESE.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east, by the Northern Territory on the west, and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19deg 30min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east par. 144 and thence N. to lat. S. 16deg. 40min., and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory of South Australia, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 sq. miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 16,500 whites, 7,000 Japanese, Chinese and other aliens, and 35,000 aboriginals. The white population is chiefly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre N. of Cape York.

FINANCE.

The Diocese has no endowment beyond the Bishop's income of £300 per annum.

MISSIONS.

Missions are carried on among the Japanese at Thursday Island, among the S. Sea Islanders at Thursday Island and Mosman, and among the aboriginals on the Mitchell River.

SPECIAL OFFERTORIES.

On Easter Day the offertories are given to the Clergyman of the Parish, and on Good Friday to the Australian Board of Missions.

Religion in France.

We are frequently told that the treatment of the Church in France is a sign, not of opposition to religion, but of a broad-minded Protestantism which wishes for its own good to free religion from State trammels, and the example of the French Parliament has been invoked by fervid Nonconformist orators in England as an example and precedent for the British Parliament to follow. Those who talk thus are either ignorant of facts or living in a fool's paradise. The actual mind of the French Parliament may be accurately gathered from the fact that by a large majority the Chamber has ordered a speech by M. Viviani, the Minister, to be placarded at the cost of the State in every commune in France, for the instruction and edification of the people. In this speech M. Viviani says: "The Third Republic has summoned round it the children of artisans and peasants, and instilled into their dim minds by degrees the seed of revolutionary instruction. But that was not enough. All in unison through our forefathers', our fathers', and our own decision, we have associated ourselves in the past in the work of anti-clericalism, in the work of irreligion. We have liberated the human conscience from Faith. When some poor wretch, weary with the weight of his daily labour, kneels to pray, we lift him up; we say to him that behind its mists there is nothing but chimeras. Together and with magnificent gesture we have extinguished in Heaven the lights that will never be lit afresh." After this one learns without astonishment that the Chamber has ordered the ancient motto, "God protect France," to be omitted from the rim of the 20-franc pieces. France is once more engaged in deliberately rejecting God. Are our own Nonconformist brethren so blinded by passion that they still wish to see in her a guide and example?

Church Union.

ANGLICANS AND PRESBYTERIANS.

A conference between representatives of the Anglican and Presbyterian Churches of Australia, convened by the Archbishop, to consider the possibility of arriving at a basis of union, was held in the Chapter House, Melbourne, on Tuesday, 27th November, and following days. The discussion was conducted in private but subsequently the following report was issued:—

1. We hold the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testament as containing all things necessary to salvation to be the rule and ultimate standard of faith.

2. We accept the Apostles' Creed and the Nicene Creed as expressing the fundamental doctrines of the Christian faith, and as an adequate basis for any further formulated statement of Christian truth which may be needed.

3. We agree that there are two sacraments ordained by Christ Himself—Baptism and the Supper of the Lord—which must be ministered with unflinching use of Christ's words of institution and of the elements ordained by Him.

4. That the Act of Ordination, when regularly administered, involves prayer and the imposition of hands.

5. With regard to Ordination, this Conference affirms the following to be essential conditions: 1. Full membership of the Church. 2. The inward and personal call of the Holy Spirit. 3. The recognition by the Church of this call after due inquiry into intellectual and spiritual fitness.

6. The laying on of hands in Ordination, we understand to be a visible symbol of the bestowal, in answer to the Prayer of Faith, of authority and grace by the Holy Spirit for the work of the ministry.

7. The authority to perform an Act of Ordination comes from God the Father, through Christ the Mediator, by the Holy Spirit as the Living Agent in the Church, and is exercised by the appointed officers of the Church.

External Aid to Worship.

We are sometimes told that worship is possible without any external aids. This is quite true as far as it goes. It is possible under favourable circumstances that a ship may sail into port by the use of her unaided canvas; but it does not follow that a tug is therefore useless or inadvisable.

We are told that mere external worship is bad. Quite true, but why should it be 'mere'? A child may kiss his mother in order to get at the contents of the cupboard. Does it follow that because this is hypocrisy no child ought ever to give any sign of affection?

Why is it desirable to use external aids to worship.

1. God directed their use in the ancient Jewish Church. Dress, ceremonial, incense, all tended to help the worshipper to worship God better, else why did He order them?

2. Christ joined in the Temple worship. It was a true House of Prayer and the desecration of it was purged with the only violence that he ever used.

3. Christians attended the Temple services until its destruction.

4. The Revelation of St. John, a purely Christian book, the work of an Apostle, is full of outward aids to worship, white robes, incense, palms, lights, music, golden altars, postures of prayer.

5. Early Christianity, though driven by persecution to simple forms, was full of symbolism, the fish as the sign of Christ, the cross, the palm branch, the white robe, the agape as well as the Eucharist.

6. Externals are a real aid in the expression of a common idea or tradition. We see this in the elaborate ritual of Masons, Oddfellows, Orange Lodges and the Salvation Army.

7. To discourage outward expression of religious feeling is to deprive men of the opportunity of offering their best to God. There is no special sanctity in bareness, baldness and ugliness. That was the mistake of the mediæval hermits. We need not repeat it.

8. The external expression of religion is a social act and duty. A man may compose a very beautiful poem, but as long as he keeps it entirely to himself no one benefits by it. It needs to be expressed in outward form before it can help others.

9. Finally, man is body as well as spirit and he needs to worship God with his whole self—body and spirit both.

For all these reasons religion ought to express itself in external acts of worship of an ordered and reverent kind.

Efficiency.

An industrious and dispassionate observer, Dr. Shadwell, in his new book, "Industrial Efficiency," draws a dark picture of the industrial future of England. He says:—"The once enterprising manufacturer has grown slack; he has let the business take care of itself, while he is shooting grouse or yachting in the Mediterranean. That is his business. The once unequalled workman has adopted the motto, 'Get as much and do as little as possible'; his business is football or betting. Each blames the other. . . . Then the manufacturer complains of being handicapped in various ways; and he is justified. He is handicapped by laws and by-laws and obsolete regulations, which have the effect of hindering him in some respects without any setoff in the way of help. And what do these mean but carelessness and neglect on some one's part? Legislators who pass laws without taking the trouble to ascertain the facts, or understand what they are doing, or who fail to alter obsolete and detrimental ones, such as the patent laws and the tax on industrial alcohol; Government Departments too indolent to watch events and adapt regulations to changing conditions; local authorities applying by-laws without discretion, piling up rates without thought and administering the poor law without care; everybody bent on pleasure and amusement. That is the universal business. No one is in a position to abuse the rest; they are all in the picture, and wear the same expression from top to bottom of the social scale. Not every individual, of course, but every class. We are a nation at play. Work is a nuisance, an evil necessity to be shirked and hurried over as quickly and easily as possible in order that we may get away to the real business of life—the golf course, the bridge table, the cricket and football field, or some other of the thousand amusements which occupy our minds, and for which no trouble is too great."

It is a saddening thought for those who love England, that, as Dr. Shadwell says, she is being steadily displaced by more hardworking and less pleasure-seeking peoples; but after all it is better that England's glory should depart than that God's eternal laws should fail. Better England a memory of the past than England corrupt and yet continuing to prosper; better for England as well as for the faith of the world. The facts are not without a lesson for Australia, which spends more than twice as much on amusements as it does on charity and religion combined, and ten times as much on drink and tobacco.

President Roosevelt on Marriage.

The President of the United States in his last message to Congress uses some words which we in Australia would do well to ponder. "When home ties are loosened, when men and women cease to regard a worthy family life, with all its duties fully performed and all its responsibilities lived up to, as the life best worth living, the evil days for the Commonwealth are at hand. There are regions in our land and classes in our population where the birth rate has sunk below the death rate. Surely it should need no demonstration to show that wilful sterility is from the standpoint of the human race the one sin for which the penalty is national death, race death; a sin for which there is no atonement, a sin which is the more dreadful exactly in proportion as the man and women guilty thereof are in other respects, in character and bodily and mental powers, those whom for the sake of the State it would be well to see the fathers and mothers of many healthy children, well brought up in homes made happy by their presence. No man, no woman, can shirk the primary duties of life, whether for love of ease and pleasure or for any other cause, and retain his or her self-respect."

What hope is there for Australia in the future, unless she lays the President's words well to heart? Some other simpler, more natural, and more worthy race will take the place we might have had.

Discouragement.

These words are addressed to the clergy, church workers, and those to whom their Christian faith is a living reality.

There are many crises, some common to our age, some peculiar to our own circumstances, which bring discouragement at times, even to the bravest.

There are many townships so small that, when the careless and indifferent have been eliminated, there are but one two or three left whose zeal is undiminished and faith undimmed.

Take the morning service, whether it be Matins or the Divine Service instituted by our Blessed Lord as a Pledge of His Love to our great and endless comfort.

It is no longer fashionable to attend, as it is still to some extent with regard to Evensong. The faithful believer follows the church bell and passes by house after house where the husband is sprawling in his shirt sleeves reading the Sydney "Bulletin," the wife yawning in a wrapper waiting her turn for the same spiritual food and sustenance.

He enters the church and he finds a few children and two or three adults. The service is perforce maimed and inadequate, and the preacher lacks fire as he gazes sadly at the empty seats.

Note, it is not the fault of the parish priest. So far as we have been able to observe the most earnest and devoted parish priest is little more successful than the most perfunctory in bringing people to the Morning Prayer. The few to whom worship is a reality come. The great majority never dream of coming at all, because church attendance to them means something other than worship in its proper sense.

These morning services with their empty seats are very depressing. It requires a real effort to shake off the load of other people's indifference, to see with the eye of faith the unseen companies of angels, to see Christ Himself pledged to be present where only two or three are gathered in His name.

Yet to stay away because worshippers are few is an act of most gross spiritual selfishness; others need the support and help of your presence; and will you dare to say that because things are bad you will deliberately make them worse? Not such were the first Christians.

This makes us cry, "Yes, it would be far easier if the world were frankly heathen! What oppresses us is that all these people, the majority of the town, the country, are professedly Christian, and yet where is the reality of what they profess? They treat worship as a thing utterly indifferent, or at best as a decent occupation for a free Sunday evening; when they are asked to give the most trifling sums for the support of their Church they shuffle and ask the weary collector to call again; they do not practise at home the religion which they neglect at Church, for their lives and actions are governed by the most worldly maxims, and they would look in astonishment at any one who gave a saying of Christ as a real reason for practical action."

It is hard for a parish priest to look back at his list of confirmation candidates of four or five years ago (or rather his predecessor's) and count up how many have even for that short time been faithful to their vows.

It is sadder still for him to celebrate Sunday after Sunday the Sacred Mysteries of the dying Redeemer's love, and to note that to a majority even of churchgoers and sometimes even of churchworkers they have no place in their life or thoughts.

It is no use to say that all this is not depressing. It is and ought to be both depressing and humiliating. Still there are some thoughts worth noting on the other side:—

1.—Christianity has undoubtedly a great hold on Australia. In the aggregate a great deal of religious work is going on and the power of the religious conscience is demonstrated by, for instance, the dropping of Senator Dobson's Divorce Bill. In our own diocese here is much earnest work, and proportionately to the poverty of the people a considerable sum is raised to support it, though it represents—it is to be feared—much more the self-sacrifice of the few than the just dues of the many. If anyone doubts that Australia is on the whole a religious country, let him study the contemporary social and political conditions in France.

2.—We must never forget the enormous negative influence of the Church and of sincerely religious people in limiting, checking, and rolling back what is evil. Even bad men, even the most cold-blooded politicians, respect conviction, once they are convinced it is sincere. They will not go against it without strong reason; only because aroused conviction is apt to give trouble. Genuine Christianity and deep religious conviction act as a check on national deterioration. They hold out ideals which stubbornly persist, and which warn, and sometimes recall. Even the daily sound of the office bell is a reminder to the worldly that there are others in the world who live for an end that is not merely of this world.

3.—With regard to the distressing neglect of public worship, and more especially neglect of those parts which ought least to be neglected we must remember—(a) That in the North at least a great part of our own people have lived at some part of their lives in the bush, where public worship was not possible and the sense of its need has become atrophied. (b) Owing to the absence of religious instruction in State schools and the inadequacy of Sunday school to supply its place, the ignorance of the younger generation is profound on all religious subjects. (c) That we are still suffering from the effects of the scientific negation of five and twenty years ago. It is only very slowly that the results of modern thought really affect the lives of the people; practically they only affect the young, and nearly a generation elapses before these in turn set the tone of the day. It will be only slowly that the more reverent attitude of modern knowledge will be reflected in the minds of the people. (d) It is some gain not to be blinded by fashion, but to see things as they are. No one can really desire the days when absence from church meant presentation to the Archdeacon's Court and a heavy fine. Only the trouble is to-day that many weak souls stay away from church only because it is the fashion to do so. (e) We need have no fear whatever about religion. All history shows that it is an ineradicable instinct in man. Forms and manner may change, tides may ebb and flow, but religion always reappears. In proportion as we are in earnest we are always in danger of overestimating the badness of our own times. Our own difficulties we know; those of other times we do not. There is in reality much to encourage.

4. Probably there never was a time in the world's history when men thought so much about religion. A great deal of the thought was wild, extravagant, and foolish. Men are devoting life and fortune to religious conviction which we believe to be either utterly inadequate or positively harmful, because through the unreality of nominal Christians they have been repelled from the true faith; but the earnestness, the search after truth, is there, and we cannot doubt that it will be ultimately rewarded. It is strange and encouraging, for example, to read Professor Haeckel's lament over the eminent men of science who have abandoned his principles for the Christian Faith. Let it be our part to be patient, hopeful, steadfast, and when the tide turns it will find in its leaders trained and disciplined by adversity.

Exhortation.

PAR EDOUARD ROD.

This is a most interesting and instructive book. It is difficult to have much patience with the hero, if he can be called hero, Valentin. Unfortunate in his birth, lonely in his sensitiveness, side, unsuccessful in life as in love, he is in revolt against everything and everybody. He fails in his degree because, though clever enough to read anything and everything except the books prescribed. He fails as a tutor to satisfy his employer because he rebels against the tutor's brutal efforts to constrain the conscience of his son, who has become "tainted with the new" of Christianity, and he forfeits the confidence of his pupil by making him submit to an equally brutal insult to his faith. He fails again in his examinations because, instead of studying for them, he spends his leisure in musing on the injustice of the world and the sufferings of "not l'unique." He loses his lady love for want of a thing, and his friend because he will not tolerate his pity. The type is well known both in fiction and in real life, and need not detain us. The chief interest of the book is in the careful portraiture of two types which have now a predominant influence in French political life and of whose influence in England so there are not a few signs.

Valentin's uncle Romanèche, editor of "Egalité" and Socialist Deputy, is a striking portrait. Hard, strong, and capable, he has devoted his life to the advancement of free thought, the destruction of religious belief, the socialisation of land and means of production, the rejection of all compromise, the complete triumph of the proletariat. In the pursuit of his objects he displays an almost religious self-satisfaction. He is scrupulously honest amid the many opportunities of political jobbery. He is content to remain poor, and to give all his leisure to dry and wearisome work. He cannot even conceive the possibility of truth and justice not being entirely on his side. The Church is the enemy of truth, the stronghold of superstition, the delayer of the golden age of Reason and Social Equality. It must be exposed and crushed by any and by every means. The most urgent task of democracy is to have done with those ancient enemies which hinder its advance; their return to power, always a possibility, would be the greatest disaster that could come upon the country; we must expunge them utterly as you tear away from your vines the couch grass with its long, creeping, greedy, murderous roots."

At one with Romanèche in his enthusiasm for "The Cause" is the pushing, successful agent, Urbain Lourtier. Lax and selfish in his morals, brutal and material, making a large income by skilful investments of capital, in his views of life he is yet content to live like a poor man, to drink no wine, that he may devote ample means to the Socialist propaganda. Fish as he is, something in it has touched and held him.

Yet his friend Valentin, sceptical to the core, has a little faith in the new socialist creed as it has in Christianity. "You are as great as the saints as the old. Your 'Ideal City' is the miracle of prison that you are offering them as a palace. You stand at the gate and bow them in, then you will shoot the bolt and be their masters. We shall only have changed warders! Not even that . . . You are not proletariat whatever you may say. At heart you are bourgeois. . . . You have all the vices of your caste. You are egotistic, rapacious, tyrannical, cruel, vulgar. . . . No, no; it is not you who will regenerate the world."

Yet another member of the party is found in the wealthy manufacturer of cheap champagne—Frümsel. He has joined it partly because he is afraid of it and desires to be on the winning side if it should succeed in upsetting things as they are; partly to gratify his vulgar hatred of religion and the Church.

The two representatives of Christianity are not altogether happy. Claude Brévent is, it is true, a bright happy figure full of faith, zeal, and good works; and Valentin admits that he never had a truer friend, but Désiré Frümsel, Valentin's pupil, is somewhat hysterical. In neither case is the intellectual side of Christianity at all represented. The minor characters—the gross, selfish, old bird fancier Lourtier, his somewhat sly daughter Palue-Andrée, the servile little priest Don Abbondis, are all drawn with skilful and life-like touches.

The real question suggested by the book is: How is it that men like Romanèche, and even men like Urbain Lourtier, reject utterly the Christian Faith and yet are willing to deny themselves, even to the death, as we have seen abundantly of late in Russia, for what they believe to be the good of their less fortunate fellow men?

Even supposing that many of their aims are unwise, and would not really promote the happiness of the people it gained, yet the fact remains that they would do so, that they are striving in name certainly, in reality very often, in intention most frequently, for people's good. How comes it that these men are against and not on the side of the Church? The object for which they strive, or think they strive, is an ideal first propounded by the Christian Church, and has been the aim of the Christian Church from the beginning. How comes it that the Church, however unjustly, is regarded by men who are prepared to devote their life and welfare to the advancement of their less fortunate fellow men, as their irreconcilable enemy? It cannot be justly said of the Roman Church that she has neglected the mass of the people. In France at any rate it is the wealthy and middle classes rather than the peasantry who have so bitterly opposed and hated her. It may probably be said with more justice that the Roman Church has failed far more than our own Church to appeal to the Christian intelligence, that she has tried political influence, and that the weapon has turned against her. Still, without concerning ourselves with France, there are enough men like Romanèche and Lourtier in our own English-speaking lands to cause us much thought. May it not be true, as the Bishop of Birmingham lately suggested in his striking Congress sermon, that the English Church has become too much satisfied with things as they are, has forgotten that Christ meant anything when he blessed the poor and bade men give up riches for His sake? Does Christianity still mean real renunciation? We fancy that if more ordinary Christians believed that it did the world would be a very different place, and we should hear much less of Socialist denunciations of religion.

The Cooktown Cyclone.

We have scarcely recovered from the disastrous cyclone at Croydon before we have to chronicle an even worse disaster at Cooktown, although happily the damage to the Church is not so great as in the former case. On Saturday, January 19th, a most violent hurricane raged for over thirty-six hours. Scarcely a house escaped serious damage, while a large number of the principle buildings and dwelling houses were utterly destroyed. The Roman Catholic church was leveled to the ground, but our own church, which was strengthened with iron bars some two years ago, escaped with injuries amounting to some £70. Great beams of wood fourteen or fifteen feet long came flying through the air like spears and passed clean through the roof, and the whole church was driven over to one side by the fury of the gale. £70 is a large sum for a poor place like Cooktown to raise. It must be remembered that nearly all the people have lost the greater part of their belongings. Even where the houses themselves were not destroyed the force of the hurricane drove the torrents of rain through the straining wooden walls, destroying furniture and clothing. Offerings were sent from Croydon and Thursday Island to aid the Church Restoration Fund and Rev. W. M. Wilkinson will be glad to receive any contributions towards this object. Mr. Wilkinson lost, we believe, a number of new books and the rectory was slightly damaged, but on the whole stood well. We deeply regret the loss of the pilot with eight valuable lives. When will the authorities understand that it is not safe during the wet season to employ any other vessel than a steamer either at Cooktown or Thursday Island?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "CARPENTARIAN."

Dear Sir—I should like to draw the attention of your readers to the excellent work which is being done by the Girls' Friendly Society in Northern and Central Europe, where the Society has branches or Diocesan working associates in the principal towns of Austria, Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Holland, Russia, Sweden, and Switzerland. This means that girls either from England or the colonies who undertake engagements in any of these places, can on application to the Registry and Enquiry Department of the Diocesan Office, 8 Holbein Place, Sloane Square, London, have every inquiry made as to the genuineness of the situations offered, and can also feel that in case of difficulty arising they have a friend on the spot to turn to. When we think of the dangers to which girls are exposed left friendless and unprotected in a Continental town, we are very glad to think that such a successful effort is being made to meet the case. I am sending home for a complete list of all the Continental Lodges, and shall be very glad to give any information in my power with regard to this work to anyone who is interested in the matter.—Believe me, dear sir, yours faithfully,

(Miss) LUCY A. WHITE

Bishop's College, Thursday Island.

Imperfection is in some sort essential to all that we know of life. It is the sign of life in a mortal body, that is to say, of a state of progress and change. Nothing that lives is, or can be, rigidly perfect; part of it is decaying, part nascent. The foxglove blossom,—a third part bud, a third part past, a third part in full bloom,—is a type of the life of this world. And in all things that live there are certain irregularities and deficiencies which are not only signs of life, but sources of beauty. No human face is exactly the same in its lines on each side, no leaf perfect in its lobes, no branch in its symmetry. All admit irregularity as they imply change; and to banish imperfection is to destroy expression, to check exertion, to paralyze vitality. All things are literally better, lovelier, and more beloved that the law of human life may be Effort, and the law of human judgment Mercy.—RUSKIN.

Religious Instruction in State Schools

It looks as though we were going to win the first step in the struggle for religion in State Schools, namely, the granting of a referendum on the subject, but we must remember that this is only the first stage. It is not enough merely to have a referendum.

In the first place we must insist that the question at the referendum is fairly and clearly put. It will be remembered that when a referendum on the subject was taken a few years ago in Victoria, the Government, who wanted to shelve the matter, cunningly put the question or rather questions in such a way, that the people by a large majority voted both for and against religious instruction, misled by the form of the questions. We want a straight and fair issue, namely—Do the people or do they not want the well-known system which has been for so long in existence in New South Wales? Any form of question which clouds this clear issue we must reject as "dishonest." We have all along asked for one thing and one only, the New South Wales system of religious instruction with its treble basis of—(1) teaching by the State schoolmaster in school hours of selected Bible lessons without denominational teaching. (2) Ministers of religion to be allowed to give during school hours instruction to children of their own denomination only. (3) A conscience clause so that no child receives religious teaching against the wish of its parents. We must insist that the fair question is put, Do you or do not desire this system?

Secondly, having got the referendum, and the question fairly put, we must strain every nerve to secure an affirmative answer to the question.

It may be well first of all to consider who are our friends, and who are our foes. Among those who are opposed to the granting of religious instruction are—

(1) All enemies of religion as such; who naturally see in the proposal one of the greatest support and bulwarks of the Christian Faith.

(2) A number of well-meaning but far from clear-headed people, who think that religion is the only thing that requires no teaching, and that children will somehow acquire from newspapers and casual conversation sufficient knowledge to form their own religious conceptions on arriving at years of discretion.

(3) Most of the official representatives of the Roman Catholic Church, who argue that (a) as they have their own schools the proposal will not benefit them, and that (b) it will destroy their chance of ever getting State aid for their denominational schools.

(4) Certain minor Nonconformist bodies, who base their opposition on the following grounds: (1) They are themselves too small to take advantage of the facilities for denominational instruction; (b) certain doctrinaire theories as to the entire separation between religion and the State; (c) a latent suspicion of the Church of England.

On the side of Religious Instruction are—(1) The great body of parents, who by a majority of more than ten to one voted for it a few years ago.

(2) The whole of the clerical and lay representatives of the Church of England.

(3) The chief representatives of the Presbyterians, Wesleyans, Congregationalists, who are almost to a man in favour of the proposal.

What are the objections made by our opponents?

(1) "That it will cause sectarian strife." Exactly the opposite is true. Nothing has done more than the Bible in State School League to draw together the representatives of various religious bodies and to dispel prejudices. Besides, the system has been at work for 40 years in New South Wales, almost as long in Tasmania, and 15 years in West Australia, without giving rise to any difficulties whatever. What right have our opponents to accuse Queenslanders of being so acrimonious that they must need quarrel where these other colonies have found no trouble at all?

(2) "Some of the teachers may not like it and some may be infidels." It does not matter whether the teachers like it or not. It is their business to teach what the nation wishes taught. As to their private opinions, it would be a gross breach of trust for them to import them into their teaching. They are simply required to teach the plain sense and meaning of certain Bible extracts, and it is an insult to the teachers to suppose that they will not do that fairly. They are not asked to comment on or explain the doctrinal meaning. That is left to the denominational instruction. All they have to do is to lay the foundation of text and word memory on which the minister of religion may build.

(3) "The Roman Catholics do not like it." We have every respect for the noble efforts made by the Roman Catholics to support their own schools, but is it to be for a moment supposed that we are going to allow three-quarters of the children of Queensland to be brought up without religious knowledge to please the Roman Catholics? The very question is absurd.

Why is such a change needed?

1. A great proportion of our children are growing up without any religious knowledge whatever. The Sunday School is utterly inadequate. A large number of children never attend, and those who do only get three-quarters of an hour's teaching at most once a week; and this teaching is rendered almost useless by the absence of any foundation of Bible knowledge on which to build.

2. The present permission to give instruction out of school hours is a mockery. It penalises and degrades religion in the eyes of the children.

3. It is of great importance that the children should see that religion is considered by the State to be an integral part of education, at least as important as geography or natural history. This can only be done by giving it its proper place in the school course.

4. The consequences of purely secular education are ruinous to any country. Appalling statistics of juvenile crime come from both France and the United States, and are directly traceable to this cause. We love our country, and are convinced that there can be no safety in the present or hope for the future without the knowledge of God's laws. This can only be secured by some such scheme as that now proposed.

(5) The proposed scheme is unjust to no one. No child will receive any religious instruction if its parents do not wish it to do so. Why should not those who do wish it be allowed an equal liberty?

In conclusion we earnestly urge every man and woman to vote and to vote "Aye." Especially we urge this on parents. There are in Queensland a very large number of young unmarried men voters, and it is probable that their vote will be largely adverse because they have never considered the needs of the children. If this vote is to be counteracted, every parent must take care to vote in a matter in which they are so vitally concerned.

Easter.

It is well to ask ourselves at this great festival time of the Christian Church why it is that we believe in that great central fact of the Resurrection of Christ, which is the foundation truth of the Christian Faith as we know it.

We must remember that it is possible to conceive of a divine Christ who did not rise from the dead, but passed at once into the heavens from whence He shall come to judge the quick and the dead. There is nothing inherently improbable in this theory, which was probably held by the disciples for three days. Nothing except the fact that it was a matter of fact otherwise.

1. We believe in the Resurrection first in order of time because St. Paul believed in it; as we see from his letters of unquestioned genuineness written about twenty years after the event. Now St. Paul would not have believed in the Resurrection without strong evidence. It meant to him exchanging place, power, influence, wealth and comfort for contempt, poverty, persecution, life-long anxiety, and a martyr's death. No man would lightly, or except under strong conviction, make such a change.

2. We know that all Christians of St. Paul's day believed it. In his letters he assumes the belief as universal. It is bound up inextricably with some of the characteristic doctrines of Christianity.

3. We know that the belief was based on the evidence of eyewitnesses of whom a great part were alive twenty years after and some few probably forty or fifty years after the event. We have in the Gospels the detailed evidence of these eyewitnesses. It is generally admitted by all whose opinion is worth anything, even by those who most strenuously deny the Resurrection, that these accounts are sincere and trustworthy documents and that they fairly represent the beliefs of the earliest Christians.

4. We have the strongest reasons for believing that the eyewitnesses of the risen Christ were not, as some suppose, victims of a delusion or hallucination. They were plain matter-of-fact people. They expected no Resurrection. They were hard to convince. They had nothing to gain by a belief which exposed them to abuse and persecution.

5. If Christ did not rise, what became of His Body? His friends could not have known, for it was the empty tomb that convinced in the first instance of his Resurrection. His enemies did not know, for nothing could have more effectually crushed early Christianity than the production of the Body which was said to have risen.

6. If Christ did not rise, why in spite of the strong Jewish proclivities of the early Christians was the Sacred Day changed from Saturday to Sunday?

7. If Christ did not rise, how came it that on the very first the Sacred Feast which commemorated His death should have been associated with the highest ideal of Christian joy and gladness and called the Eucharist or thanksgiving?

For these reasons we believe that Christ in every deed rose with his Body from the grave, and that thereby He conquered death and opened for us the gate of everlasting life.

The Ritual Commission.

There are several points well worthy of the attention of all the laity of the Church in report of the Royal Commission on Church discipline.

1. The Commission, which contained a considerable proportion of pronounced evangelicals, was absolutely unanimous in its findings.

2. The Commission says, "The evidence gives no justification for any doubt that in the large majority of parishes the work of the Church is being quietly and diligently performed by clergy, who are entirely loyal to the principles of the English Reformation as contained in the Book of Common Prayer."

3. They say, "The law of public worship in the Church of England is too narrow for the religious life of the present generation. It needlessly condemns much which a great section of Church people, including many of her most devoted members, value. Modern thought and feeling are characterised by a care for ceremonial, a sense of dignity, an appreciation of the continuity of the Church, which were not similarly felt when the law took its present shape."

4. "In regard to the rites and ceremonies of public worship the law gives no right or power to distinguish between small and great matters."

5. Many breaches of the law have, they say, no significance as regards doctrine.

6. Other deviations are significant of doctrine formally defined and adopted by the Church of England.

7. Other deviations are significant of teaching legally declared not to be contrary or pugnacious to the articles and formularies of the Church of England.

8. Other deviations are significant of doctrine repugnant to the formularies of the Church of England.

9. The practices noted as of special gravity and significance repugnant to the teaching of the Church of England are—

(a) The interpolation of prayers and ceremonies belonging to the Canon of the Mass.

(b) The use (by the priest) of the words, "Behold the Lamb of God," accompanied by the exhibition of the consecrated bread.

(c) Reservation for purposes of adoration.

(d) Mass of the Pre-sanctified.

(e) Corpus Christi Processions.

(f) Benediction with the Sacrament.

(g) Celebration with intent that there shall be no communicant besides the priest.

(h) Devotions invoking the Blessed Virgin and Saints.

(i) Observing festivals of the Assumption and Sacred Heart.

(k) The Veneration of images and roads.

Of these disloyal practices noted by the Commission, there are probably none that are in use in any Church in Australia.

mission, there are probably none that are in use in any Church in Australia.

The whole report is scrupulously fair, and will be welcomed by all loyal Churchmen. As the Commission says, the first thing is to make the law reasonable and clear, and then there are few clergy who will not obey it. But it must be, as the Commission see, the law of the Church and not merely the findings of a secular court, if it is to appeal to the consciences of Churchmen. We hope that the recommendations of the Commission will be carried out successfully.

Parochial Histories.

NORMANTON.

The earliest settlement in the Gulf was on Sweer's Island, but in 1869 a township was surveyed and settled some distance up the Norman River and called Normanton, and hither the Customs officials were soon afterwards transferred. The town was very small for many years, but when Bishop Stanton visited it for the first time in 1883 there were probably about 500 inhabitants. By the beginning of 1886 when he visited it again these had grown to nearly 900; and in May of that year the first Rector, Rev. W. Abel Turner, was appointed. He was paid £350 per annum, which the Parochial Council considered "little enough for a place like Normanton." Mr. Turner returned to England four or five years ago. He was succeeded at Normanton in Oct. 1887 by Rev. W. Curzon Siggers, M.A., now the Vicar of St. Matthew's, Dunedin. He remained two years, and was followed in 1889 by Rev. Alma Howard, M.A., now of Rutherglen, Victoria. During his incumbency the church was built and opened in 1891, services having been hitherto held in the School of Arts. In 1892 he was succeeded by Rev. A. H. Liley, now curate of Eynsford, Kent; and a year later followed Rev. A. E. Wood. Mr. Wood left the following year and was succeeded by Rev. B. O. Bryant, who was rector until 1897, and during whose time the rectory was built. During most of this time the population had been dwindling. In 1887, when the railway was started, it was 1600, and ten years later it had gone down to 700. The fact that during these ten years there were six rectors shows the unsettled nature of Church life. On the departure of Mr. Bryant, who is now rector of Crookwell, N.S.W., there was an interval of five years, during which the services of the Church was maintained by Mr. E. A. Field and several volunteer lay readers. In 1902, Rev. W. Hudson, M.A., was appointed rector, and the rectory enlarged; and two years later, on his appointment to Croydon, he was followed by Rev. W. M. Wilkinson. In 1906 Mr. Wilkinson was transferred to Cooktown, and the present rector, Rev. L. F. Trevor, M.A., was appointed to Normanton. The population of the parish has continued to decline and is probably not more than half what it was when the first rector was appointed twenty years ago, and only a quarter of what it was in its palmiest days. Small as the parish is, the churchpeople have always held well together and have worked hard to maintain the services of the Church. The church is a lofty and strongly built structure of wood, and has been improved and added to from time to time. A number of stations are attached to the parish and visited as occasion allows. The country population has decreased as well as that of the town.

News of the Parishes.

THURSDAY ISLAND.

We were very pleased to have the Bishop at home for Christmas and the New Year the first time he has spent Christ on the Island. The event was marked by a crowded social gathering given by the parishioners in honour of the Bishop.

Other events which ushered in the New Year were: The children's Christmas Tree; Miss White's G.F.S. party; Miss Robson's tea parties for the Japanese Class and the South-Sea Class; Mrs. Jones's Bible Class party; the Vicar's Band of Hope party. The New Year is rapidly becoming less youthful, and is now going more soberly on its way.

Miss Buchanan's friends who would like to see her journal letters from Singapore should send for current and back numbers of "The Parish Gazette" to Mrs. Jones, The Vicarage. Subscription 2s. 6d. per annum.

Thursday Island has seen much weather since Christmas—the wonder is that it is still to be found in the same spot considering the deluges of rain, the mighty winds, the great thunderstorms, and the little earthquake shock; but the little Island remains unmoved and unharmed, to extend her sympathy to the sister parish of Cooktown, which has suffered materially from the recent hurricane.

The Sunday School Library has arrived from England. The S.P.C.K. has treated us most liberally, giving us a grant of 100 per cent on the money sent, besides paying carriage. The children earned the money themselves to buy the books by the "Cinderella" entertainment; and the fine bookcase was bought with the proceeds of the little sale of work held at the Vicarage some time ago. The library had an enthusiastic opening, when Mrs. Jones gave the children an address on "How and What to Read." Miss Robson's "Ruskin Evening" was much appreciated; we are hoping for another one.

CROYDON.

"Never since the field started has there been anything like this," is the universal cry. There has been a general exodus for more prosperous places, and those who remain are for the most part living on the slenderest means. Few mines are working, and the product of the few that are gold-producing goes into a very few hands. Certainly Croydon is passing through very bad times, though some are still hopeful as to the ultimate future.

Rev. W. M. Hudson and Rev. S. Lewis left on December 28th, the former to act as Senior Curate at Christ Church, South Yarra, and the latter to work for a year in the diocese of Brisbane for the sake of his health. Rev. H. H. Ayscough succeeded Mr. Lewis as Assistant Curate, and the Bishop has been residing and conducting services until Mr. Hudson's successor is appointed.

The offertory on Sunday Evening, February 3rd, was devoted to the Cooktown Cyclone Church Restoration Fund.

GEORGETOWN.

Rev. F. C. Hall has been busy visiting the surrounding districts.

Before Christmas he visited all the mining camps as far as Gilberton, and then went on to Oak Park, Lyndhurst, Lucky Creek, Spring Creek, Carpentaria Downs, and Einasleigh, making a round which occupied five weeks of constant travelling.

Christmas was spent at Georgetown. The attendance at services might have been better.

After Christmas the farmers on the Gilbert River were visited before the wet set in.

He hopes to pay a visit to Croydon shortly.

NORMANTON.

The heat has been very excessive, especially during the early part of January, and on January 16th our rector, Rev. L. F. Trevor, M.A., was taken suddenly ill with a violent attack of sunstroke. He was unconscious all night, and the doctor was very anxious as to his condition, but he was better next day, and in the evening the Bishop fortunately arrived from Thursday Island, and promptly sent Mr. Trevor away for a rest and change.

On Septuagesima Sunday the Bishop came down from Croydon and took the services, and also met the Parochial Council.

On February 8th Mr. Trevor returned from Thursday Island, having greatly benefited by his change.

The great diminution in the population, and especially the fact that so many earnest Church-people have left, has seriously affected both the congregations and the ability of the parish to adequately maintain the ministrations of the Church.

On March 28th, at 8 p.m., the Lord Bishop of the Diocese held a Confirmation here. There were twelve candidates, three of whom were adults. A large congregation assembled to witness the administering of the sacred rite, and the church was filled almost to its fullest capacity.

The following morning, at 7 o'clock, the Bishop celebrated the Holy Communion, at which service the candidates made their first communion.

Owing to ill-health, the rector (Rev. L. F. Trevor) has been compelled to leave Norman-ton, Diocesan Accounts.

In presenting the audited Diocesan Balance-sheet for the year 1906, it will be well to disentangle a few facts from the necessary technicalities of form.

During the past year we have to acknowledge most generous help, both for the general funds of the diocese and for the Mitchell River Mission, which has been a very heavy source of expense. Subscriptions and collections this year amount to £400 15s. 9d., as against £424 0s. 4d. in 1905 and £174 1s. 3d. in 1904. These again include a generous donation of £100 from Rev. F. M. T. Palgrave, and a sum of £74 from the Diocese of Melbourne, principally for the Mitchell River. We also gratefully acknowledge £25 from his Grace the Primate, and £8 from the Melanesian Mission. Lord Beauchamp continues his munificent aid of £150 a year towards the expenses of Bishop's College. We also desire to thank specially the S.P.G., C.C.C., and S.P.C.K. for their continual help.

Our total receipts, exclusive of refunds and balances, amount to £899 11s. 11d., as against £1260 10s. 7d. (including £810 for purchase of Francis Pritt) last year, and £746 19s. 11d. the previous year.

With regard to expenditure, the College expenses, £269 4s. 8d., have again been reduced from last year's, £337 19s. 11d., and the previous year's, £405 19s. 10d.; and clergy travelling expenses amount to £43 1s. 3d. as against £81 0s. 4d. in 1905 and £81 9s. in 1904. On the other hand, we have been able to increase grants to parishes to £149 5s. 1d.; and, most satisfactory of all, to increase our expenditure on missionary work among the aboriginals and coloured races to £408 19s. 1d., as compared with £200 15s. 8d. in 1906 and £130 8s. 7d. in 1904.

The Francis Pritt has cost us £259 5s. 7d. to run and keep in repair, and almost the whole of her time has been occupied with Mitchell River Mission work.

It will be noticed that the loss on the "Carpentarian," so essential to diffusing an interest in the missionary work of the diocese, amounts to £18 7s. 5d. This loss would be much reduced if subscribers would take the trouble to send in their small subscriptions of 2s. and not involve the secretary in the further expense of writing to ask for it.

During the year we have transferred the sum of £190 belonging to the Bishopric Endowment Fund to a separate account in the Government Savings Bank.

Our office expenses are again nil except for stamps and telegrams, owing to the voluntary labours of our Diocesan Secretary.

We end the year without liabilities and with a balance in hand of £89 13s. 1d., but we must ask our friends not to relax their efforts to help us. In addition to the ordinary expenses of the coming year we shall have to entirely recopper the Francis Pritt, and as owing to the high rates of premium for the Gulf we cannot insure her, we ought to make a start with a Depreciation Fund.

It will be seen that our purely missionary responsibilities and expenditures are increasing every year, and we look to the whole Church in Australia to enable our little diocese to fulfil them. Subscriptions and donations may be sent to the Bishop, the Diocesan Secretary, or the Diocesan Secretary for Missions, Miss Robson, all of Thursday Island; or to Joseph Hughes, Diocesan Treasurer, Fernberg Road, Brisbane.

THE DIOCESE.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east, by the Northern Territory on the west, and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19 deg. 30 min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east par. 144 and thence N. to lat. S. 16 deg. 40 min., and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory of South Australia, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 sq. miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 16,500 whites, 7,000 Japanese, Chinese and other aliens, and 35,000 aboriginals. The white population is chiefly mining and pastoral. The See-town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre N. of Nap. York.

FINANCE.

The Diocese has no endowment beyond the Bishop's income of £300 per annum.

MISSIONS.

Missions are carried on among the Japanese at Thursday Island, among the S. Sea Islanders at Thursday Island and Mosman, and among the aboriginals on the Mitchell River.

SPECIAL OFFERTORIES.

On Easter Day the offertories are given to the Clergyman of the Parish, and on Good Friday to the Australian Board of Missions.

ANNUAL FIXTURES.

(1) March 31st—Parish accounts to close, and to be prepared for presentation to Easter meeting.

(Issued by the Bishop with the approval of the Conference.)

CANONS.

The Canons of the Diocese of North Queensland will continue to be the rule of the Church in the Diocese of Carpentaria, except in so far as they are abrogated in any point by special and published direction of the Ordinary, or are plainly inapplicable through change of circumstances and conditions. They may be obtained from the Diocesan Book Depot; price 1s.

DIOCESAN ASSESSMENT.

Each Parish or District within the Diocese shall pay annually to the Church Management Fund such sum as may from year to year be assessed by the Diocesan Council, provided that such sum shall not exceed eight guineas nor be less than four guineas.

TABLE OF FEES.

BUILDING REGULATIONS.

Plans for the building or alteration of Churches, Church Rooms, and Rectories must be submitted to the Bishop for approval before any contract is entered into, but such approval does not imply any Diocesan responsibility for the cost of the same.

No alteration may be made in any consecrated building without a faculty from the Bishop.

FROM MARRIAGE REGULATIONS.

2. No marriage may be celebrated otherwise than by banns or by Episcopal license.

4. No Surrogate may issue a license for, or any clergyman celebrate the marriage of, any divorced person whatsoever without reference to the Bishop, and permission obtained from him.

5. No marriage may be celebrated otherwise than in a Church or accustomed place of public worship except by express permission of the Bishop; provided that in urgent cases, founded on special circumstances, when reference to the Bishop is practically impossible, the clergyman shall act on his discretion, and forthwith report the circumstances to the Bishop.

7. The authorised fee for the Bishop's license is £3 3s. The Surrogate is authorised to retain for his own use this fee, with the exception of 10s. 6d., which is payable to the Church Management Fund. Where only £2 2s. or a smaller sum is paid, the Surrogate is authorised to retain three-fourths of the fee paid.

Our Illustration.

Our illustration represents a common scene in the Mitchell River Mission, when the wild blacks come in to have their wounds or sores attended to by the members of the mission staff. The tribes for a great distance round have confidence in the skill and care of the missionaries. Lint and old linen are always readily received for the mission.

Visit to the Mitchell River Mission.

I left Normanton in the Waterlily at 1.30 p.m. on Friday, April 5th. On the way down about 6 p.m. we passed an extraordinary multitude of flying foxes hanging on the mangroves by the river bank; for more than a mile every branch was laden with the creatures hanging closely together. Hundreds of trees were broken to the ground by their weight as though a tornado had passed. The banks were black with them and as we passed they rose with a shrill cry and formed a dense reddish cloud overhead, filling the air with their sickening smell. It was exactly like one of Doré's pictures of the Inferno; the long sinuous stream of light fading away into the distance, the great bat-like wings and sharp ears, the noiseless flight, the sharp cries were like those of an army of evil spirits. It is difficult to estimate their numbers. There must have been some hundreds to every yard of bank and probably the total did not fall far short of one million, vast as that number is.

I had been reading in the train the 2nd and 3rd books of the Æneid and the description of the myriads of unclean birds with human faces that swooped down on the provisions of the hapless fugitives from Troy came vividly to my mind. No one would care to eat from a table where a flying fox had once alighted and as for killing them with the sword it would be a hopeless task. The tables were liable to attack we are told under the trees in the open, another characteristic mark of the flying fox.

We got to Karumba about 10 p.m. and I immediately went on board the Francis Pitt. It is two days later than I had intended to be going to the fact of a Federal Department having referred a telegram requesting a simple routine answer to the Head of the Department at Melbourne, who had referred it to the Minister. Ten days were occupied in this process and I was at last obliged to leave without settling a matter of importance to the mission, because our system gives no authority to anyone to exercise any independent judgment, or settle the most trivial matters for themselves. The German Kaiser is a Constitutional Monarch compared with the Head of the Federal Departments.

We sailed at 6 a.m. on Saturday morning and had a good run up the coast arriving off the beacon at 6 p.m. on Sunday to find from the natives on the beach that the horses had been waiting two days and had gone away that morning. I was not sorry to have the opportunity of holding a quiet service on board for the South Sea Island crew, who joined in it with their usual earnest heartiness. Early on Monday morning I went ashore and despatched a boy with a letter to the station while I took my rifle and went to look for the big alligator who haunts the mouth of the creek. He was not to be found however, and a big shark who was cruising around in the shallow water on the further bank did not seem much disturbed by a rifle practice which had only his back fin to aim at. While at sea it fell calm for an hour or two, when we were about seven miles from shore and I was amused by watching half-a-dozen gaudy little orange and black fish about four inches long who kept swimming backwards and forwards close alongside the vessel. I wondered how they had got so far from land without being eaten up and found on enquiry that they had followed us all the way from Karumba; from which we were even then about 60 miles distant. I have not seen them since our arrival here but they may be lying close, as big fish are plentiful so near shore. Curiously enough our buoy has become a regular fish trap.

Being encrusted with shells and sea weeds it has become a shelter for small crabs and fishes and all day big fish lie alongside waiting for them. The boys speared a fine flat fish there this morning. About noon Rev. A. E. Smith appeared with the horses, and after dinner we rode up to the station which we reached about 3.30 p.m. Mr. Smith looked thin. He was very ill with fever for about two months during the wet season, but is now rapidly recovering health and strength. At the station I found all well. Messrs. Matthews and Perelle are in splendid health and full of content with their work. A good deal of work has been done and best of all Mr. Matthews was able to report that the conduct of all the natives has been most excellent. I said a few words to them at Evening

Prayer and afterwards gave a devotional address to the members of the staff. I was luxuriously established for the night in the mosquito proof room, where I slept peacefully until the rising bell at 6.30 a.m. After prayers and breakfast I went to the school and heard Mr. Smith give instruction to the boys. They have improved in reading but the progress has not been very rapid. Slates and maps have now arrived and we hope that the advance will be more rapid. After school Bob Ling took me in the dinghy down to the garden which is about a mile down the creek. On the way we passed an island where about 30 bananas are growing, but when the water is low they will scarcely be safe from the horses. Bob has been working very hard and has got about five acres on the bank of the creek nearly enclosed with a very strong post and rail fence of heavy blood-wood brought from a distance and well fitted and morticed. It is a fence that should last for many years. In the garden 70 bananas and 17 coconuts are growing splendidly having been assiduously watered, there is a good crop of sweet potatoes, and a small patch of maize has given very good results. A plough is urgently needed. The fence will be shortly completed and then we shall have begun reproductive work in earnest. The soil is very good and all but a small part of the ground is above flood level. I was very much struck by Bob's hard work and readily responded to his application for two month's leave in June and July, when, if we mistake not, he cherishes the hope of returning accompanied by a Mrs. Bob; when he will establish his home at the garden.

Two new cottages have been built and are inhabited by Bunburraduberra and his wife Lucy and a new arrival Pindi and his wife Polly.

Both are hard-working quiet and well behaved men.

Mr. Matthews has put up a fine large work shed 35 x 21 feet and 20 feet high, which contains the blacksmith's forge and carpenter's bench, and the dray which is nearly complete. The shed is thatched with the great leaves of the cabbage tree palm, 400 being used in its construction. The forge is a great success and works most admirably.

The site of the Mission Building has been enclosed by a strong fence enclosing about 10 acres. This is a great improvement and prevents the wild natives using it as a thoroughfare. The men's dormitory has been doubled in size and ampler bunk accommodation provided, but the men prefer to put up little platforms and roost like fowls among the rafters and so by making a small fire on the ground to rid themselves of the mosquitos.

A busy morning and afternoon followed with accounts and other business until about 3 p.m. when Mr. Matthews and I rode out to have a look at the newly marked southern boundary of the Reserve.

We came to the marked tree line running W.S.W. and E.N.E. about two and a-half miles from the station to the south and followed it for some miles to the east. It passes just to the south of a fine deep lagoon called by the station Dog Lagoon, and runs towards Magnificent Creek, keeping to the south of the creek on which the station stands. We found the grass very long and green and had to flounder through a good many swamps. On the whole the boundary is about half a mile nearer to the station than our imaginary line but takes in all the waterholes which we can possibly at any time require.

We got back at 6 p.m. quite ready for tea. After evening service for the natives at seven there was more writing and business and at 9.30 p.m. I gave a second Devotional Address to the staff, after which I was glad to turn in.

Next morning we had a celebration of the Holy Communion in the early quiet dawn, and after breakfast I baptised the child of Bunduraduberra and Lucy. She yelled with a tragic intensity.

In the course of my ride yesterday I noticed a gradual stirring of new ideas in the native mind. Before last wet season the old king quite of his own accord fenced in a piece of ground about half-a mile from the station and planted it with pumpkin and watermelon seeds which grew and flourished and provided him with vegetables and fruit. Not a great thing perhaps, but we hope a happy augury for the future development of the agricultural instinct among the people.

I rode down to the beach with Mr. Matthews at 10 a.m. and about 12.30 p.m. we were under way with very pleasant memories of my seventh visit to the Mitchell River Mission.

As the afternoon wore on it got blacker and blacker towards the north until about 5 p.m. an inky bar of cloud hung right ahead of us, shot with continual lightning flashes and full of growling of thunder. A few minutes later we were into it, the wind, which had been from the west, blowing with sudden violence from the east. It rapidly increased in strength, the rain came down in torrents blotting out everything a few yards from the ship. The skipper gave the order to all hands to get in the big sail and as soon as it was off the Francis Pritt which had begun to heel over somewhat alarmingly rode well to the gale. Fortunately the wind was off the shore which was about 10 miles distant but the sea got up rapidly, reaching its climax in a big wave driven before a specially fierce blast about three-quarters of an hour after the storm began; from this the wind began to moderate though the lightning continued to be terrific, striking the sea in every direction with deafening crashes of thunder. In another three-quarters of an hour the wind was almost gone but it remained absolutely dark; presently however a strong steady breeze began to blow from the S.E. and continued all night carrying us well and swiftly on our way north so that in spite of the calm in which we started and the calm after the storm we found that we had run 135 miles in the first 24 hours.

Thursday was fairly fine though there were squalls and threatening clouds, but on Friday morning the barometer fell very low and the wind and sea rose rapidly and all day a fierce gale blew and well on into the night. The sea was very big in spite of the wind being off the land from which we were at some distance, and we had a very unpleasant time. When the gale was at its height the block of the jib carried away and while all hands were repairing it I had the novel experience of steering in a heavy sea.

The Francis Pritt as usual behaved splendidly and by evening we had run over 300 miles from Trubanaman according to the log. The wind and sea went down about midnight and about 3 a.m. we anchored to give the skipper a few hours' sleep. By daylight we found we were just in sight of Prince of Wales Island. The weather continued uncertain and squally but we were safely anchored at Thursday Island before dark after the usual long beat in from the west; arriving well up to time after a three days trip from Trubanaman.

GILBERT, Bishop of Carpentaria.

Standforth's Reformation.

The general opinion in Dustyville of James Standforth, usually known as Jim, was that he was a really good fellow. If he had a little weakness towards the whisky bottle, it was not a matter in which Dustyville felt inclined to be Pharisaical. It was a weakness with which Dustyville had a good deal of sympathy. For the rest he was an open manly fellow, no fool at his business, but sociable and good humoured with all. He was a man you could not be angry with. Perhaps he had a strain of Irish blood in him; anyway his cheery laugh disarmed criticism, and invited confidence. Probably the only person in Dustyville who did not share the universal good opinion of Standforth was his wife, and yet, if any woman ever loved her husband, it was Julia Standforth. She loved him even more than on the day she had married him ten years ago full of hopes for a happiness which ever since had been dwindling. It was quite true that Jim had but one fault, but only his wife knew how much that one thing meant. To his friends it meant only a little extra good nature, an opportunity of making a better bargain than would otherwise have been possible, and an occasional tiresome garrulity. To his wife it meant a return home in a state of perverse fretfulness, when nothing was right and the most loving preparations for his comfort were turned into causes of offence. It meant that while their income was large enough for them to have lived in comfort, so much of it was poured down Jim's own throat, and those of his thirsty friends, that she had to scrimp and scrape to provide the household with bare necessities, and even the small means left her were circumscribed by the necessity of providing dainties to tempt the drink-sodden appetite of the master of the house; the children could hardly be decently clothed, and she dared not think how they were to be educated, but bitterer than all this was the gradual separation of soul, and thought and hope from the man who had once loved her so well, and to whom she clung with a love that would not be repulsed. But she could not shut her eyes to his gradual, but ever increasing degradation. It had come slowly but none the less surely. Self indulgence was gradually bearing fruit in selfishness. He thought increasingly only of his own comfort and enjoyment. He was becoming mean and false. Keenly sensitive to public opinion, he was all smiles, and good nature abroad, but he vented his irritation without restraint at home. Once she could have trusted his faultless word, now she was for ever finding him out in petty lies and meannesses that she was ashamed even to think of. She knew that she was getting old and haggard with anxiety, with sleepless nights and anxious days. For herself she would have been silent, but her love for her children and the daily sight of the deterioration, which in spite of all her care, their father's example was working in them, roused her to frenzy. One night Jim came home at two in the morning scarcely able to stand. Although she knew the futility of words she could restrain herself no longer. She poured out the pent-up misery of years in a torrent of reproaches, and then her mood changing, she flung herself at his feet and implored him by the memory of their past love by all his hopes of heaven, by their children's lives to have pity upon her. But the devil enters into men with drink as surely as ever he entered into Judas Iscariot, and he replied only with a curse and a kick, which left her fainting as she lay. Somewhat sobered and frightened he got her into bed, but next morning the doctor had to be sent for, and he looked very grave. Mrs. Standforth gave a plausible account of her "accident" and though the doctor had his own thoughts he did not feel certain enough to express them. Next day it was clear she was dying. She would not have lived long in any case said the doctor, but the "accident," with a sharp glance at Jim, had been the immediate cause. Jim sat by her side dazed and silent. He was deeply penitent, but his conscience told him that his penitence was apt to be but a poor sort of thing, "Jim," whispered the poor woman. "Will you promise me one thing. It is no use asking you to give up drink, and I do not, but will you promise me to drink the first glass to my memory in those days when we were happy together." Jim promised; he was ready to promise anything. "You swear to me you will not forget." "Yes," swear it, God helping me since you wish it. She lay back with a quiet smile, and in a little while all was over. Jim went out and got furiously drunk. He did not know what he said or did but he was told he was very lucky to have got off with a month in gaol. He had a good deal of quiet time for reflection, and could not help pondering over his wife's last words. He could have understood if she had asked him to give up drink but leave him free with only such a trivial condition, what did it mean. He felt that he owed her reparation, and he mean at least to keep his promise.

At the same time he had no intention of giving up drink. He craved for it intensely during his enforced abstinence, and counted the days till he should be free. At last the day came, and once more at liberty he filled his glass, eager to drown the memory of his shame, and satisfy his craving. Then he remembered his promise "To the memory of my wife." Like a flash the past came back, the young enthusiastic loving girl, his own gradual coldness and neglect, the weary mother and the anxious wife, and as the picture grew in his mind he knew that it was not his kick that had killed her, but his life, his selfishness and temper, and all that came from the liquor he held in his hand. It seemed as though he were about to drink her blood, and he set down his glass untasted, with a growing horror. From that day James Standforth was a different man. He devoted himself to his children with more than a father's care, and he never touched a drop of liquor to the day of his death. A certain high official was never tired of pointing him out as a striking example of the beneficial effects of the Government system of secluded confinement, but it was not the prison that reformed James Standforth.

Good Friday and Easter.

The services on Good Friday showed a gratifying improvement in attendance. The morning service was especially well attended. The day was extremely hot. Owing to Miss Buchanan's absence we were unable this year to have our usual lantern service.

On Easter Eve the Cathedral was beautifully decorated. Some of our kind friends had taken great pains to get greenery.

Coxswain Tuesley, Mr. Lane, Miss Robson, Miss Tait and the police boys brought us a quantity of zamia palms from Prince of Wales Island and these proved a very effective decoration. We have to thank all who assisted. Many remarked on Easter Day that the Church had never looked nicer.

We had a glad and bright Easter Festival. A good number of communicants attended the early services. At 10 a.m. there was a large Church Parade of the R.A.A. and A.G.A. Batteries. At 7.30 p.m. we had great difficulty in seating the congregation, every available space was occupied. The musical portions of the service were of a special character. The usual choir was largely augmented and we had the assistance of an orchestra, Mr. W. M. Hayne resided at the organ. Two solos were beautifully rendered by Mrs. Cleveland, "There is a Green Hill," Gounod; and "O Rest in the Lord," Mendelssohn. The anthem was "They have taken away my Lord," Stainer, and was sung most effectively. Mr. and Mrs. Bleakley rendered the solos. Mrs. Bleakley sung with great taste and sweetness.

The whole service was rendered in a manner which reflected great credit on all who took part and it is gratifying to us to learn from so many of the congregation that the service was thoroughly appreciated. Among the congregation were some passengers from the s.s. Aiyuan, including the Rev. Dr. Bevan of Melbourne, who expressed their surprise and pleasure at such a service on Thursday Island.

Come over and help us.

The Pan-Anglican Conference will mark a great epoch in the history of the Church of England. We are to offer there of our best, and in return to reap the results of the fusion of so much organized zeal, devotion, and brain. These results will surely be wide and far-reaching, directed with wisdom towards fulfilling the needs of the day.

To ensure this our help is needed. We are asked what ends seem to us most desirable of attainment, what means are best adapted to attain these ends. So, without any spirit of selfishness we may speak of our weaknesses, and suggest their remedies.

The Church in Northern Australia suffers from depolarization, it lacks the continuity necessary for the unbroken circuit of the electric current of faith, sympathy, brotherhood. We can easily point to geographical and climatic conditions, which seem to account for this fully enough. We live under tropical or sub-tropical conditions, scattered over vast tracts of undeveloped country, with scanty means of communication. How establish continuity under such circumstances? Well, but where is the use of our intellectual advance, if we are not able to adjust ourselves to our environment. Work under such conditions of climate and isolation must be tackled on altogether different lines to work in closely settled communities. Artillery for long range, bayonets at close quarters.

So we venture to submit for the ripe deliberation of those in council assembled our suggestions for meeting our difficulties.

Queensland is at almost as critical a stage in her national development as Canada. Population is increasing, and likely to do so with greater rapidity in the immediate future. The question of religious education is even now being weighed in the balance.

The church has immense potentialities, one meets everywhere the inarticulate but unmistakeable cry "come and help us." To our human outlook it seems no exaggeration to say that it is "now or never" with the church. Thousands of children are growing up without the opportunity of Church influence, Church discipline, Church life—these lives which ought to form the basis for future Church development are slipping away, as so much waste material, from the dear Mother Church because they are left like Uitlanders to fend for themselves. Send us a band of missionaries, men who will raise us up, enkindle us with ideals drawn from larger outlooks on life, who will rouse us to our enormous opportunities. We want a mission of wise, far-seeing, spiritual men to kindle, organise, probe, adapt, men with sympathies as well as principles, with powers of adaptation as well as firmness, men to discriminate between essentials and non-essentials, men who glowing from the centre-fire of our Church's faith will hand on the Lamp of Life here with energy and physical zeal. Send us these men on a mission of help, similar to that which was sent to South Africa after the war, to put us again in contact with the Mother Church, to help our toiling, flagging efforts with the vitality and courage that wane too quickly under tropical skies. Let the mission be well organised, well selected, let its staff be prepared for hard work but let them feel that they are sent on a work of highest trust and privilege, a work which under God's guidance, may do much to maintain and develop the spiritual forces of this rich and fair State.

The Departure of the Bishop for the Roper River.

The Bishop of Carpentaria and the Rev. Mr. Ebbs (representing the C.M.A. of Victoria) left on their expedition to the Roper River on Saturday, June 15th.

At 7.30 a.m. there was a celebration of the Holy Communion in the Cathedral, the Bishop being the Celebrant, and at 10.30 a.m. the party embarked on the "Francis Pritt." Through the kindness of Mr. K. O. Mackenzie who sent his whaleboat for the purpose, several friends were able to go out to the "Pritt" and have a final look at her before the anchor was weighed.

Punctually on the stroke of eleven, Pilot Noelke, who is in charge of the boat, cast off from the moorings and before the whaleboat reached the jetty she was under way. Coming round between the "Goodwill" from Badu and the jetty Mr. Jones was able to take some photos of her before she finally went about and with wind and tide behind her went down the passage like a bird. We hope to see an equally bright and favourable return about the 17th of July.

One would not degrade a soldier by commenting on his valour when starting for the front, nor do we wish to speak of our Bishop and his companion in this strain, but we can hope and pray that their difficult and dangerous expedition may be brought to a happy issue.

Compromise.

It is somewhat remarkable that the most noteworthy modern book on the evils of compromise has proceeded not from an avowed disciple of the Master who went to death rather than disarm, as He might have done by a few conciliatory words, the hostility of the Pharisees, and Who said "Whosoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words, of him shall the Son of Man be ashamed when He cometh in His Glory"; not from the spiritual heirs of the early Christians who died under every form of torture rather than sprinkle a grain of incense, or surrender a sacred book, not from the children of our English Reformers who died at the stake rather than compromise even the smallest particle of what they believed to be the true Christian faith, but from one who however upright in life and noble in character stands altogether outside the Christian religion.

Mr. John Morley's warnings are as much needed to-day as when first uttered thirty years ago. It is increasingly true that "the slovenly willingness to hold two directly contrary propositions at one and the same time is becoming more and more common. In religion, morals and politics the suppression of your true opinion is hardly counted as a vice, and not seldom even goes for virtue and solid wisdom. One is conjured to respect the beliefs of others, but forbidden to claim the same respect for one's own."

Mr. Morley notes with the impartial justice of an outsider the noble revolt of the Oxford Movement against the materialistic and compromising spirit of the age. "It was," he says, "what every sincere uprising of the better spirit in men and women always must be, an effective protest against the leaden tyranny of the man of the world and the so-called practical person. The man of the world despises Catholics for taking their religious opinions on trust and being the slaves of tradition. As if he had himself formed his own most important opinions either in religion or anything else! He laughs at them for their superstitious awe of the Church. As if his own inward awe of the Greater Number were one whit less of a superstition! He mocks at their deference for the past. As if his own absorbing deference to the present were one tittle better bottomed or a jot more respectable! The modern emancipation will profit us very little if the status quo is to be fastened round our necks with the despotic authority of a heavenly dispensation, and if instead of ancient scriptures we are to accept the plenary inspiration of majorities."

The warning is needed by the Church as well as by the world, in morals as well as in politics.

It is scarcely an exaggeration to say of many nominal churchmen that they are prepared to champion the beliefs and practices of any religious body whatever except their own, such is their terror of being suspected of possessing any convictions. People are ready to condone almost any offence lest they should be accused of having a strict standard of morality. They are prepared to admit that anything may be true and anything false lest they should be convinced of the truth of some things.

This flabby spirit of compromise, and fear of definiteness and conviction form a serious danger alike to religion and to politics.

It is true that we need charity, and the capacity to understand that other people may with equal sincerity hold different views to ours; but true charity does not make us vacillating and uncertain. It is when we are most convinced ourselves that we can best afford to be charitable to those whom we consider not fortunate enough to share our own beliefs. It is when we are least convinced of our own position that we are tempted to buoy ourselves by party spirit and bitterness. If our people are to recover their ancient vigour they must not be afraid of convictions or of expressing them. It was men with convictions who made our nation and founded our colonies. It was men with convictions who built up our Constitution, it was men with convictions who won and maintained our liberties. It was men with convictions who handed down to us intact the Christian faith. It was men with convictions who have accomplished all in the world that was ever worth doing, and if we abandon conviction we are sapping the very foundations of religion, morality, and civil life.

Horata.

Weary was I of the work's fret,
Weary of speaking in vain,
Weary of ending and outset,
Weary of world's joy and pain.
Where was the strength of the Lord's arm?
Where was His promise of old?
Sunk was His Church in a death calm;
Only His mockers were bold.
"Where is your God?" cried the wise men.
"Come we're no longer at school.
Reason and logic speak. Now then Answer or dub yourself fool."
"Where is your God?" cried the base hearts
"Where is your babble of sin?
Earth and its good things for our parts.
Wit, push and money must win."
Slowly I walked to the window:
Slowly my heart was at rest
Gazing o'er earth's purple night glow
Out through the door of the West.
Surely the Master Magnific
Barely had passed on His way:
Dashed on His canvas gigantic
There lay His gift of to-day.
Palest pink shot with vermilion,
Crumbling clouds hues manifold,
Madder, mauve, red-rose and crimson
Molten with white heat of gold.
Infinite ocean of amber
Studded with jewels of light:
Fathomless vision of wonder
Mirror of skill and of might.
Surely I almost had seen Him
Visibly He had been there.
Ever earth's shadows grew more dim
Ever that glory more fair.
Answer ye wise men my question.
Whence comes a beauty so kind
Lavished on moorland and ocean?
Means it aught else but a Mind?
Answer ye base hearts my question,
Whence comes this inner delight,
Deeper than earthly emotion,
Kin to the infinite?
Words may mean much or mean nothing;
Arguments fail thus or so;

Little I reckon of their trending
For I have seen and I know.

Miss Buchanan.

Miss F. Buchanan is now in England where she remains until August to obtain medical advice on the subject of the foot which has given her such great pain and curtailed her marvellous activity for the last two years. It is impossible to adequately estimate the good work which has been done by Miss Buchanan in this diocese. Her wonderful patience, faith, cheerfulness, and charity have been a living sermon on the power of the Christian life more effective than any words; and we know that prayer to God will arise from all who have the happiness of knowing her, that He will so direct the skill of the physicians that she may find relief from her constant pain and, to one so active, scarcely less trying, inability to walk. Miss Buchanan has promised the Bishop that if she recovers the use of her foot she will return to work in this diocese; and in that case she hopes to visit the various parishes with her lantern and we are sure that she will everywhere meet with the warmest welcome. The Bishop has asked Miss Buchanan to send a cablegram if the foot makes good progress that her many friends may be relieved of their anxiety on her account. Such news cannot well be looked for until the middle of July at the earliest.

The Francis Pritt.

John Wesley has been very busy effecting various improvements in the rigging, &c. Experience having shown that our dinghy was too small for safety, we have sold her and had another built 3½ feet longer and double-ended like a whaleboat, which will be much safer in landing through the surf, though more difficult to get on board. We have received the gift of a fine life-buoy from the girls of the Church of England Grammar School for Girls, Darlinghurst. Fortunately, when the buoy arrived Miss Laura Rendall, one of the pupils, was passing through Thursday Island, and was able to go on board and formally present it. The skipper very much approved, but remarked promptly, "Very good life-buoy. Want two." Perhaps some friends will make a note and supply a second for the rigging on the other side of the boat. A pair of good glasses, a chronometer and a sextant would also be acceptable. We find now that we were more fortunate than we knew in getting the vessel at such a reasonable price, as she is now valued at more than double what we gave for her. Unfortunately we are unable to insure on account of the prohibitive rates charged for navigation in the Gulf, nearly three times that charged for the pearling luggers who run greater risks than we do. We would draw the attention of our friends to the fact that the copper on the Francis Pritt has not been renewed since she was built five years ago, and that it must be replaced at the end of this year; that we need a new large sail and various other repairs which with the copper will cost at least £100. Toward this expenditure we have a promise of £20, and we earnestly hope that special donations will be given as the need is urgent.

A ship must be kept in good order, and to skimp necessary repairs is to gamble with men's lives. The winds have been very violent at Thursday Island this May, and on one day no less than three luggers were dismasted. The Francis Pritt is, we believe, capable of facing any weather but only if everything is in good repair. An old rope or neglected sheeting may endanger the whole vessel.

The Roper River Mission.

In November last year the Bishop of North Queensland, after visiting the Mitchell River Mission went South to advocate the claims of aboriginal work.

As a result of his pleading in Melbourne the Church Missionary Associations offered to conduct a aboriginal mission in the Diocese of Carpentaria if the Bishop was willing. The Bishop of Carpentaria gladly gave his consent only stipulating that the workers must hold his license, and suggested the western side of the Gulf. The Bishop of North Queensland afterwards interviewed the South Australian Government, and the Representatives of the Roper River Land and Minerals Co. Ltd. both of whom promised their assistance the latter promising a block of good country 100 miles square on the north side of the Roper River for the purposes of the mission.

The Bishop of Carpentaria then offered to send the Francis Pritt and personally accompany a representative of the Church Missionary Association to the Roper River in June to select a site for the mission. It was arranged that the expedition should start on June 17th and it was hoped that the month of the Roper could be reached in about four days. On entering the river the Pritt would probably have to ascend the river for some 90 miles and the party would then land to explore the country. Captain Noelke has been engaged as pilot. It was hoped that Thursday Island may be reached on the return journey about July 17th.

Parish Notes.

CROYDON.

The Easter Meeting was held after evening service on Easter Day as the Bishop had to leave early the next morning. The Churchwarden's accounts showed that the damage done by the cyclone to the Church had been fully repaired and paid for. The current accounts showed a diminution of income on account of the great number of Churchpeople who had left the parish. The Society of the Treasury showed a large decrease but the offertories were larger than the previous year. The Bishop nominated Mr. Staines as Rector's warden and Messrs. Stevens, Morrison and Gill as Parochial Councillors. The meeting elected Mr. Maslen as People's Warden and Messrs Bechtel, Chandler, Jackson North and Harries as Councillors. The Bishop stated that Rev. A. Freeman had at the last moment withdrawn, and that consequently the parish would still have to be left without a Rector. Rev. H. H. Ayscough would be in charge until a Rector was appointed. The Bishop left the following day for Normanton.

Owing to shortness of clergy, it has been impossible for a clergymen to visit the Golden Gate on Sundays, but the people have been found willing to help themselves and regular Sunday Evening Services have been held in the Church, under the conduct of Mr. Luther Jones, while the Sunday School has been carried on as usual.

A fine collection of Sunday School prizes was obtained from Brisbane and distributed at Easter. They gave great satisfaction.

On Ascension Day the organist commenced playing voluntaries until we were in our places. The whole congregation then sang hymn 147, then came Evensong commencing with the Lord's Prayer and finishing with the 3rd collect. We sang Tallis's Festal Responses and one of the Ascension Psalms, the Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis. Mr. Williams read the two Lessons.

After the 3rd collect, the choir sang the anthem "Lift up your heads," the organist then played a voluntary while the churchwardens took up a collection for the Pan Anglican Congress Fund. After this Mrs. Stewart and Mrs. Tregear sang an Aria from the "Messiah" entitled "Come unto Me."

Mr. Williams then gave a stirring address on the text, "Tell it out among the heathen that the Lord is King" (Ps xvi. 10), which lasted about fifteen minutes.

Mrs. Tregear then sang a solo entitled "Messiah," she has a beautiful voice and it rang through the church and stirred us all.

The choir then sang the Anthem "What are these?" and then all sang Hymn No. 196 to Mr. Jones' tune.

The collection amounted to three pounds five shillings.

The whole service was without a hitch. The church was packed and the singing was splendid. The anthems were beautifully rendered and the solos were superb. The congregation seemed to enter heart and soul into the service. The organist was splendid.

Mr. Williams read the lessons with much feeling and sympathy, and preached most eloquently. This service was wholly missionary. It was on Ascension Day that our Lord gave his command to the Disciples. Therefore, it was appropriate that we should have a wholly missionary service with an address by a missionary, and devote the collection to a missionary cause.

PALMERSTON NOTES.

The Rector returned from Thursday Island on July 13th, 1906, and almost immediately "the Exodus" began. For nearly from months everybody seemed "going South." We are glad to say that our workers and helpers have nearly all returned.

We have nothing much to place on record except that all have been doing their best to maintain the Church's work in this tropical sphere. Pine Creek Anniversary was kept on August 12th and Palmerston dedication Festival on November 4th. Christmas and Easter were both very well observed. Owing to the scarcity of help and abundance of rain, the Rector has as yet been unable to visit the mining camps, and is now engaged assisting "the powers that be" to entertain numerous parties of visitors.

The Palmerston Sunday School Prizes were presented on Easter Day by the Government Resident. Mrs. and Mr. P. R. Allen gave new alms dishes and Mrs. C. H. Marsh a cushion for the Bishop's throne.

The Annual Meeting was held on April 18th. The Churchwardens were able to report that with a few exception, they had been able to meet all their liabilities.

NORMANTON.

Rev. H. H. Ayscough conducted the Easter Services which were well attended. The Easter meeting was held on Wednesday, April 8th, the Bishop being in the chair. The Bishop expressed his regret that Rev. L. F. Trevor, M.A. had been compelled by persistent bad health to resign his charge of the parish so unexpectedly. Owing to the non-arrival of the expected Rector of Croydon, Mr. Ayscough would have to go there for the present, but he hoped to be able to allow him to return to Croydon later on. Mr. Williams would come down from Thursday Island in the meantime to take charge of the parish for the present. The Bishop nominated Mr. W. Day as Rector's Warden, and Mr. Stenin was re-elected People's Warden. Messrs Thome, Lewis and Scott were appointed Parochial Councillors. The Bishop left on Friday for the Mitchell River.

The work of the parish has been progressing under the charge of Mr. T. A. Williams who will return to Thursday Island to resume his studies as soon as his place can be supplied.

THURSDAY ISLAND.

The Annual Easter Meeting was held on Tuesday, April 9th.

The Churchwardens' accounts showed that the year ended with a credit balance of 10s. Offertories amounted to £175, subscriptions etc. to £97 15s., other receipts to £70 6s. 5d.; making a total of £343 1s. 5d. Mr. H. Milman was nominated as Rector's Warden and Mr. Curtis was elected People's Warden. The following were appointed Parochial Councillors: Messrs. Morey, Hayne, Norris, Sullivan, Cavaye, Mackay, Ross, Slaughter, and Armbrust.

A most excellent Sunday School Library of over 100 well and strongly bound volumes has been procured from England by the help of the S.P.G. to and is very greatly appreciated by the children.

A sum of £17 10s. has been added to the Douglas Memorial Fund by the Japanese who most kindly gave an opera in the Victoria Institute and divided the proceeds between the above fund and the hospital.

Rev. J. Jones and Mrs. Jones have been enjoying a holiday at Atherton and Herberton, the Bishop taking charge of the parish in the Rector's absence.

The various parochial organisations, Band of Hope, Scripture Union, Melanesian and Japanese classes have all been carried on by zealous workers during the Rector's absence.

A most energetic worker has succeeded in inducing some 25 persons to take collecting boxes for the Pan-Anglican Congress offering so that we hope to make a good show when they are all sent in. The whole of the money so collected will be laid on the Altar of St. Paul's Cathedral in June, 1908, for the missionary work of the whole Church.

Work among the Japanese on Thursday Island.

There are about 750 Japanese on Thursday Island, connected chiefly with pearling, boat-building and store-keeping. Of these, less than a dozen are baptized Christians and about twenty are "inquirers" coming very regularly to classes of instruction in the Christian Faith. The Japanese Catechist, Mr. A. T. Kashiwagi, is held in high esteem by his fellow-countrymen; his high personal influence and whole-hearted devotion have been consistently used in the service of the Church and of his countrymen.

Classes are held twice a week in the Japanese schoolroom which is in the Cathedral grounds. On Wednesday evenings instruction is given in English and after the lesson various hymns are practised. On Sunday evenings Mr. Kashiwagi reads the Church Service in Japanese and gives a short address. Instruction is then given on the Catechism and on one of the Gospels in English to the more advanced and in Japanese to the others. Afterwards a Bible picture is shown and explained and the Service ends with a hymn. Though not musical according to our ideas, they do enjoy the hymns and are beginning to sing them really well. We are going to practice the Nunc Dimittis and the Magnificat shortly.

Only one woman attends the classes as yet; with them the language is the great difficulty. It is hoped after next month that special classes may be formed for them in their own homes. A class was started in Lent but came to a sudden and tragic end. Of the first three women to join, one was shot dead by a Japanese, and the other two seriously wounded. The funeral service of the victim was pathetic and seemed to impress those present. It was read partly by the Vicar in English and partly by Mr. Kashiwagi in Japanese, who also interpreted the Vicar's forcible and inspiring address.

The two wounded women were constantly visited by Mr. Kashiwagi whilst in hospital with the result that one is now a regular attendant at the classes.

There is not so much need for special work among the Japanese children, they attend the State School and therefore have a good knowledge of English and attend the Sunday School most regularly. The Bishop had some money given him for mission purposes, and with this a selection of Japanese books bearing on Christian teaching was bought and is the nucleus of a circulating library. It is already proving of value to the Japanese residents and it is hoped will grow with the need for it.

Mr. Kashiwagi circulates a Christian newspaper "The Light of the World" among his countrymen.

That the Japanese appreciate their privileges in living among a British community was clearly shown recently by their generous efforts in support of local good works. An excellent operatic performance was given by them in which neither trouble nor expense was spared, the result being an artistic and financial success. To Western minds the opera was interesting rather than beautiful. To find all the music—vocal and instrumental supplied by one hard-working virtuoso who twangled a small stringed instrument and sang almost without a break in monotonous recitative, was not acceptable after Gounod or Wagner. The richness of the dresses and the vividness of the gestures made up for scenery and stage effect. The opera depicted Japanese life in the middle ages, and with the aid of an outline of the scenes written up in English the audience were able to follow the representations fairly closely. The profits were divided between the Torres Straits Hospital and the proposed Douglas Memorial Chapel which is to be built in the Cathedral to the memory of John Douglas, one-time Government Resident here, "loved and honoured by all."

The Japanese are being brought into ever increasing contact with our race, and we in Northern Queensland are from our geographical position those from whom they will take their first impressions of Western character and of the Christian Faith. Putting aside all questions of statecraft, we should realize that we are face to face with a grave personal responsibility and see to it that these impressions will be such as shall convince them that true national greatness can only be consummated in Christianity.

Personal.

Dr. Harris has postponed his visit to Thursday Island until September, when he hopes to spend a few days there on his way to Singapore and England.

Mr. T. A. Williams has returned from Normanton and resumed his studies at Bishop's College.

Rev. C. Pritchard, D.D., spent a few days at Cooktown on his way to New Guinea.

Rev. E. A. Smith returned from the Mitchell in the Francis Pritt on June and left for Normanton on June 11th.

The Sub-dean and Mrs. Jones thoroughly enjoyed their holiday at Atherton though the weather was far from favourable. They returned in June 10th in good health after a very unpleasant experience at Cairns going off to the Airlie.

We have to thank Mr. Hodel for 10 bags of flour for the Roper River Aboriginal Mission, Mrs. Zahel for a gift of clothing for the Mitchell River Mission.

Subscriptions to "Carpentarian" during April and May 1907. W. M. Hill 10s., Croydon per Rev. H. H. Ayscough 15s. 1d., Messrs. C. Armbrust, O. S. Wilkinson, J. T. Grose, Hains, Sinclair, McCreery, and Miss M. A. Merrick 2s. each.

The following letter from Dr. Roth may interest our readers.

Pomeroon River,
British Guiana,
South America.

I have at last brought my wanderings to a close, and here I am at my destination, where I shall be putting in the next three years, unless the Imperial authorities should see fit to transfer me to some other distant part of the British Possessions.

The district under my charge is about a few thousand miles in area, just west and north-west of the Essequibo River, and contains a mixed population of native Indians, East Indians, Negroes, (descendants of the old slave days) and a low type of Spaniard and Portuguese. With the exception of my son Vincent and myself, there is not another white skin at least nearer than twenty five miles. My cook even is a pure-blood negress, who frightens me every time she shows her teeth. I want to get rid of her, but haven't give her notice! The wife has stayed behind in London with my mother and sister.

I held my first Court here last week, and had 16 cases brought before me for adjudication, so you will see I am going to be kept pretty busy. Living is very rough here, truly the simple life!

When you have the leisure I shall be so pleased to hear how your aboriginal work is getting on. If the N.T. is taken over by the Commonwealth, I do trust that suitable provision will be made for the natives.

Memo from the Bishop,

The following memorandum was issued by the Bishop in May.

"My usual Episcopal work has been so much interrupted by various circumstances this year that I feel that some statement of my plans is desirable. The first three months of the year I felt obliged to spend in the Gulf parishes which were without any priest, and after a visit to the Mitchell River Mission I have been detained at Thursday Island, because we are too short-handed to allow of any substitute while Rev. J. Jones is taking a much needed holiday. In June and July I have undertaken to visit the Roper River to inspect its suitability for an Aboriginal Mission Station which the Church Missionary Association propose to start in the Northern Territory. As soon as I return I feel that it is necessary for me to visit the southern dioceses, partly to obtain the services of one or two priests which can only be done by personal intercourse; and partly to make known the missionary work and needs of the diocese, and obtain the necessary funds for carrying on its work. I would most thankfully have avoided this necessity if possible, for it means very heavy and distasteful work, travelling or speaking, and very often both of these, every day of the time that I am away, but I do not see how I can possibly avoid it, and the sooner I go after my return from the Roper the better for the Diocese. On my return I propose to visit every parish before leaving for England at the end of January. I subjoin a provisional list of proposed movements.

Things that are Seen.

As I look at the scene before me I cannot resist the impression that it is a picture painted in living colours by some superhuman artist. All seems so full of design, every line, every curve, every shadow to tend so inevitably to beauty.

Yet when I look again and look more deeply it is as no picture ever was for a picture does but give the surface of things, answers and plays to the shortcomings of the human eye while the scene before me lives and goes down into the deep of things.

In front grass long and rank, but wonderful all the same, the green is deeper below lighter, and more akin to yellow atop where it meets the full blaze of the sun and throws its sheltering shade of crossing stems on the lower stalks. The wind has given every stem a certain bend in one direction yet the thousands of curves are not precisely similar, but vary infinitely according to the age and strength of the stem, or the strength of the breeze. Here is the solution of a pretty problem how to draw a vast number of curves, dissimilar and yet alike enough to avoid any appearance of clashing or crossing. Here and there the level and the uniform curves of the grass are broken, straight stemmed plants and leaves pushed out against the wind which bends back their points in sharp and ever changing curves. Beyond are trees with their green masses of foliage broken by a thousand shadows, some faint the darker side of a single leaf, some deep dark caverns of shade, here leaves softly green in the sunlight, there sharply throwing it back with a sparkle. The eye seizes it all as in a series of instantaneous photographs, pictures of the surface of things with their infinite beauty of light and shade, of line and colour, but the mind's eye will not let it be accepted simply as it seems. It pierces keenly the stem, the trunk, the twig, the leaf, and sees the sap rising and coursing through the whole, it sees the busy atoms carrying up themselves as living stones in each growing fabric, it sees a swarming life hidden among stalks and leaves, birds, reptiles, insects big and little, and smaller than the eye can trace, all busy each in its little world, living, moving, fighting, loving, growing, dying, and coming into being. Beyond the trees the hill slopes away to the sea, again the light and shade of the trees and the darker masses of scrub running down to the reddish grey stones of the beach, which is curved into angles, recesses and jutting points when it meets the water blue, green, and purple, and ever changing as the clouds flit over it with their shadows. There are the red patches of reef edged with darker blocks of stone when the red begins to fade away softly into the green and where now and then a wave breaks in white foam. There the yellow sand stretches out like a slender finger from a rocky point, everywhere a flat surface of subtlest colours and ever changing tints. It is a marvellous picture but it is no picture. Down below the surface it is alive. Great fish flash on their devouring way, a thousand and thousand little fish dart hither and thither, great forests of seaweed wave, and scarlet and purple parrot fish flit through the branches, the red brown reef patches are alive with living lowers of countless hues and shapes. All is life and motion and change. Above, the great white masses of cloud hang over the horizon, above them again are streaks of vapour already catching a ruddy tint from the westering sun, above again white fleecy cloudlets which light up the deep blue of the sky. Again a picture, but more than a picture, the mind's eye plunges through the blue into infinite depths. It passes countless stars, whole systems of worlds, centres certainly of marvellous light and heat and colour, and for all we know fuller than this earth of life and growth and consciousness, till we cry "What is man that thou art mindful of him or the son of man that thou so regardest him?" But by his very power to apprehend, man has been as it were in partnership with God. We know in part and we speak out our thoughts in part but hereafter we shall know even as now we are known and not forgotten in the great universe of God.

The Last Communion of the Lepers on Friday Island.

The Government have determined to remove the Friday Island lepers to a new home near Brisbane and as they were to leave early in June I determined to go down and say goodbye and give them the Holy Communion for the last time. I had twice fixed a day to go down by the police boat but was hindered in the first instance by the unexpected arrival of the Governor-General and in the second instance by the sudden and unexpected death of two residents of the island. On the following day I determined to go down in the Francis Pritt which had returned the previous day from a stormy voyage to the Mitchell River Mission. It was blowing very hard, but I did not like to again disappoint them and so went on board about 11 a.m. Owing to the strong wind and the shallowness of the bay we were obliged to anchor about a mile from the shore, but it was a matter of a few minutes to reach the shore in the dinghy before the wind.

Owing to the strong wind it was impossible to hold the service under the usual tree so we adjourned to a grassy spot under the lee of one of the buildings where a washing bench covered with a fair linen cloth served as an altar. The communicants 15 in number were all standing in a line on the grass with the non-confirmed Christians in the rear. The service opened with a hymn, and all joined with the greatest earnestness in the Creed and Confession. The reverence with which the Sacred Elements were received was remarkable. I only wish there were always such devotion on the part of white communicants, and the Gloria in Excelsis was a real hymn of praise. I felt the contagion of their faith and gratitude and could more easily realise the presence of Christ in the midst there under the sky with the background of the green hills than in many a stately Church. After the service I spoke a few words of farewell telling them that it had been a joy and a privilege to minister to them in however small a way for the last seven years and telling them what a joy it had been to me when the doctor of his own accord said to me "Those boys are quite different men since they took to the Church. No more complaining and no more quarreling among themselves." I promised to try to secure that religious ministrations should not fail them in their new home and to visit them there as soon as I was able. I also asked them to pray for the proposed expedition to the Roper which was starting about the same time that they were leaving. Tom Moreton replied for the lepers, bidding me an affectionate goodbye and thanking the Church for its ministrations to them, and then the poor lepers gave me the only offering that was in their power to give. They sang with real feeling and earnestness "God be with you till we meet again." I took leave of them feeling that it closed a relationship which had been one of much happiness to me and I hope of some comfort to them. They propose to take with them their Church bell to their new home.

We had a very stiff pull back to the ship in the teeth of the gale, the little dinghy dancing like a cork on the waves and drenching us with spray. On board the Francis Pritt it was not very much better and I ate my dinner on deck in the intervals of dodging waves, getting back to Thursday Island about 3 p.m.

AN AWFUL CAUSE.

The bridegroom was in extremis. He was a foreigner. His knowledge of the English language was limited. His agitation was extreme, and his bewilderment at the complicated preliminaries of the marriage ceremony was rapidly passing into terror. With stammering lips he repeated the words of declaration, which set forth in long-winded phraseology that there was no kindred relationship or alliance, former marriage or want of consent of parents or guardians, to prevent his being married "to the buxom widow, who watched his anxious efforts with the calmness born of experience, "or any other lawful cause," persists the clergyman; "or any other awful cause" gasped the unhappy man, and sat down, too relieved that it was over to notice the titter with which his version was received.

THE TRUTH OF CHRISTIANITY.

For any churchman who wants a cheap well-bound, well-written book on the evidences of Christianity, we can strongly recommend "The Truth of Christianity," by Colonel Turton, D.S.O., of the Royal Engineers, published by Wells Gardner at 2s. 6d. net and now in its fifth edition. The gallant Colonel, who writes from South Africa, assisted, no doubt, by his practical and scientific training, has marshalled a great array of facts and arguments with striking skill and simplicity; and no one has any right to complain of being perplexed by criticisms on Christianity unless he has read this able defence of Christian Faith, published at a price which all can afford. With the exception of an unessential reference on page 166 we have failed to discover any errors, and where the Colonel cannot explain a difficulty he very wisely admits frankly that he has no explanation to offer, which of course does not mean that there is none. The book may be strongly recommended as a frank and powerful defence of the Christian Faith by a Christian layman. Here and there perhaps a theologian might be tempted to explain or qualify, but to do so would probably be to detract from the effectiveness of the work. It is unencumbered and to the point, as a soldier's book should be.

IL SANTO.

Miss A. C. White writing from Porto Maurizio, Italy, says "I think that Il Santo is a book which might have done more to rouse people in any other country than Italy. Here among those that I see and speak to it has had very little effect. When it was published everyone read it in haste so as to have finished before it was put on the Index, as everyone was certain it would be. The reading over, everyone seems to have done with it. I think that one reason why the book has not made more stir is that very few people seem to really care deeply whether the methods of the Roman Church are criticized or not. They find it much simpler and easier to go on as they are than to wish for any reforms."

THE DIOCESE.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east, by the Northern Territory on the west, and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19 deg. 30 min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east par. 144 and thence N. to lat S. 16 deg. 40 min., and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory of South Australia, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 q. miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 16,500 whites, 7,000 Japanese, Chinese and other aliens, and 35,000 aborigines. The white population is chiefly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre N. of Cape York.

FINANCE.

The Diocese has no endowment beyond the Bishop's income of £300 per annum.

MISSIONS.

Missions are carried on among the Japanese at Thursday Island, among the S. Sea Islanders at Thursday Island and Mosman, and among the aborigines on the Mitchell River.

SPECIAL OFFERTORIES.

On Easter Day the offertories are given to the Clergyman of the Parish, and on Good Friday to the Australian Board of Missions.

Bishop's Diary.

Saturday, June 15th. Rev. A. R. Ebbs and I left Thursday Island in the Francis Pritt on Saturday, June 15th, at 11.30 a.m. The weather was extraordinarily calm for the time of the year. There was hardly any wind and we drifted out with the tide, so slowly that it was nearly 10 p.m. before we had passed Booby Island. Then we met with a heavy swell from the S.W. and a breeze from the S.E. causing a nasty lumpy sea which continued all night and next day; but after breakfast we managed to hold service on deck for the crew; though it cannot be honestly said that the singing was a great success.

7.30 p.m., Tuesday, June 18th. Off Chasm Island on the N.W. coast Groote Island. This is the first instant that I have been able to write or indeed think very connectedly since Saturday morning, and I must explain how we come to be anchored here under Chasm Island instead of being on our way to the mouth of the Roper 100 miles to the south. By about midday on Sunday the sea was very high though the wind was not high enough to account for it. On Monday morning the wind increased to a gale and the seas became mountainous, but the Pritt behaved splendidly after being closely reefed down and ran 125 miles from midday on Sunday to midday on Monday. The weather was too bad to take observations and the wind so violent that it was probable that with our shortened sail we should be unable to make our destination, so I suggested to Captain Noelke that he should make for the north end of Groote Island some 30 miles north of our course, when we might possibly find shelter from the fierce south-easterly, which was making even some of the crew seasick and reducing the passengers to a state of mental chaos. I was well enough to sit from time to time by the steersman and watch the kill with which he met the huge walls of water that came rushing up towering above us and apparently bent on destroying us, yet under the killed hand the Pritt climbed a mountain here and dived through a valley there, always eluding the full shock till one came to have almost contempt for the ease with which the puny kill of man baffled their efforts. Yet some of them were cunning too. Now they would seem to pass by and then suddenly shoot up a deluge of water drenching the usually only dry spot over the stern, now jumping up unseen under the bows and smothering the vessel in spray. But it was too wet to stay much on deck and the cabin had to be closely fastened down with a tarpaulin over skylight and hatch, so that it may be imagined that three days of stifling heat and darkness even with an occasional excursion to the raging deck did not tend to raise the spirits. The barometer went up to 30.21 and stayed there steadily. In fact it is there still to the confusion of other unhappy travellers in the Gulf. For a high barometer means a southerly gale. Monday was a terrible night. Sea after sea broke over the ship, for it is more difficult to avoid them at night, and the wind howled with a perfect frenzy. At dawn the captain said that something must go even with our closely reefed sails, and so took in our big sail altogether. The gale grew worse and worse. No sights at all could be taken and though the log said we had run 142 miles it seemed incredible reefed down and shortened as we had been; the wind and sea grew worse and worse, we did not know where we were. Melancholy sat on the faces of the crew, some of whom were still seasick and none quite sure what was going to happen, as the captain said that at dark there would be nothing for it but to beat out again from the supposed direction of the land into the what promised to be a yet wilder night than the last. Mr. Ebbs and I had a little meeting for prayer for divine guidance, and he had just come up for his first visit of recovery to the deck and was sitting perched with me at the stern about four o'clock when he called my attention to two sea birds. I called John Wesley's attention to them and he looked keenly about and few moments later pointed out a little island about 8 miles to the S.W., an outlier of Groote Island. It was a critical moment, only a couple of hours to dark and an anchorage to be found in a raging gale. Captain Noelke was equal to the occasion and up went the foresail again and we simply flew along as close hauled as we could be to the wind at the rate of at least eight or nine knots. It was a close shave, as there was no possibility of anchoring under the first parts of the Island that we came to, and we had to go some twenty miles from where we first sighted land before the captain found in the dark a sheltered spot in 15 fathom of water close in under Chasm Island over which we heard the wind howling in baffled rage. No one had had much to eat since leaving Booby Island and the first question was "what shall we have for tea" and it was unanimously decided in favour of fried onions and sausages. I felt proud of the Francis Pritt and thankful to Almighty God who had brought us safely from the storm to the haven, for the gale was so fierce that unable to carry sail we might have been blown away to the northward with no harbours of refuge had we not just sighted the island in the nick of time. I did not forget how many had been praying for protection and guidance for us. It should be mentioned for future guidance that one should not again take the course we took as it involves too great danger of being blown north by a gale. We ought to have gone down the Queensland coast sufficiently to get a safe slant of wind, and then in any gale refuge could be sought under Maria Island or if that were missed under Groote Island, with certainty of making it. I think everyone on board, even John Wesley's little puppy dog shut up in the after hatch, was as glad to get into safety as we were.

Next morning, Wednesday, 19th, it was blowing as hard as ever, making rough water even under the shelter of the Island. We got up anchor about 7 a.m. and stood S.E. by Winchelsea Island almost to Connection Island, from which we ran back on the other tack and anchored at noon in 4-fathom water and well sheltered under N.W. Bluff, the N.W. point of Groote Eylandt. A reef runs out about half-a-mile to the west of the Bluff, which is a fine mass of cliff rising almost sheer out of the water. After dinner I landed with Mr. Ebbs, John and Jimmy. We walked a mile along the beach to the west, saw a few tracks of natives and one recent fire. We then struck inland through some thick scrub interspersed with open forest towards the foot of the hill, but could only get through with difficulty. I searched well for water but could only find one small spring almost dry just through the scrub to the right of the Bluff, but the ground was damp in many places. I left some flour and tobacco under a large rock and after a delightful bathe in the sea we returned on board about 4.30 p.m. bringing with us, alas, a large consignment of flies. The barometer shows little sign of improvement and we are glad to be in retirement. Even in this sheltered spot while we were ashore our large new enamel washing basin was caught up by the wind and whirled overboard before it could be saved. We had a quiet night and sailed at 9.30 a.m. the following morning.

Thursday, June 20th. Running between Connection Island and Groote Island. Though the barometer was still very high, 30.22, the wind had much moderated and we were able to set all sail again for the first time. As we ran down the coast we noticed several signal fires. The wind was contrary and we had to beat all the way against a fresh breeze. There is a good channel with 8 fathom of water between Connection and Groote Island. The west coast of Groote Eylandt is low with a sandy foreshore and low wooded ranges behind. It seems to be rather poor country. At the south-western corner of the island a peninsula of low sandy hills runs out about four miles to the westward, and under it we found excellent anchorage in four-fathom water with soft bottom about half-a-mile from shore and about three miles to the N.E. of a little round islet off the point of the peninsula. We saw several natives on shore and two came off in a fine dug out canoe which they propelled with powerful strokes. They were large, well-made men in splendid condition, but understood no word of English except the magic word 'Tabak.' We found from John Wesley, who includes some knowledge of Malay among his accomplishments, that the few words they used were Malay. They asked for rice in Malay and we gave them some. I gave them some tobacco and flour and then motioned to them to cast off the line we had thrown them as they were in danger of swamping. Soon after we anchored, a little after sunset and too late to go ashore. I noticed in the canoe only shell bailers and a flat stone containing a few burning sticks. This is a splendid refuge in southerly or easterly weather, being completely sheltered and plenty of water. It is about 60 miles N.E. of the Roper River mouth.

Friday, June 21st. After breakfast I landed with Mr. Ebbs, John Wesley and Sam. Three natives came out in the canoe, but seeing us prepare to start, made for the shore and landed before us. Where we landed there was a high sand ridge above the beach, then a hollow and then a higher ridge. Three or four natives showed on the ridge, watching us uneasily. They wear a string round the waist with a small bunch of threads about 9 inches long. I left the rest of the party with the boat and walked towards the ridge. One man waited for me, but the others disappeared over the ridge. We walked up to the top of the first ridge and saw that the rest had retreated to the second ridge. When my companion saw this and that the rest of our party were advancing from the boat his courage failed him, and to my great regret they all ran for their lives. We followed along the sandridges for about a mile to the east, finding many tracks of natives, to a large clump of shea-oaks on the beach, where we found fish spears with a double wooden prong with carved wooden barbs, and several home-made fishing lines; the only hook we saw had been made out of a large nail. Between the shea-oaks and the sea was a hole in the sand about two feet deep, just above high-water mark containing fresh water. About a quarter of a mile inland we found the main camp, which had contained probably about 40 persons. We found a neatly tied up parcel of opossum fur, a dilly bag with two wooden knitting needles round which the work was neatly twisted, some feather and string ornaments and several throwing sticks. These latter are simply a short round stick with a peg for the spear, very inferior to the elaborate woomeras of the eastern coast of the Gulf. We found some Malay calico and three gin bottles marked "Rotterdam." I left tobacco, a bag of flour, some fish hooks and knives. A little way inland we found swampy country with pandanus trees, the ground being soft and damp though we did not actually see any water. On our return to the place we had landed at we thoroughly enjoyed a bathe after our long tramp over the sandhills, for we went some way inland to get a better view. Before going off we had a closer look at the canoe. It was cut out of a single tree and was 19ft. in length, with a freeboard of 9 in. rising sharply at prow and stern to 18in, the stern being about 4in. across; altogether a very serviceable boat. I brought away one of the three paddles, leaving a couple of knives and some fish hooks in return. It was 4ft. 6in. in length with a long blade like an ordinary oar. We got back on board about noon quite ready for dinner. In the afternoon the barometer for the first time showed symptoms of a fall. After tea the dinghy was got in and severely lashed down on deck in anticipation of a rough day to-morrow, and when Mr. Ebbs and I came on deck about half-past seven after saying evensong, the captain said that the blacks were hanging round in the canoe again. I got the glasses and soon saw that she was empty and drifting and would soon be lost in the darkness. Orders were given to secure her and in a few moments the dinghy was unlashed and got overboard, and the wandering canoe captured, taken ashore and left well up on the beach, though the men found it a heavy job to carry her up. I was most thankful that she drifted so comparatively close to us and that she was seen, as the natives would have thought that we had taken or destroyed her.

Saturday, June 22nd. Sailed at 6 a.m. Wind and sea fresh. Sighted Maria Island which is very high at 12.30 p.m. and anchored close up under the land in 2-fathom water at 4 p.m. Mr. Ebbs and I landed with one of the boys and shot a couple of plover. The Island is covered with low bush and is about five miles long. We walked some distance along the beach and found a fine bay about two miles to the S.W. There seemed to be nothing on the island except birds, and they evidently saw few visitors. We had some difficulty in finding the bar of the river; which is almost out of sight of land, but did so finally.

Monday, June 24th. After a quiet night we woke to a light breeze and calm sea, and starting at 6 a.m. sailed slowly over the bar on which we had 9ft. of water, but there cannot be much over 5ft. at L.W.S. At the first beacon we had 12ft., increasing further in to 18ft. and 20ft. As we got to the mouth of the river the breeze died almost away and for about an hour we had to tow the ship with the dinghy to give her steerage way, but after that a good breeze sprang up and we ran quickly up the river for 20 miles to a point where there is a small piece of bank about 10 feet high. Here we found Mr. Macauley, the Police Officer at the Roper, awaiting us in his boat. He had been five days coming down the 70 miles of river from the station, as they could only make progress when wind and tide were suitable. He had three aborigines with him one being Bob the Pilot, son of old Bob the Pilot. We welcomed him warmly, and waiting till he got his things packed, took his boat in tow, and continued our progress up the river for another 12 miles, when about 4.30 p.m. we noticed some natives on the north bank and anchored. Mr. Ebbs, Mr. Macauley and I went ashore and found old Bob the Pilot and a small camp of natives, to whom I presented a bag of flour and some tobacco, pointing out our Mission Flag and telling them that it would return next year. I tried to explain the nature of the proposed mission, but it was hard to get them to understand. We walked about a mile to look at the camp, a very primitive sort of affair. On the way Old Bob, who is intelligent and speaks fairly good English, tried hard to comprehend my business. Was I taking tucker for the police? Or for the station? Or was I looking for the copper stone? I told him that I had simply come to see him and other black fellows. He smiled incredulously and I fear did not take in very much of my attempted explanation of the raison d'être of Christian Missions. However, he gratefully accepted an offer of medicine for his inflamed eyes and promised us score of crabs and mudfish for the morrow. We returned on board for tea, and felt much thankful that the first stage of our journey had been so successfully accomplished.

Tuesday, June 25th. A day of very slow progression. The river winds constantly in every direction and we were over nine hours in creeping up about 18 miles. We anchored at 7.30 p.m. soon after passing Harolds Bluff near a little round island. Bob the Pilot was of great service to us in pointing out dangers. All the country up to this point is very poor being flats liable to flood and with little water. At our anchorage here the water in the river is quite fresh. From what I learn from Mr. Macauley much harm has been and is being done the natives by the Malay proahs which visit the coast during the N.W. season. They come without reporting anywhere, carry off the native women and supply the men with drink.

Wednesday, June 16th. Got under way early and ran over some very shallow flats. The water is quite fresh and the mangroves have been replaced by a great variety of trees. We kept going till 8 p.m., but only accomplished some 25 miles in all.

Thursday, June 27. Started at 6 a.m. towing the ship. Passed a very dangerous rocky corner just below wreck of Young Australian. The channel is narrow and the tide sweeps into a bight full of snags, which we with difficulty cleared by a few yards. It is far the worst place we have found on the river. The Young Australian was wrecked on a rock about $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile above here some 30 years ago. Only the boiler and ironwork of the paddle wheels now remain. We have just had a great excitement. The captain who was steering happened to look up at the main boom just over his head and saw a large tiger snake making its way along it. There was a rush for marlinespikes and hammers and with some difficulty the brute was killed. It must have come up the anchor chain or the tow rope of the dinghy in the night and ensconced itself in the furled sail. The sail had been loosed about half-an-hour previously and it is most providential that no one was bitten. Fortunately the wind kept just strong enough to enable us to stem the tide, and the narrowing river with snags all along each bank required all the captain's skill in steering. About 4 p.m. we reached the bar of rocks which prevents further progress. It is not visible and the river is only about 100 feet wide at this point. Here Mr. Macauley left us for the Police Station which is four miles further up the river, and I went ashore and shot a few parrots and a pigeon for our larder. It has taken us four days to come up from the bar outside the mouth, and I do not think that a sailing vessel can do it in much less time. It will probably take double the time to get down, but the captain is to do the worst part of this while we are away and we are to ride down 40 miles after him, as we wish him to take his own time in negotiating the dangerous places on the upper reaches.

Friday, June 28th. Before breakfast I went ashore and got from the natives a few spears with well made quartzite heads. These come from the ranges to the W.S.W. After breakfast Mr. Ebbs and I rowed up the river about four miles to the Police Station, which is situated on the south bank just below a rocky bar which entirely blocks the river at this point and marks the end of tidal waters. Mr. Macauley welcomed us, the other constable being away. The station boasts a small garden and a flock of about 200 goats. After landing our goods we sent the boat back to the ship; and in the evening Mr. Macauley kindly sent down a couple of goats. We found that unfortunately owing to the absence of men and horses it would be impossible to make a start on the following day, which was rather a disappointment.

Sunday, June 30th. We did not start till 10.30 a.m. and so had time for service first. We crossed the river and went N.E. to Knucky's Bluff on the Wilton. From here we followed the Wilton north for about 8 miles, camping for dinner at the crossing. After dinner we crossed and travelled E.N.E. and N. over flat country the first part of which was well watered. About dark we came to a creek where we intended to camp, but there was no water and we went on for an hour and a half in the dark without coming to any sign of water. It was difficult work keeping the horses together in the dark, and the blackboy who was supposed to be guiding us confessed that he had no idea of the way or where water was. There seemed every prospect of having to camp without it when changing our direction for about half a mile to the north we blundered right on a small lagoon to our infinite satisfaction. We got tea about 8 p.m., and afterwards said evensong with difficulty by the light of pieces of burning bark. While we were riding along without any apparent prospect of finding water, I could not help re-echoing the hymn that so many congregations were I knew singing at that moment "Lead Kindly Light"; and we were led.

Monday, July 1st. A very hard rough day. We got off at 9 p.m., and till about 1 p.m. travelled down a well watered creek running S.E. Finding we were far too much to the south we crossed the creek and struck north over the ranges. After a while we found a very old pad supposed to be the old track from Lake Costello ten years ago to the Roper River at Rennie's Lagoon. Very rough travelling over the ranges, then down on to another creek, with a narrow belt of fair grass along side it. Ran it up for several miles and camped 5 p.m. Distance about 30 miles, and as we did not stop for food or water we were rather tired, but refreshed by a bathe in the creek. Not a very good night, too tired to sleep very well.

Tuesday, July 2nd. Left 8 a.m. Travelled north, four or five miles up very rough ranges, with fine permanent pools of water, but little grass. Splendid country for blacks of whom we saw many traces, but did not see any. Either they kept out of sight or were all away, as they were reported to be at a great corroboree on the Wilton. At last our road was blocked by an enormous mass of rock. We tried another, and it came to a precipice. Evidently there was no thoroughfare for horses, and it was clear that the old station could not be among the ranges, so I told Mr. Macauley that as the next certain thing ahead was the northern coast of Australia I thought we had better turn back, which we did, having failed to find the old station, which was not astonishing as nothing is left but a few stones which once made a chimney, and a few posts, if not eaten by white ants. There are little patches of scrub in the ranges, plenty of mussels, fish, ding foxes, birds, etc., but absolutely no cattle country for more than a very few head of stock here and there. The only merit of the country is that it is well watered, with large permanent pools. We turned back about 9.15 a.m. and retraced our path over the weary ranges, getting near of them, by travelling as fast as possible, about 1 p.m. when we thankfully camped for dinner on a creek. We made a short stage in the afternoon and camped at 4.45 p.m. for fear of finding no water after leaving the creek. Night pleasant and not too cold.

Wednesday, July 3rd. Started about 8 a.m. After a while I noticed that Tom the black trooper who was supposed to be our guide was travelling steadily south mile after mile making apparently for the end of a range in the far distance. I thought it strange, and called Mr. Ebbs' attention to the fact, for I knew that our proper course back lay only a little to the south of west. About half an hour later I was not surprised to see him stop and admit that he was completely bushed. Mr. Macauley now took the lead and changed the course to due west, and for three hours we made our way through thick scrubby country which made travelling very difficult, and view of any kind impossible, while there was considerable risk of losing the packhorses. This country is utterly useless for any purpose. We were fortunately able to find a low place to cross the range and gradually descending through the same dense dry country we came out on the Wilton about 1 p.m., and camped on a magnificent waterhole for dinner, very glad to have at length got clear of our difficulties. We crossed the Wilton, running it down nearly to the junction with the Roper, and got back to the Police Station.

We saw plenty of old fires, and signs of blacks, but not one could be seen. Mr. Macauley says that he thinks they suspect us of an intention to arrest them for cattle killing, and take them in the Francis Pritt to Port Darwin. Of course in such rough country it would be impossible to see them if they did not want to be seen. Mr. Macauley has been most courteous and obliging in helping us in every way. We must have travelled well over 100 miles in the four days, and for the most part over different country going and returning.

Thursday, July 4th. I was very glad of a day's rest from riding, but had a busy day. I had asked Mr. R., the manager of Hodgson Downs, about 50 miles distant to the south, to come over and see me, and soon after breakfast he arrived with Mrs. R., their little boy and a cavalcade of four stockmen, twelve blackboys, and the wives of four of them and over 100 horses, all except Mr. and Mrs. R. on their way to remove the last of the cattle from the Arafura Station.

Mrs. R. has probably one of the most isolated homes of any white women in Australia. We were very glad to see them and took a number of photographs of the outfit, which is to be absent for six months. Mr. R. gave us a great deal of useful information, and advice on the subject of the proposed mission station. The blacks he had were splendidly made men, and all most smart and clean. In the evening we had service, which was attended by eight whites and 16 civilised blacks, a record gathering for the Roper River. We had a very hearty service though the singing left something to be desired. Mr. R's. small son, who speaks chiefly blackfellow language, took much interest in the preparations for service and confided to his mother "I think that fellow man make big corroboree to-night." We had hoped to start for the boat to-morrow morning, but to our disappointment some of the necessary horses cannot be found, and we shall have to wait with what patience we may.

Friday July 5th. Got some writing done in morning. In the afternoon walked a mile or two up the river. Scenery very pretty, large trees and fine stretches of water.

Saturday July 6th. Left the station at 10 a.m., and at four miles crossed the Wilton just above tidal water. Down the north bank of the Roper River through eight miles of very poor country. Another four miles of rather better country, brought us to a fine lagoon known as Yalwarra or Rennie's Lagoon. A crescent shaped lake over two miles long runs round the base of some low hills and is covered with beautiful white lilies. It is about half-a-mile from the river, and the land between is high above flood mark, level, and well grassed and would make a fine site for a house. After lunch we followed on down the river for another four miles past a second fine lagoon, and soon after we caught sight of Mount St. George four miles off. This is a table mountain about 3 miles in length and 600 feet high with steep red bastion like cliffs. The approach to the mountain through an open park like country, (but with poor coarse grass) is very beautiful, and at the foot of the cliffs is an encircling lake on which we camped for the night about sunset, having travelled about 24 miles.

Sunday, July 7th. Left camp about 8 a.m. Very poor country for about four miles, the ranges coming in closely to the river, then the country opened out a little and we passed several swamps and lagoons, but these all become salt at the end of a dry season, Mount St. George being the lowest permanent water on this side of the river, that is, over 60 miles from the sea. The lowest permanent water on the south bank is about 10 miles further down. At Yan Merri about 14 miles from Mt. St. George we passed a large swamp, the lowest fresh water on the river, but not really permanent. Here we found a small native village with grass mosquito proof huts, and saw some natives who told us that the boat was about two miles further down the river, where on arrival about 1 p.m. we found she had been waiting three days, having experienced great difficulty in getting over the flats off Garden Island even at high water. The crew had been luxuriating in ducks and we found a plentiful supply for dinner.

The tide turned about 3 p.m., so we said good-bye to Mr. Macauley, with many thanks for his most valuable assistance, and set off on our homeward voyage. We made slow progress and found the river very shallow in places, but by dark we had made eight miles and passed most of the bad corners. We anchored at dusk for fear of snags. After tea we had all the crew in to service, and I told them all about our enquiries and researches on behalf of the mission in which they seemed much interested. A number of friends of Bob the pilot accompanied us for some miles along the bank, headed by old Bob the Pilot bearing a precious kerosene tin which the captain had presented to him.

Monday, July 8th. Off soon after 6 a.m. Made about 10 miles, and passed the last of the rocks before the tide failed at 10 a.m. Anchored and landed through the thick mangrove on to big open plain with bare salt pan and patches of grass. Found fresh water lagoon, but not permanent. Found old Bob and his tribe, who had crossed the river higher up. Bob enquired as to how many months it would be before we returned, and announced his intention of coming to stay with us when we did.

I found in the camp two hollow pelican bones

The New Theology.

We have been reading somewhat late in the day Mr. Campbell's much-advertised "New Theology." We were induced to hasten our perusal of his book by the fear that it might be already forgotten if we delayed any longer.

Mr. Campbell is not one of the flippant notoriety hunters who attack established beliefs as a short cut to popularity. He takes himself very seriously and is evidently in earnest, and honestly desirous of discovering a religion which will accommodate itself to the mood of the present day; but the book is deplorably hasty and shallow. The author tells us that he wrote it in the course of a short winter holiday at the seaside. Would it be too much to express a wish that Mr. Campbell had devoted, say, at least three months instead of three weeks to the consideration and exposition of some of the deepest problems of life and thought? Take, for instance, what he says of the problem of evil. "It is requisite that we should determine our attitude towards a great question which in various forms has beset the human intellect ever since the dawn of history—namely, the problem of evil. It is still the fashion to declare this problem insoluble; but I have the audacity to believe that it is not chiefly mystery." And then Mr. Campbell proceeds in twenty-four pages to explain what the human intellect has failed to explain in as many centuries. We fear that Mr. Campbell is suffering largely from what we call in Australia "swelled head." Sufficient proof may be found in the fact that he speaks patronisingly of St. John as "the exceedingly able author of the Fourth Gospel." How pleased the Apostle would have been had he known that he was to have the approval of the exceedingly able Minister of the City Temple!

We do not think that this book would ever have been written had the author ever really understood the Catholic Faith. He sets up one after another various Protestant exaggerations of particular sides of the truth and knocks them down triumphantly, without noticing that the careful balance and qualifying statements of Catholic theology had already warned men against the danger of the loss of the due proportion of faith.

Of course, there is nothing new about the New Theology. On the one side it reiterates almost the very phrases of the old Arianism, and on the other it reflects the still older Eastern Pantheism; which, by claiming that man is divine, practically obliterates the distinction between good and evil. It is a pity that a man of such earnestness and moral and social enthusiasm should have been in such a hurry to publish such hasty and ill-considered statements. We note that Mr. Campbell devotes many pages to trying to explain his extraordinary statement that when a man got drunk, or committed some abominable crime, he was really seeking after God; but surely the very fact that it needs so much explaining is a proof that the statement should never have been made. Paradoxes are attractive to clever people, but they are apt to recoil on the author's head. Almost any statement can be shown to have some truth in it if you can only explain it at sufficient length, but in a book meant for plain people plain words are best.

We have hopes of Mr. Campbell. He is so buoyantly self-confident. He knows all about the mind of Christ. "I am quite sure he never thought of such a thing" as founding a Church as commonly understood. "The Church has nothing to do with preparing man for a world to come." Such cocksureness must sooner or later bring him up with a sharp turn, and then we believe that his evident desire for truth will make him turn with a humble mind to the old truths of the Christian Faith.

Bishop's College.

An important meeting of the Diocesan Council was held at Bishop's College on Friday July 26th, at which the Bishop, Rev. J. Jones, and Messrs. Milman, Sullivan, and Walker were present. The Bishop referred to a circular he had sent two months previously to all the parishes on the subject of Bishop's College pointing out the great services that had been rendered by Bishop's College as a centre of diocesan life and activity apart from its more immediate purpose. "Since the College was started, however, considerable changes have come about. Queensland has been formed into an ecclesiastical province and a provincial Training College for Clergy has been established in Brisbane. It now seems to me that if the consent of S.P.G. and of Lord Beauchamp, who has promised his subscription till 1909, can be obtained it would in many ways be better to have our students at the College in Brisbane where they would get a much better climate for study, the advantage of more variety of tuition and of the encouragement of numbers. The cost would also be considerably less. If this plan be adopted the question arises: How can Bishop's College be maintained as a necessary centre of diocesan life. The Bishop's income is only £300 a year out of which he pays his own travelling expenses over a diocesan area of about half a million square miles. It is absolutely impossible for him to take over Bishop's College and maintain it as a diocesan centre on his present income." The replies from the parishes were unanimous in recommending that the students should be sent to Brisbane; that Bishop's College should be maintained either as a Bishop's residence or as a Diocesan House, that pro vision should be made from the General Funds of the diocese either to maintain the house as diocesan centre, or to add sufficiently to the Bishop's income to enable him so to maintain it. It was finally proposed by Mr. H. Milman seconded by Rev. J. Jones and carried unanimously that provided the consent of the persons concerned be obtained, that it is desirable to provide for the training of the students at Brisbane to make over the house to the Bishop as an Episcopal Residence and to allot £120 a year, exclusive of repairs, general rates, and insurance to the Bishop for the expenses of maintenance.

The Bishop announced that Rev. J. Jones would live in the house during his absence next year in England and act as administrator of the diocese.

Rev. C. B. Mirrlees.

Rev. Charles Buchanan Mirrlees, M.A. of Merton College, Oxford, and curate of St. Barnabas, Bristol, has volunteered for work in the diocese of Carpentaria. Mr. Mirrlees was ordained priest in 1896, has worked since in Bristol, and has the highest recommendations from his bishop and vicar. Mrs. Mirrlees has been especially successful in work among girls. They hope to leave England in the middle of September and to arrive here about the end of October. We are sure that they will receive a very hearty welcome from the diocese. They will probably go to Croydon.

Miss Buchanan.

Rarely has so much pleasure been given to anyone in Thursday Island, as by the news received by cable and afterwards by letter by the Bishop, that the operation on Miss Buchanan's foot had been successful and that he hoped to return in December and devote herself permanently to work in the Diocese. Three years ago Miss Buchanan was to have been ordained deaconess for work in the diocese of Carpentaria and she obtained a first class in the Th. A. examination, but her health prevented the step being then taken she now hopes to be ordained by the Bishop in January. She desires the prayers of all her friends in her reparation for this momentous step. According to present arrangements she will arrive by the Guthrie on or about December 9th.

Gifts to the Cathedral.

We have to thank Mr. K. O. Mackenzie for providing a glass-fronted case for the preservation of the Kanahooka Memorial in the Cathedral. Our warm thanks are also due to Mr. Mackenzie for presenting a large oak-framed chart of the island-studded seas between Albany Pass and Booby Island. On the chart is marked in detail the positions of the Quetta Memorial Cathedral.

The chart has been placed to the left hand at the entrance to the Church. Many worshippers and visitors have expressed their appreciation.

Some Impressions of the Trubananan Mission Station.

The writer was able to spend a few days at the Trubananan Mission Station on the Gulf of Carpentaria in August. The life and its surroundings are of intense interest, and the problems which surround the work equally so. The station, about nine miles from the coast is in splendid country, well-watered and abounding in game of every sort. On the swamps are ibis, crane, duck, policeman-birds, native companions, on the plains plovers, wallabies, emus, overhead flocks of white cockatoos, galahs (now pink, now grey, according as they wheel) and parrots of every hue, while the crow is heard everywhere.

The timber is not large but varied and abundant, there is plenty of paper-bark suitable for all building purposes, blood-wood, milk-wood, etc.

The creeks and lagoons abound in fish and mussels, and are covered with water lilies, rose colour, blue and white.

The natives are thus amply provided with food of all descriptions, and with weapons and tools as well. Everything lies ready to their hand, a mussel shell scrapes and smooths their weapons, the under surface of a leaf growing in abundance in the bush serves as emery paper and polish.

The women get fibre for their dilly-bags and straining cloths, bark is used for the coolamons in which they wash and pound the lily-roots and pandanus leaves form their huts in the wet season.

It is splendid cattle country and it would be a great thing if the Mission could afford to stock it by degrees. Employment for the natives and support for the Mission would be ensured.

Round the station a fair amount of cultivation has been done, and thanks to the timely gift of a plough about twenty more acres will be ready for the wet season. Tools, implements, seeds, young plants of all kinds are much needed.

The natives actually working on the station number between thirty and forty, but a great many of the camp-blacks are more or less under the influence of the mission. They are learning to come for medical treatment and thus acquiring confidence in the good intentions of the staff.

The men on the station work at clearing, digging, building, the boys, between school-hours, look after the cows and horses and bring in firewood. They all look healthy and clean; the men dress in sooloes (waist cloths) or singlet and trousers, the women in loose cotton dresses. Morning and evening they assemble for prayers in the little chapel and sing and respond most musically.

Between tea and evensong there is cricket practice, a great institution. Fielding is carried on by the help of rice mats, bits of canvas, or sacks with which the ball is smothered. The wicket-keepers, two in number, hold an extra large mat behind the wickets to catch the ball. If a fast ball comes at the field, who are all massed together at the bowler's end, all fly shrieking; a ball that gets out to long field is pursued, checked and possibly split by a spear. In many cases a player's equipment is spear and womerah in one hand, mat in the other. The bowling is throwing pure and simple. Often the game has to be suspended to allow the players opportunity for enjoying any amusing episode. They rend the air with yells of ecstasy, embrace their neighbours and roll on the ground until the joke has been duly honoured.

The camp-blacks, of whom there are many different tribes, each with its own dialect, are for the most part naked. The gins squat among their wretched dingoes and smouldering logs, preparing lily-root, damper, and nursing their babies while the men are out hunting wallabies; sometimes the women take their turn at this.

The language trouble will always be a difficulty with the present generation. The Mission will do little for the older natives beyond winning their confidence. But the young ones are there to be trained and taught, and later on married and settled on the Reserve, where occupation must be provided for the men either as stockmen, small farmers, or boats' crews.

This will be the greatest task of the Mission; it is comparatively easy to teach the children but to prevent a relapse into their wild ways will always be a great difficulty.

After being among the blacks one has little doubt of the necessity for and the usefulness of the work, but the racial, industrial and ethical questions which confront such mission work are very serious and can only be solved by time and experience.

Pre-conceived theories are soon pulverized in actual contact with the limitations and difficulties on every side.

The Trubananan Mission is to be warmly commended to the prayers, sympathy and practical support of all who recognise that the care of these black brothers and sisters is part of the "white man's burden." We have usurped their hunting grounds, common fairness demands a return of the best we can give them.

Thursday Island Notes.

VISIT OF THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL.

On Saturday, June 22nd, the Governor-General arrived at Thursday Island from Port Darwin by H.M.S. Pyramus. His Excellency and his staff, accompanied by the Government Resident and the Chairman of the Shire Council were shown over the Cathedral by the Sub-dean. Lord Northcote was much interested in the various memorials of disasters. His Excellency afterwards visited the College.

The Pyramus left at mid-day for the south. News has reached here that off Cape Melville 100 miles north of Cooktown, the Pyramus got on a reef. Fortunately for the Vice-Regal party the s.s. Tsinan was following the Pyramus and having failed to pluck the Pyramus off, the Governor General and his party went south by the Taiyuan.

THE CONCERT AUGUST 23RD.

The promoters of, and the performers at the very successful entertainment, given in aid of the Quetta Memorial Cathedral funds, have the thanks of the community. The School of Arts was full to overflowing, everybody was very pleased with the programme, and the financial result will be a substantial addition to church funds.

Great praise is due to Mr. W. Hayne for the excellent programme of music which he prepared; and to Mrs. Wassell and Miss Milman for the extreme beauty and precision of the tableaux-vivants, which they chose and carried through. The illuminating of the tableaux was wonderfully done by unseen hands. The story of each tableau was told by Mrs. J. Jones before the raising of the curtain; the audience appreciated these introductions.

It was a great pleasure to hear an orchestra once more, thanks to the Thursday Island Musical and Dramatic Club, which also provided "Mr. and Mrs. O'Leary." Long may they live. Our thanks to Mr. Jas. Flannery and Mr. Arthur Sullivan. Mr. Northcott's cornet solo, with the "echo" encore gave delight as did also the mandoline and piano duets so admirably rendered by Mr. and Mrs. Nagel. Mr. Claes' violin always has its welcome waiting, as usual its strains charmed our ears. Mrs. Bleakley, Miss Gummow, Miss Carfoot and Lieutenant Watts were the 'sweet singers.' The house insisted on an encore from Miss Carfoot, whose voice is a great addition to our musical circle.

We are much obliged to Mr. R. B. Cavaye for superintending the booking of the seats and allowing us the use of his window for the box plan of the hall.

G.F.S.

The local branch of the Girls' Friendly Society will meet on Saturday September 14th and Saturday September 28th at four o'clock.

The Annual G.F.S. Intercession Service was held in the Cathedral on Sunday June 23rd at four o'clock, the Vicar giving a most helpful address.

Amy Sinclair, one of our earliest and most faithful candidates and members, is at present visiting her sister at Pine Creek. We miss her very much and hope to welcome her back soon.

Two other members, May and Maud McKee, are visiting friends in Cairns. We hope to see them back shortly.

We are glad to welcome a number of new candidates, amongst the younger girls, Florrie Norgate, with whom we sympathise very much in the loss of her mother.

We are now working very hard and hope to have a good box full of garments for the Mitchell River Mission ready for Christmas.

Croydon.

There is not much in the way of news in this parish for the past quarter. The town is still in a very low condition financially, though there is every prospect of a change for the better about Christmas time. Two new mining companies are being farmed, and if either turns out a success, Croydon will again prosper and drooping spirits be revived.

The annual Sunday School picnic was held on the 4th July, and proved a great success. Considering the depressed state of the goldfield, it is pleasing to note that five pounds odd have been handed over from the picnic toward a similar treat next year. We are also pleased to note that the two schools (Croydon and Golden Gate) had their picnic together, and thus practically demonstrated the spirit of unity existing between the two towns.

It is with regret that we announce the departure of Mr. and Mrs. Stewart from the parish. Mr. Stewart has been organist of St. Margaret's Church for the past four years whilst Mrs. Stewart has been the leader of the choir for the same period. Just before their departure they were presented respectively with a pair of gold sleeve-links and a gold cross from the choir. Our best wishes go with them to their new sphere of labour—namely, Irvinebank, where we are sure their interest in the Church and its services will be as keen as it has been in Croydon.

Just before his departure, Mr. Stewart organised a sacred concert, which took place in St. Margaret's Church on Wednesday, the 14th August. The concert was a grand success in every way. As a result, Mr. Stewart handed over the sum of £11 to the Church funds.

We feel that we must say a word or two about the excellent way in which Mr. Luther Jones has carried on the work at Golden Gate. When the parish was left with only a deacon in charge, Mr. Jones kindly volunteered to conduct the Sunday evening services at St. John's, Golden Gate, and also to superintend the Golden Gate Sunday School. His earnestness and energy have enabled this work to be carried on most satisfactorily, and we feel sure that the new rector will find that the work has not gone back during the time we have been short-handed.

We are pleased to hear that the Rev C. B. Mirrlees, M.A., is expected to arrive with Mrs. Mirrlees during the present month. He will find that the parish is ready to extend him a most hearty welcome.

In conclusion, we desire to express our gratitude to Miss Gill, who has so kindly undertaken the duties of organist in the place of Mr. Stewart. The fact that she is such a keen and competent organist has taken away the sting that must otherwise have been felt, in the loss of her predecessor. We hope to see her at the organ for many years to come.

Mosman Notes.

The Rev. Mr. Gribble of Yarrabah preached at Mosman on Sunday, 18th August, for the Mitchell River Mission or Trubanaman. The collections came to £4 1s. 4d.

Mrs. Crees senr., of Port Douglas, gave 10s. for the Pan-Anglican Thanksgiving Fund. Which the secretary begs to acknowledge with thanks.

THE LATE KING.
TRUBANAMAN CREEK.

carefully stowed away, Bob said that they were to carry poison in "to mix with tucker of man you not like, all same as white man," at which proof of high civilisation he seemed much amused.

Here we parted from young Bob the pilot, who had grown quite fat during his sojourn on board, and is really a fine looking man. We are now about 25 miles from the mouth of the river.

Tuesday, July 9th. Soon after we got under way I shot an alligator on the bank. He gave several kicks and disappeared into the water. We made slow but steady progress, the river being now wide enough to beat, and had just enough light left to make the north head of the river. A dingo came down to the bank and howled at us, the only one we have seen or heard on this trip. The Pritt took eight days actual travelling to descend the river.

Wednesday, July 10th. We sailed at 6 a.m. and beat out four miles to the inner side of the bar, but had to anchor in very shallow water as the tide was too low. The wind and sea were violent, and we passed a very unpleasant time, but fortunately had just enough water. At noon we made another start and spent two hours beating out the two miles across the bar, wind, and sea, and tide all against us. The channel is very narrow, and on one side all, and on the other most of the beacons are gone so that everything has to be done by the lead, the water being so thick and muddy, that it is impossible to see anything; the water would shoal sometimes a fathom quicker than the lead could be thrown, so it may be imagined that beating out under these circumstances was no joke, and everyone heaved a sigh of relief when an extra half fathom told us that we were well over the bar. It was well we got out when we did without waiting for the tide to turn, as after we got out it blew harder than ever. The wind was due east, the direction in which we wanted to go, so we made little progress, but beat up as far as Marie Island, which we reached about an hour after dark, anchoring in still water—a great contrast to the continual buffeting of the day. We are looking forward to a rough time crossing, and so hope to make the most of our night's rest. There are various outlying reefs and rocks, which make it unsafe to proceed in the dark, so we can enjoy our quiet night with a clear conscience.

Monday, July 15th. I summarise the four last melancholy and unprofitable days. We left Marie Island at 7 a.m. on Thursday, and as soon as we got clear of the island ran into a heavy sea, which increased in violence as we got further from the land. For three days it was impossible to stand, or to cook any proper food, and the deck was constantly swept by the sea. The binnacle broke loose and we nearly lost both our compasses and John Wesley with them overboard. Several seas found their way below, and altogether we had a very miserable time. On Sunday though the sea was still high we were able to stay on deck, and begin to enjoy life again, and by Monday morning when we were some 30 miles S.W. of Duyphen Point all was bright and pleasant again. From here fortune smiled upon us. We passed the Coen River at 6 p.m., and Booby Island at 9 a.m. the following morning, arriving at Thursday Island at 8 p.m. after a long wait for the tide.

THE DIOCESE.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east, by the Northern Territory on the west, and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19deg 30min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east par. 144 and thence N. to lat. S. 16deg 40min., and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory of South Australia, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 sq. miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 16,500 whites, 7,000 Japanese, Chinese and other Asians, and 35,000 aborigines. The white population is chiefly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre N of Cape York.

FINANCE.

The Diocese has no endowment beyond the Bishop's income of £300 per annum.

MISSIONS.

Missions are carried on among the Japanese at Thursday Island, among the S. Sea Islanders at Thursday Island and Mosman, and among the aborigines on the Mitchell River.

SPECIAL OFFERTORIES.

On Easter Day the offertories are given to the Clergyman of the Parish, and on Good Friday to the Australian Board of Missions.

ANNUAL FIXTURES.

(1) March 31st—Parish accounts to close, and to be prepared for presentation to Easter meeting.

Diocesan Regulations.

(Issued by the Bishop with the approval of the Conference.)

CANONS.

The Canons of the Diocese of North Queensland will continue to be the rule of the Church in the Diocese of Carpentaria, except in so far as they are abrogated in any point by special and published direction of the Ordinary, or are plainly inapplicable through change of circumstances and conditions. They may be obtained from the Diocesan Book Depot; price 1s.

DIOCESAN ASSESSMENT.

Each Parish or District within the Diocese shall pay annually to the Church Management Fund such sum as may from year to year be assessed by the Diocesan Council, provided that such sum shall not exceed eight guineas nor be less than four guineas.

BUILDING REGULATIONS.

Plans for the building or alteration of Churches, Church Rooms, and Rectories must be submitted to the Bishop for approval before any contract is entered into, but such approval does not imply any Diocesan responsibility for the cost of the same.

No alteration may be made in any consecrated building without a faculty from the Bishop.

FROM MARRIAGE REGULATIONS.

2. No marriage may be celebrated otherwise than by banns or by Episcopal license.

4. No Surrogate may issue a license for, or any clergyman celebrate the marriage of, any divorced person whatsoever without reference to the Bishop, and permission obtained from him.

5. No marriage may be celebrated otherwise than in a Church or accustomed place of public worship except by express permission of the Bishop; provided that in urgent cases, founded on special circumstances, when reference to the Bishop is practically impossible, the clergyman shall act on his discretion, and forthwith report the circumstances to the Bishop.

7. The authorised fee for the Bishop's license is £3 3s. The Surrogate is authorised to retain for his own use this fee, with the exception of 10s. 6d., which is payable to the Church Management Fund. Where only £2 2s. or a smaller sum is paid, the Surrogate is authorised to retain three-fourths of the fee paid.

Bishop's Diary.

On May 15th, I went down to Hatfield at a meeting, and give some account of Carpentaria. My host, Lord William Cecil, was very interested in missions and contributed some deeply interesting letters to the "Times" on mission work in China. I was all over Hatfield House, which is not only wonderfully beautiful but most deeply interesting historically with its memories of Elizabeth and Cecil, and its later association with Lord Salisbury, who seems to have been most deeply loved by all who knew him.

On Wednesday and Thursday I was present at the S.P.G. annual meeting.

The celebration began with a great service in St. Paul's at which the Archbishop of Brisbane preached a sermon of great depth and earnestness. The wonderful mosaics of the choir roof and the altar have been finished since I was last in London. Pauls and they have made an immense difference. On the following day there was an afternoon meeting at the Albert House at which the Bishop of London was one of the speakers, and I gave a great meeting in the Albert Hall presided over by the Bishop of London. On Saturday I came to Woolwich and preached yesterday morning evening on our Aboriginal Missions on Thursday Island, a subject I was asked to take in view of the many letters of Rev. J. and Mrs. Jones who would be interested. The evening offertory was devoted to the needs of the Church in Thursday Island. I had the pleasure also of addressing a meeting of Mr. Jones' old friends and parishioners and to answer innumerable inquiries as to their welfare. Altogether I had a most pleasant time in Woolwich.

On Monday, May 18th, I spoke at a great meeting at Blackheath on behalf of the Pan-Anglican Thanksgiving Fund. The Town Hall was crowded to its utmost capacity with a most enthusiastic audience. On the following day I went to the Hampstead Parochial Boys' School and the embarrassing result, that I have been saluted by hosts of small boys who expect to know me on the strength of their having listened to my account of the aboriginal boy. On the day after I went to Ware, and the next day Miss White and I returned to Lambeth Palace for a night, as the Archbishop wanted to learn more about Carpentaria, in fact he sat up till midnight putting incessant questions about the native question, coloured labour, relations to the East and other matters which appeal to his statesmanlike mind.

On Monday, June 1st, I went up to London for the levee at which in company with the Bishop of Perth and the Archbishop of Brisbane I was presented. The scene was a most brilliant one, but the actual time occupied by the presentation in the Throne Room is so short that one has but little time to note anything. The chief thing that I noticed was that His Majesty is extraordinarily like his pictures, and the chief thing I felt was sympathy for him in having to make 1200 bows, and the reflection that he must be very pleased not to be an American President and have to stand up and shake hands with everybody. The Prince of Wales is inviting all the Pan-Anglican delegates to a garden party at Marlborough House, and the King and Queen have signified their intention of being present; a most unusual honour for the Congress.

BOB, THE ROPER RIVER PILOT.

Fulham Palace.

June 21st.—I must send a few lines as I can. The past week has been a busy time with three meetings a day to attend. I am a Vice-President of Section F, "The Anglican Communion," and therefore felt it right to restrict myself as far as possible to that subject. The meetings have been very well attended and most interesting, but the great thing has been the packed evening meetings in the Albert Hall where the greatest enthusiasm prevailed night after night. The level of speaking was extraordinarily high. The great discoverer in this way is a layman, Mr. Fraser, Principal of a College at Kandy. He speaks with quite extraordinary eloquence and earnestness. Bishop Montgomery also received a great ovation. Yesterday the Bishop motored us down to the King's great Garden Party at Windsor. The weather was lovely and the scene one of extraordinary interest and beauty. The King and Queen walked about among their guests, talking and shaking hands with all with the greatest friendliness and absence of ceremony. The King looks well and strong. On Thursday the Bishop of London gave a garden party to 5000 of the Congress delegates and visitors, and on next Thursday the Prince and Princess of Wales have invited all the Congress delegates (about 1000) to meet the King and Queen, so that festivities have been mingled with the solid work, which has been indeed hard and constant enough. The great thanksgiving service is next Wednesday in St. Paul's. Our total offering is about £80, which is, I confess, disappointingly small. In spite of our poverty in the diocese I had hoped we should have done more by at least half as much again.

The Pan-Anglican Congress has met with not unexpected, but complete and overwhelming success. No one who was present will ever forget the opening service in Westminster Abbey. I with others must confess to a feeling of disappointment when I heard that there was to be no procession, no robing, no display of the delegates from all quarters so uniquely gathered, but I was wrong—utterly wrong; the service was far better, far more impressive as it was. Long before the hour of noon the Abbey was completely filled, the bishops being seated in the choir in their ordinary dress. Shortly before the hour the Archbishop was escorted to his seat by the Dean, they only being in their robes. Exactly at noon the distant voices of the cantor and choir were heard slowly singing the fifty-first psalm as they advanced into the nave; every syllable was distinctly heard in every corner. I never heard anything more thrilling, anything that so much brought out the meaning of every word, anything more suitable to the mood in which the promoters desired the Congress to start its work. Then came the Litany with special suffrages, and then, after an anthem which was a prayer, the Dean mounted the pulpit and slowly and deliberately read the wonderful bidding prayer, which summed up in seven clauses all for which the Congress was working and praying. This was followed by a hymn to the Holy Spirit, and the Archbishop gave an ancient and beautiful benediction. Everyone felt that the right note had been struck—an attitude not of self-satisfaction or display, but of penitence and prayer. After the service I came on to Fulham Palace, where I am staying with the Bishop of London for the Congress week, in company with some twenty-five Bishops and delegates representing India, China, Ceylon, Canada, the United States, New Zealand, Japan, and India.

No one can fail to be charmed by the Bishop's wonderful personality and cheerfulness. In spite of his multifarious engagements he finds time to think of his guests.

The various sectional meetings are so scattered over London that one fails to realise their extent. The Albert Hall, the Church House, The Kensington Town Hall, the Holborn Town Hall, Caxton Hall, Sion College, and the Hoare Memorial Hall, have all been pressed into the service of the 5000 members and delegates, and the meetings are all crowded. At night there is a mass meeting at the Albert Hall. Last night it was crowded to its utmost capacity for the first meeting on "The Church and Social Questions." The Archbishop gave a most impressive inaugural address, and the other speakers held the huge assembly spell-bound. It was a wonderful and unforgettable sight, and specially interesting to me as recalling those great meetings in the Town Hall in Sydney eight years ago, which were really the germ of the greater gathering in London. The Archbishop rightly emphasised the fact that the gathering was unique, not only in the history of our Church, but of Christendom. Never before had been such a gathering of bishops, clergy, laymen, and lay-women from all parts of the world. To-day I have had to stay at home and write, as owing to some blunder arising from the conviction of all secretaries, &c., that the Bishop of North Queensland must be identical with the Bishop of Carpentaria, we were both asked to speak on the same subject, and at the last moment I have been asked to speak on another subject instead.

Magdalen College, Oxford.

July 1st.—I need not write of the concluding service of the Pan-Anglican Congress in St. Paul's as it has doubtless been fully described in the Press. I send herewith the "Times" report. Suffice to say that it was a worthy conclusion to a very wonderful time. The Congress has succeeded in impressing the imagination of London, not a very easy task, and the greatest interest has been shown in the proceedings. The service was probably the grandest that has ever been held in St. Paul's. I have only one criticism, and that is that the concluding Te Deum was too elaborate to express adequately the thanksgiving that was felt; a much simpler setting would have been more imposing and more adequate to the occasion. The Palmerston offering arrived just before the service, bringing up the total for the diocese to £87. The total of £338,000 was less than some of us hoped, but it must be remembered that great stress was laid on the fact that it was not desired to interfere with ordinary giving to existing funds, and also it must be remembered that the American Church practically did not share in the thank-offering. On the day after the service in St. Paul's I went down to Winchester for the pageant, a most deeply interesting performance, most instructive from a historical and ecclesiastical point of view. From Winchester I went on the same day to Rochester to take part in a great missionary festival there, preaching on Sunday on behalf of the diocese, and yesterday I came up to Oxford to stay with the Vice-Chancellor preparatory to taking my D.D. degree to-day, in company with the Archbishops of York, Toronto and Melbourne, the Bishops of Durham, Bristol, Ely, Winchester, Tokyo, Shanghai, Lahore, and Bishop Montgomery. Oxford is looking marvellously beautiful and it was delightful to see old friends and old haunts after an absence of so many long years.

The ceremony was an imposing one and Dr. Ince, the aged Regius Professor made an appropriate Latin speech on presenting each candidate, and caused some amusement by plaintively inquiring "Ubi est Carpentaria?" The Vice-Chancellor's address ran as follows:—

To the Bishop of Carpentaria.

Pater admodum Reverende, qui nomine Oriensibus et Magdalenensibus noto, omnibus naturae verique auctoribus, ipse auctor non sordidus, commendatus es, viator intrepide, vates dulcis, denique fuscus gregis tui Pastor benignissime, Ego, &c.

July 5th.—I have only time for a few hurried lines. Yest rday, on July 4th, an interesting date, the English, Colonial and American Bishops all met at luncheon in the hall of St. Augustine College Canterbury. I went down the previous night and stayed with the Warden, who was made deacon with me in 1883.

In the afternoon the reception was held in the form of a very beautiful service in the Cathedral. The Archbishop of Canterbury sat in front of the altar in St. Augustine's chair, and the 250 bishops were seated on the steps and stalls about him. He gave a very powerful address, recalling the scenes that the Cathedral had witnessed—Becket's murder, the funeral of the Black Prince, the visit of the Queen Elizabeth and Parker, but never a gathering so widely representative, or at a more critical moment of the world's thought, than the present. Then the bishops rose and said the Nicene Creed, a never to be forgotten experience. Then this morning the bishops met again in Westminster Abbey to receive the Holy Communion together, after a sermon from the Dean weighty in matter and pathetic in its appeal for Reunion with our separated fellow countrymen. It was again a wonderful occasion, solemn in its import. To-morrow the Conference begins.

Thursday Island Parish Notes.

CHILDREN'S FANCY DRESS EVENING.

The children's fancy dress evening, organized and carried to a most successful issue by Mrs. and Miss Wassell, was held on August 23th. The School of Arts was packed to its utmost capacity. There were many competitions for children and adults, including the following: Children—best copy book, best dressed doll, best printing of words pearl shell, best letter describing an earthquake, best home exercise, best map of Queensland, best specimen darning, best original drawing of a goat. All comers—bread, scones, cakes, (sponge, pound, fancy), collection of fancy work, etc., etc. A prize was also given for the parent or parents with the largest family present. Four prizes were given for fancy dresses. The fancy dresses and the work done on many of the competitions were excellent. A full list of prize winners will be found in the October issue of the "Parish Gazette."

The children had a most pleasant evening. All seem to enjoy themselves thoroughly from the little ones who could just toddle across the hall to the big ones who were making the most of their last children's party.

The nett proceeds amounted to the large sum of £26, which has been handed over to the Churchwardens.

The whole affair was worked up in a fortnight. In thanking Miss Wassell for her great assistance may we also congratulate her on the success of the undertaking!

TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

That the meetings of the Temperance Society are gaining in public favour is evinced by the increased attendance at the monthly gatherings and on the roll of membership. The meeting on August 5th was an exceptionally interesting one. Mrs. J. Jones gave a thoughtful and inspiring address on that much talked of but little understood subject "The Simple Life." Milton, Wordsworth, Gordon were shown to be, in their grand simplicity, true exponents of the simple as opposed to the vain-glorious life.

The address was followed by a very earnest appeal for Temperance by the Rev. J. G. F. Huthnance, head of the Roper River Mission. The audience appreciated the privilege of hearing Mr. Huthnance, whose stay on the Island was a very brief one.

SOUTH SEA SCHOOL.

The numbers at the classes continue to be most encouraging. Among the most regular attendants during this year have been some half-caste girls formerly of Mapoon and some Island girls—all these girls had previous to coming to the Island been receiving regular religious instruction, and we are glad that the South Sea school affords a suitable means of carrying on that instruction. Some of the "Boys" are looking forward to Baptism and Confirmation next year.

WHITSUNTIDE.

The Festival of the Holy Spirit was duly honoured on June 7th. The decorations were admirable. The Cathedral has rarely appeared to better advantage, and visitors from passing steamers on Whitmonday and Tuesday expressed themselves in warm praise of the church and the evident care bestowed upon it. We thank all the decorators for their work. It is encouraging to note that our communicants are learning to realize their privilege and duty of joining in the Holy Eucharist on Whitsunday. There were good attendances at 6.30, 7.30 and 10 a.m., and the number of communicants was double that of last year.

THE MOTHERS' UNION.

We are pleased to record that a group of Thursday Island women interested in the welfare of the home has linked itself on to the Mothers' Union.

The Union is a Church organisation admitting women of all denominations and all classes as members. Lady Chelmsford is president of the Union in Queensland. She says in writing to Lady Arbuthnot that she is so pleased to hear of the new branch being formed here and further, she asks mothers not to decide hurriedly for or against the Mothers' Union but to read some of the books recommended and to find out the real objects of the Union.

The first meeting was held on June 8th when addresses were given by Lady Arbuthnot and Mrs. J. Jones.

Mrs. Milman was appointed to be president and Mrs. Curtis secretary of the branch.

Meetings will be held on the fourth Thursday of each month at 8.30 p.m., and there will be an evening service in the church once in three months.

The first service was held in the Cathedral on Friday, 19th June, and was well attended. The Sub-dean preached, taking as his text "In her tongue is the law of kindness."

VARIETY ENTERTAINMENT.

The concert held in the School of Arts (Victoria Memorial Institute) on Thursday, June 25th, was an unqualified success. It was worked up in a very short time and was characterised by a freshness that is not always easy to attain on our little island. We thank Mrs. Milman who promoted the concert and Lady Arbuthnot, Mrs. Mackenzie, Miss M. Milman, Mr. W. M. Hayne, and Mr. B. A. G. Watts, who worked so hard in preparing the various items. We desire to thank all who promoted or assisted in the entertainment which results in quite £17 being added in Church funds.

Normanton.

During the month of July Normanton was practically one great hospital, almost every individual having been seized with influenza. There were also a couple of cases of pneumonia, but we are pleased to report that no deaths resulted from either complaint. Fortunately, the worst of the epidemic did not come until after the Governor's visit, in the first week of July, so that his stay was in no way impaired by sickness or ill-health.

Carnival week at Normanton is a recognized annual festival. This year it was the week immediately after the Governor's visit, and, notwithstanding the present depressed state of finance, all Normanton was en fête. The annual concert, given by St. Peter's Church this week, was a grand success, both as a concert and financially. The nett proceeds amounted to £16 10s. The Rector of Croydon paid us a visit for the carnival, and Mrs. Mirrlees kindly assisted our concert with a piano-forte selection.

We regret having to report the resignation of Mr. R. Sherrin as People's Warden and desire to express our appreciation of his work.

During the quarter we had the great pleasure of uniting our old organist, Miss Martha Thorne, in the bonds of Holy Matrimony to Mr. Ernest Sampson, of the Railway Department. After the marriage Mr. and Mrs. Sampson left by the Maranoa for a three-months' holiday in the South. St. Peter's Church extends them a hearty wish for prosperity and happiness in the future, and will look forward with pleasure to their return.

On the 18th August, Mrs. Creffield, one of the oldest residents in the Gulf, quietly passed away. For some time she had been ailing and for a month previous to her death it was apparent that the end must soon come. She was 73 years of age, and for the past 42 years has resided with her husband in the Gulf. At the time of her death they had been 51 years married.

The exodus from Normanton still continues. During the quarter we have lost three families of good churchpeople. Miss McLain we miss very much, both as a collector and Sunday School teacher. On the other hand, however, we are pleased to record the return of Mrs. and the Misses Dalby to the Parish. We have also gained two good churchpeople in the persons of the new postmaster and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Booth. We trust that our mutual labours may be long and happy.

The fund, started some short time ago, for the lining of the Church and the erection of a pulpit, is slowly increasing. It now shows a balance of £4 10s. About £50 will be required to effect the necessary improvements.

Croydon Parish Notes.

The main items of interest during the past quarter both occurred at practically the same time, at the beginning of July—the visit of H.E. the Governor, and the annual Sunday School picnic.

The visit of the Vice-regal Party caused quite a pleasant excitement in the otherwise dullness of the ordinary routine of everyday life in this out of the way corner of Queensland. What with the smoke concert and the hospital ball Croydon was quite lively for the two days of the visit.

The Sunday School picnic was held on Thursday, 2nd July, the day His Excellency left for Normanton. We thought at one time that we should have to change the day on this account for fear our grown-up friends would be too tired after the somewhat late hours of the ball to rally to our help the next morning; but the results of the day proved our fears groundless. Some, indeed, have said that there has hardly ever been such a successful Sunday School picnic in the annals of the Church in Croydon. Joint meetings of Sunday School teachers connected with both churches, St. Margaret's and St. John's, together with, from the latter, a committee of parents, were held beforehand to make arrangements, which proved highly successful.

Shortly before 7 a.m. on the appointed day the special train which was to take the Vice-regal party to Normanton left for Golden Gate and brought back the St. John's contingent of children, parents, and friends. After those had been kindly supplied with tea and bread and butter by Mrs. Bechtel at her house, the children of both Sunday Schools assembled outside St. Margaret's Church, and, with their banners, marched as one body—a goodly array—straight to Jansen's well. The committee, under the superintendence of Mrs. Maslen, had hard work cutting up and preparing for the large assembly, but their efforts were rewarded in there being ample provisions for all. During the day various competitions and races of all sorts were carried through and a most enjoyable day was brought to a close about 5.30 p.m. The Golden Gate Contingent leaving by train at 6 p.m. Our heartfelt thanks are due to all our kind friends who in any way contributed to the success of the picnic, to those who, by their gifts of money or goods, made it possible for us to feed the assembly and give prizes to the children, and particularly to committees who worked so hard beforehand and on the day itself, as also to Mr. Stephens, our kind station master, who took such trouble over the arrangements which were so largely conducive to the day's success.

The depression which has so long been felt on this goldfield still continues, though there are great hopes that ere long the tide may turn, but for the present the depression is acute, and during the year past many of our friends have left or are leaving. From one cause and another over a dozen entire families belonging to our Church have left the neighbourhood since January, to say nothing of other individual members. We feel their loss greatly in many ways, in fact all our parochial organizations have suffered to some extent. Shortly before Easter the Rector's Warden, Mr. A. A. Staines was transferred; his loss was great, as Mr. Staines during the time he was with us had always thrown himself whole-heartedly into the work of the Church. Now the Rector has again lost his warden appointed at Easter, in the person of Mr. H. Bechtel. We hardly know what to say about our loss in this respect for both Mr. and Mrs. Bechtel have always been so closely identified with the Church in Croydon for the past eleven years, that we can hardly think of the Church without them and their kindly assistance in all that was done for the good of the Church. Their place in every way will be hard to fill. For ourselves we can only feel most deeply grateful for all they have been and have done in the past, and our best wishes for success in their new home go with them.

The choir has felt the loss of members too, but others have rallied to its aid and now it is rather larger than it was at the beginning of year. We all owe a debt of gratitude to the choir for their increasing loyalty, and for the energetic way in which they have worked, making it possible to beautify our worship to Almighty God, not only in leading the congregation in our praises due to Him, but by being able occasionally to have anthems and solos.

The Sunday schools have fared worse since the beginning of the year, for we have lost in one way or another from St. Margaret's no less than six of our teachers, and, at the time of writing (end of August) fear that we may lose two more. Some of the gaps have been filled, but we are still short-handed, and it is becoming increasingly difficult to get those who are willing and able to give up their Sunday afternoons for this most important work for God. All thanks are due to those who are still able to help us and who go manfully on in spite of the difficulties of having to take two or three classes together.

Our heartfelt thanks are also due to our lady collectors in their difficult work, for perhaps it is here that the loss is most felt. With a very much dwindling population the possibility of raising the necessary funds becomes more remote, and here too the acute depression is felt in another way, for many of those who are left and who would gladly give to the support of their church are quite incapable of doing so. Those who can, are, for the most part, nobly taking their share of burden.

In conclusion, as this is the last issue for the year, we would thank all who, by their help in various ways are working together for the furtherance of God's work in this portion of His Great Vineyard.

We beg to sympathize with the Rector of Palmerston on his recent serious illness, and rejoice to know he is now regaining health.

The Tilers' Union of Maitland, N.S.W., have sent a splendid assortment of seeds for the use of the Trubanam Mission Station. May the little husbandmen reap a rich harvest from their seeds of thoughtful kindness.

Volume VIII.—No. 32. Thursday Island, October 1, 1908

The Roper River Mission.

It was a pleasure to us on Thursday Island to see something of the band of workers for the new Mission Station on the far-away Roper River. They arrived by the Maranoa on Tuesday August 4th and left by the Francis Pritt the following Saturday. There was a good deal of business to get through in that limited interval, goods had to be transhipped to the Francis Pritt or stored for the next voyage, there were Customs formalities to attend to, extra equipment to be ordered and all sorts of final arrangements made before the start across the lonely Gulf. It was difficult therefore to really get to know the missionaries but the fact of having met them will give us all a friendly personal interest in their difficult and brave task.

On the day of their arrival an informal welcome was tendered them in the Parish Institute. The Administrator of the Diocese, the Rev. J. Jones, was in the chair, supported by the Government Resident, Mr. Milman, and Mr. Sullivan, member of the Parochial Council. A large and interested audience listened to the earnest addresses of the Rev. F. Huthnance and his staff, which includes, besides the two white members, Messrs. Joynt and Sharp, James Noble an aboriginal and his wife Angelina, and Horace, also an aboriginal; these three were trained at Yarrabah. James and Angelina formed part of the first expedition undertaken by our Bishop to the Mitchell River to found the present Mission Station at Trubanaman. James made an eloquent appeal in excellent English on behalf of the natives.

The following evening we had again the privilege of hearing Mr. Huthnance speak at a temperance meeting, and on Thursday a very pleasant evening was given by Mrs. George Brett, who invited Church workers to meet the missionary party. On Saturday morning early a farewell celebration of the Holy Communion was held in the Cathedral which was attended by the missionaries and crew of the Francis Pritt. At 10 a.m. all embarked, and after a little delay the Francis Pritt got under weigh and was soon gliding down the channel. Unfortunately the wind dropped and they were forced to anchor off Black Rock until the tide turned, but no doubt they would spend the enforced period of calm in getting the crowded decks and cabin into something like order. The party were accompanied by Mr. Strange, of the Thursday Island P.O., who has pluckily undertaken the trip to the Roper, and from whom we hope to learn particulars of the initial work which will have the increased value of coming from an actual eye-witness. Mr. Williams returned to Trubanaman the same trip, so the Roper River expedition will have at least two welcome interludes in their weary and uncomfortable journey. They called at Mapoon, the Presbyterian Mission Station on the Batavia River, as we learned from a Mapoon cutter, and would then run down the coast to Trubanaman land Mr. Williams and have a look at that station. Then Westward Ho! for Groote Eylandt and the Roper. They are in God's hands, and to Him we confidently commend them and their work.

Trubanaman.

The Staff at Trubanaman beg to thank the following ladies and gentlemen most sincerely for gifts received:—

Mrs. Brett, Mrs. Place (Toowoomba), The Rev. N. Hey, a Friend in Sydney, Mrs. Turnbull, Mrs. Hayne, Mrs. Westcott, Miss Bebrouth, Mr. K. O. Mackenzie, Mrs. K. O. Mackenzie, the G.F.S. Girls of Thursday Island, Miss Nash, the Matron of the Torres Strait Hospital, Mrs. McKee, Mrs. Milman, Mr. Hodel, Mr. Middleton. Through Mrs. McKee two well-made patchwork tea-towels were received from Esther.

All the gifts were well selected and most useful, and will add greatly to the comfort of the Mission Station. The donors can scarcely realize how much their kind thought means to the lonely workers at Trubanaman.

St. Paul's Mission Station, Moa Island, Torres Straits.

St. Paul's Mission at Moa is a new centre of work in the Diocese of Carpentaria. Its aim is to form a home for South Sea Islanders who, for various reasons, are not deported from Queensland.

The Government of Queensland have granted the Bishop of Carpentaria facilities for undertaking this work and it is quite reasonable to suppose that with wise training and forethought the Mission should develop into a highly organized community, self-supporting and skilled in agriculture, fisheries and manual work. It was my privilege to visit the Mission in August and to see the progress made in a few months under the guiding hands of Deaconess Buchanan, who has been in charge of the mission since its inception in April of this year. I left Thursday Island before dawn in the little Government yawl Mystic. As we threaded our way amongst the pearling luggers the sun rose and we could see the Japanese divers at their toilets or having their early cup of coffee and cigarette, and the Papuan crews squatting on the decks among coils of diving pipes looking like bronze statues.

We were soon out on a blue sunny sea racing along with a fair wind, past island after island till at noon we were off the triangular hill on Naghir, Mount Ernest, and saw the peak of Moa to the north across a long line of reef on which the white breakers thundered and foamed. Skilfully steered we sailed through an opening in the reef and reached safe anchorage. The mission station lies to the S.E. of the island under the Great Peak; to the N.W. is the native village and the question of boundaries and gardens will shortly have to be carefully considered. A river rises at the foot of the Peak and flows N.W., forming a probably convenient natural boundary about midway through the island which extends, roughly speaking 12 miles E. and W. by 7 miles N. and S.

St. Paul's looks rather bare and exposed at present but when the cocoanut palms which are planted in regular lines along the sandy streets have grown up they will improve the appearance of the village wonderfully and provide shelter against the fierce S.E. winds.

The houses are built on piles and are made of grass interwoven in saplings; to quote Deaconess Buchanan they look like huge haystacks.

The furniture consists of cabbage-tree mats woven by the women, and a few cooking utensils. In one house I saw a sewing machine.

Deaconess Buchanan has a fair-sized house which serves as school, hospital and chapel, with a bedroom and store-room partitioned off and a detached kitchen.

She is faithfully attended by Fanny Bann, wife of her Fijian aide-de-camp Joe, who is her right hand in all undertakings. I was present at afternoon school which some twenty children attended, sitting in rows on the matting. They sang and recited and answered questions on general topics well and brightly. They are being taught only what will be of practical value to them and the background of all their work is religious teaching according to our Church. School equipment of all sorts is much needed and also a suitable school-building.

It is extremely difficult to teach the children about things which have never entered into their horizon before. The limited ideas which they possess are called forth to couple new ones on with amusing results at times.

For instance Mr. Milman, the Government Resident on, Thursday Island, stands to them as Pontius Pilate. Pilate was a Governor, Governor all-same Mr. Milman therefore Pontius Pilate-Mr. Milman. "Who is the stranger within your gates?" "Allsame her," with dramatic pointings at me, newly landed from the unknown.

Not to bear false witness against your neighbour runs in the vernacular "no good spin yarns along 'nother fella." Pictures are almost the only means of helping the situation.

It is necessary to teach the children the value of money, though it is scarcely ever seen on the island, for they will have trading relations with Thursday Island as time goes on. Already the settlement possess a cutter which brings in their produce and returns with calico, sugar, etc.

Deaconess Buchanan has with her a few pieces of money, unfortunately no pennies, and the half-pennies puzzle the children and grown-ups too dreadfully. Is it not possible to get the coins of the realm in cardboard for kindergarten purposes? If so, a few boxes would be most useful at Moa.

After school, the children took me for a walk, first reporting themselves at their homes in case they were wanted by their parents. In this, as in every detail I admired the wise care of the Deaconess, whose training follows the children from school to home, nor does it stop with the children as I shall show later.

Accompanied by a frisking, light-hearted party of little boys and girls, the former in tattered lava-lavas, the latter in print overalls we set forth to visit the cemetery, a quiet little resting-place between blue sea and frowning peak, containing three graves, that of a youth named Alea aged 19, of his infant son, and of the wife of one of the head men of the village.

Then we struck into the bush to visit the gardens. I noticed the innate courtesy of the children, who ran before to remove every stone or branch from my path. On the trees overhead were clumps of glorious orchids, some with brown blooms eight or ten inches long, others creamy and some of delicate mauve and white. The boys swarmed up the trees and got me some exquisite specimens.

We passed some huge mounds ten to fifteen feet high, nests of the scrub turkey. The gardens are planted with yams, taros, chilis, pumpkins, melons, etc., and bananas seem to thrive especially well. Cassava, rosella, mango, etc., ought to grow well in the rich volcanic soil.

We returned through the village and had a chat with the different householders. Many had little gifts to offer, a string of shells or berries, a mat, a pair of nautilus shells, a piece of coral.

In the evening all assembled for prayers after which the women and babies went home and the men stayed for classes, one taken by the Deaconess and one—in preparation for Baptism—by Joe Bann.

After the classes the head-men stayed to discuss various matters with the Deaconess, whose long day of teaching, organizing, directing and nursing stretches out far beyond the lawful eight hours.

The affairs of the community are in the hands of two councillors and two policemen, responsible to the Government Resident on Thursday Island.

Their extremely varied duties have sometimes a suspicion of a touch of comic opera. Every Friday, according to a notice put up in native dialect in the village, the women have to clean their houses. On Saturdays the Councillors inspect and report any woman whose work is not satisfactory.

One of the head-men is told off to drop in to the houses unexpectedly to see that the women have carefully and punctually prepared their husbands' meals.

"Sonny," to whom this duty is apportioned, is a tall commanding looking man who does his work thoroughly. He lifts the lid of the pot and tries the taro or pumpkin with a stick to see that all is as it should be. Sometimes the bolder women play a trick on Sonny and secrete themselves with the cooked meal. As the inquisitor prepares to put down a bad mark they spring out on him and he retires discomfited.

Another municipal duty is to see that the children go down to the sea daily for their bath.

There is no rule about washing clothes because the wind is often so fierce that there is no possibility of hanging things out until it abates a little.

If a woman has three bad marks against her name she is obliged to work at weeding the village grounds for a certain length of time.

Classes are held for women on two afternoons a week. They are expected to work at mat-making in their own homes at the rate of at least one mat a month. Deaconess Buchanan expects to have a shipment of mats ready for sale on Thursday Island about October, and hopes that when the women see the tangible result of their industry in the form of calico (a generic name for all print), sugar, etc., they will be led to work more willingly. A good deal of grumbling goes on over the long hot walks to collect the cabbage palm fibre—the plaiting of the mat takes comparatively little time.

It is very necessary to enforce strict laws about the calling in of boats. Japanese and Malay crews are not allowed to sleep ashore and no girl is allowed out after evening prayers.

Writing is a very weak attempt to bring the needs of such a mission under the notice of those who, before God, are responsible for their weaker brethren.

If my readers could but see the almost ideal polity of this little community in its exquisite setting of tropical sea and land, if they only knew the dignified, honourable, yet childishly simple South Sea boy and his fervent vivid Faith which puts our colder natures to shame often and often, they would realize the privilege of being allowed to help on a work which is of direct benefit to a deserving race and of more than indirect advantage to the State.

There are at present about 70 persons at St. Paul's, and the settlement is likely to increase largely. All information may be obtained from the Vicar, Thursday Island, who will also forward letters or parcels addressed to Deaconess Buchanan.

Impressions of a Visitor.

S.S. Maranoa,
3rd July, 1908.

Dear Editor,

I do not like to end my stay at Thursday Island without trying to express the deep interest I have felt in all I have seen and heard in that beautiful part of Australia. The little granite island among the coral reefs is indeed a centre of living and growing work. The Whitsunday gift of tongues has not ceased until it has spread to this far-away place, the sound of the command uttered by our risen Lord to teach His name to all nations is being amply fulfilled here. I had the great privilege of teaching a Sunday class of South Sea Islanders for several Sundays and of witnessing their reverent behaviour and knowledge of the Bible, it was also deeply interesting to form part of a congregation in the Quetta Memorial Cathedral composed of members of the Anglican and Presbyterian and other bodies, and Japanese and South Sea Island natives, and to go after evening service to a Japanese class taught by Miss Robson to which an address given by the Vicar was interpreted by the Japanese Consul. I listened to the hymn "Abide with me" sung in Japanese and felt the fulfilment of that promise "And lo! I am with you always, even to the end of the world." I heard much of the Mitchell River and Roper River Missions under the Bishop of Carpentaria's charge, where bands of devoted men are preaching the Gospel to the aborigines. In the case of the Roper River I know that the work is only now beginning to take definite form, and that for many years the work of civilising fierce and warlike tribes must proceed with the utmost care and discretion, to form a basis for future spiritual effort. Of the new St. Paul's Mission Station just opened, on the Island of Moa I can speak with more special knowledge, as I had the pleasure of visiting the Island and seeing the work begun there by Deaconess Florence Buchanan. When I arrived inside the coral reef at Moa after a tossing in the small steamer "Champion" I found Miss Buchanan teaching a class of native children who had already learned to sing a simple hymn in the few weeks the Mission School had been open. Classes for adults were also held daily and lantern services once a week. The men were cultivating fruit and vegetable gardens, the women were being taught cleanliness and order, and encouraged to make mats for sale. When a boat runs at regular intervals between Moa and Thursday Island, a market will be obtained for the produce of the former island. But all this work in Thursday Island itself, the large Sunday School for white and coloured children, the classes for Japanese, Chinese, and South Sea Islanders, the daily services in the Cathedral, Temperance work, G.F.S. and Mothers' Union Meetings, besides the distant Mission Stations already mentioned, needs outside help if it is to be carried on in the same efficient manner. More workers for the Mission field, more money for the heavy expenses already incurred are urgently needed. There are but a handful of earnest men and women fighting the battle of the Church of Christ against apathy, ignorance and superstition. The prayers of the faithful will encourage and sustain them. Surely the outcome of the great Pan-Anglican Congress will be to stir up still greater interest in missionary work, and to arouse a deeper sense of our individual responsibility as Christians.

I am, dear sir,
Yours faithfully,
CONSTANCE ARBUTHNOT.

Letter to the Girls.

My dear Girls—

Not very long ago at home, I saw a picture by an artist who teaches us many lessons in a very beautiful way. This was a very striking canvas, I forget what it was called; but I'll try to describe it to you shortly. A huge beautiful glittering thing like a large ball, seemed rolling along; and it was followed by crowds of people of all sorts, big and little, high and low chasing along. Some with eager happy faces, others—who had been long in the chase after this beautiful elusive thing, bore the marks of strain and unrest on their faces. Some seemed to come very near; but none ever touched it. Now, as you came nearer to the picture and looked—this glittering thing, so eagerly painfully sought for—was a huge soap-bubble, shining with all the beautiful rainbow light a soap-bubble has, and you stood and wondered over the foolishness of that panting crowd, and you longed to point out to them, that even if they could come up to this beautiful shining thing and touch it—it was only a bubble and would break.

Yes, we could see the foolishness of it all on a picture, yet it is exactly what so many of us do, especially when we are in the very beautiful time of youth and girlhood; life just opening up before us with all its wonders—all its mysteries which we do not understand, and all around us looks so fair, we want to grasp everything at once and hardly know where to go.

Dear girls, because we love and admire your girlhood, we—who have gone further on life's journey, who have seen—mayhap experienced the bitter ending of some of the devious roads that looked so fair at first, want with all our hearts to protect your girlhood and keep it pure and beautiful.

We fully realise how difficult it is for you to quite believe us when we say, the way you are going is a wrong way and will end in trouble.

Many guides come to us when we are—as one of the poet's sings—

“Standing with reluctant feet—
Where womanhood and childhood meet.”

All these guides look fair and attractive, you can't believe that they are going to lead you into anything more than a little fun.

There is one of these (if I may so call them) false guides, who looks so fair and attractive outwardly; and young eyes do not see the horrible loathsomeness beneath the thin veneer of fairness, he is one of the cleverest and most insidious ministers of the King of all Evil—and he leads body and soul straight down into depths of hopeless darkness—his name is Impurity.

Dear girls, take care of his very first whisper, he is so subtle, so clever, he will try to persuade you that your first aversion to him was quite wrong, he means you no harm, and if you give in—step by step he will lead you along, till at last he has made your beautiful girlhood, body and soul, into a thing of horrible-ness and dreadful disease.

What are we to do you ask? How are we to know? Every woman has her instincts. Don't go with anyone who makes jokes that make you shrink. Then, I am sorry to say, there are books and articles written which no pure-minded man or woman could read, they are only fit for burning; there are lots of beautiful things to read.

Do believe us, dear girls, when we, who know more of life, tell you that to those who play with the mud of earth, sooner or later will come a day of terrible reckoning, when—they will know to their horror—it is too late.

Keep your girlhood and womanhood pure and noble, so that people seeing you, will thank God that you live, and will feel lifted into a purer cleaner atmosphere by your very presence, and you yourselves will know the joy and happiness of “the pure in heart”

Georgetown.

To many readers of the “Carpentarian” information about Georgetown district will be new, and though there is nothing of remarkable interest we trust it will not fail to elicit sympathy showing itself in earnest prayer for the work of God here, and specially for the people who are apart from God and yet are careless of the results of that separation. The district is a large one. Settlements 150 miles apart are included in it, and perhaps it will be wise to follow the minister in his itinerating and see, as far as possible, the conditions of life in this part of the bush, and also the items which go to make up a minister's life and work.

Georgetown—though it has been a settlement for nearly 40 years—has very little to show for its age in the way of municipal or civil advancement. And ecclesiastically it has practically nothing. No house of God exists to show the religion of the inhabitants or to bear its constant witness to God's claim upon and love for the dwellers in this place.

100 miles south from Georgetown and lying at the S.E. angle of this diocese, is Gilberton, an old alluvial gold field. Near to it are Percyville, M'Hogan and Ortona, small settlements on the site of formerly flourishing gold fields, save Ortona, which is a copper mine being now worked. No visit could be paid to this portion of the district since October 1906, so an effort was made immediately after Easter. The wet season prevented a visit in February because three rather awkward rivers lie across the track to reach Gilberton, and when the rains had ceased it was very near to Easter, hence the delay. The trip was made in a sulky, to enable one to carry a magic lantern. Charleston was the first stopping place, 25 miles from Georgetown. A gold mine and quartz battery keep a number of men working here. Alas! Sunday School only can be held when the clergy come, and the children have not much interest. At night one man, three ladies, and one boy comprised the attendance at service. On the Monday Big Reef was reached, 6 miles further on; three families live here, and a few men besides. These places are in easy reach of town and are visited rather frequently; but beyond Big Reef, which is on the edge of a range overlooking the Robertson Valley, there is a journey of over 50 miles to Percyville. The roads we knew were rough—former visits on horseback had shown us that—but only in a vehicle can one understand just how rough they really are. There is no regular traffic along now, so there is no warrant for the Council repairing the roads. Having left Tweedside where five men are living, mining and cyaniding, we had to travel up the course of a small creek constantly, crossing and recrossing it, to the divide which carries one over onto the Robertson fall, and the first introduction thereto is a very steep, though low, hill down which the sulky slides by the aid of a tree tied behind. Even then the mare has a bad time of it. Reaching the foot of the hill we find progress necessary along the dry bed of a creek. Alas! for the sulky when it has to bump unceasingly for a-quarter mile along over huge boulders. We must here remark that all creeks are now quite dry save for a few water-holes at odd places along their course, and even the rivers have not all got water visible above the sand. The sulky and mare at length left the creek bed and after a very rough track up hill and down dale reached the Robertson River. A cattle grazier has a house 8 miles above the crossing, but it was too far to go, besides, we knew he was away from home. From the Robertson River we had 9 miles to go to Oakey—we were warned that the road was “the worst in Queensland” but were very agreeably disappointed. The mare doubtless thought it was rough enough for any one. Got to Oakey at dark and had to camp out and alone. Formerly a large township existed here, but now not a soul remains. No water can be found save 1 mile below the crossing and 3 miles above, so the mare had to do without and the driver exist on a cupful from the waterbag.

It was not a pleasant night, being dark and cold. Next morn up at daylight and on along very good road to the Percy Range. To get on top demands a very steep climb for horse and sulky. And to carry one's bag up first to look at the track was toil enough for half-a day. The “jump up” is not long but fairly steep, and all the wheelruts are so washed out with the rains, it was awkward to find a fit place to get along. Halfway up we enjoyed a spell and also a drink at a spring there. Never seemed water so delicious. After a rest we dragged our weary way along miles of sand, then down a stony incline to a creek bed, and after another rough incline and decline we were very glad to reach Percyville. It had been intended to first visit Robin Hood—a cattle grazier's home—but the road turn off was missed. Four families and the Chinese store comprise Percyville. Visited round, promising a lantern on our return. Next day, over comparatively good roads on the whole, to M'Hogan. Here one man's household and that of his married daughter are all that are left from a formerly flourishing gold field. Dare we confess it? M'Hogan dwells sweetly in memory from delicious mandarins and oranges of which a glorious feast was enjoyed. On next day to Gilberton. But what a deserted place. Now only five miners are left of the scores there before. All have gone off to the new Oaks Rush—of which we hope to tell later on—and even with hotel, store and a grazier's family, only sixteen or so were there. Sunday, generally a day of disappointment in these parts, was worse than usual, and the lantern service was postponed till Monday night. A few more came then and saw pictures of the life of our Lord. At one time we feared the audience was asleep, so quiet were they, but no! It was reverent attention to picture and message. To many there the whole was so amazingly new. Can we realize the fact that people—one was 26 years old, others younger—are utterly ignorant of the, to us, everyday facts of our Lord's earthly life? And how can they learn much of such new stories in an occasional hearing?

[We regret that space forbids our printing the whole account of Mr. Hall's parochial visiting on this trip to Gilberton. There is enough, however, to show the hard life of the bush parson in tropical Queensland, and the great opportunities awaiting the Church among our neglected brothers and sisters. May God stir us up to greater efforts on their behalf.—Ed.]

It is pleasant to know how a young girl in Victoria is helping the Mission work at Trubanaman. She writes:—“I wanted so much to have a box for the aborigines and did not know how I could, because I have to stay at home. Mother is not strong and I am the eldest of eight. So I thought if mother would let me do the shirts and collars instead of the laundry and pay me, that I could have a box. After a little begging she allowed me, so now the laundry money goes into the box. It is not a lot, because we do not have many, but I am thankful that I can give a little.”

From Sydney the grave illness of the Venerable Archdeacon Dixon is reported. As secretary to the A.B.M. the Archdeacon was constantly in touch with the missionary work of this diocese. He is now laying down his armour for the rest of the faithful soldier.

THE DIOCESE.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east, by the Northern Territory on the west, and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19deg. 30min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east par. 144 and thence N. to lat. S. 16deg. 40min., and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory of South Australia, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 sq. miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 16,500 whites, 7,000 Japanese, Chinese and other aliens, and 35,000 aborigines. The white population is chiefly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre N. of Cape York.

FINANCE.

The Diocese has no endowment beyond the Bishop's income of £300 per annum.

MISSIONS.

Missions are carried on among the Japanese at Thursday Island, among the S. Sea Islanders at Thursday Island and Mosman, and among the aborigines on the Mitchell Riv. r.

SPECIAL OFFERTORIES.

On Easter Day the offertories are given to the Clergymen of the Parish, and on Good Friday to the Australian Board of Missions.

BUILDING REGULATIONS.

Plans for the building or alteration of Churches, Church Rooms, and Rectories must be submitted to the Bishop for approval before any contract is entered into, but such approval does not imply any Diocesan responsibility for the cost of the same.

No alteration may be made in any consecrated building without a faculty from the Bishop.

FROM MARRIAGE REGULATIONS.

2. No marriage may be celebrated otherwise than by banns or by Episcopal license.

4. No Surrogate may issue a license for, or any clergyman celebrate the marriage of, any divorced person whatsoever without reference to the Bishop, and permission obtained from him.

5. No marriage may be celebrated otherwise than in a Church or accustomed place of public worship except by express permission of the Bishop; provided that in urgent cases, founded on special circumstances, when reference to the Bishop is practically impossible, the clergyman shall act on his discretion, and forthwith report the circumstances to the Bishop.

7. The authorized fee for the Bishop's license is £3 3s. The Surrogate is authorised to retain for his own use this fee, with the exception of 10s. 6d., which is payable to the Church Management Fund. Where only £2 2s. or a smaller sum is paid, the Surrogate is authorised to retain three-fourths of the fee paid.

Bishop's Diary.

Saturday August 21st. Arrived at the Albert Bar by s.s. Warrego at daylight, and left in the tender about 2 p.m. As we entered the river we noticed a flock of twenty to thirty black swans, the first I ever saw in the North, also hundreds of small ducks on the shallow flats. We had to anchor, and spent an uncomfortable night on the deck of the Waterlily and reached Burketown about 1 p.m. on Sunday, Mr. A. having kindly driven down to the Truganinni landing to meet me. I found not only that Burketown had diminished in size, several houses having been destroyed in a cyclone and not rebuilt, and in population, but also that a large number of the people were away at the annual Gregory Downs picnic races, the great event of the season. I found the Divisional Hall all prepared for service and the congregation made up in heartiness for what it lacked in numbers.

Monday, August 22nd. Finding that so many of my flock were absent I determined to pursue them to Gregory Downs about 80 miles distant, and leave to-morrow morning by the mail buggy. I spent the day in visiting at Burketown, and preparing for my journey. To-morrow is the ninth anniversary of my consecration, in how many different places and under what widely differing circumstances have I spent these anniversaries, but never, I think, one of these at home.

Thursday, August 24th. I left Burketown by the Camoweal mail buggy about 9 a.m. We travelled all day over flat uninteresting country following the course of a stream called the "Brook," a branch of the Gregory. We camped on a little creek at night, the weather beautiful but the mosquitoes extraordinarily vicious, and as I had no net it was long before I got to sleep. Next day the same country with little or no settlement. Where we camped for dinner I met two women and some children and arranged to baptise two on my way back. The others had been baptised by Rev. W. M. Wilkinson in his journey through these parts some years ago. We reached the Gregory Downs Hotel about 5 p.m., and here I found all the countryside assembled for the races which were just ending; and I met a number of old friends from all parts of the district. The evening was spent in a most quiet and orderly dance, and, indeed, with the exception of a fight arising out of a quarrel at the races, there was little or no disorder or drinking, and people seemed to enjoy themselves in a kind of big family party. Mr. and Mrs. N. of Gregory Downs kindly asked me to stay at the station, and at night I drove out with them. The station is about a mile away on the other bank of the river. The Gregory is a beautiful stream of ever-running water fed by springs, and never fails. The Brook and other rivers that we crossed on our way out are really anabranches running out of small rocky ridge runs down the Gregory River. Next morning there was a great deal of packing up and the horses to be got, as the boys had not overtaken us; and we did not get away until 10 a.m., camping for lunch on a large lagoon called the Lily at which point we left the Camoweal Road and travelled all the afternoon over a rough and heavy track winding through low hills, until at last, long after sundown, we came to a magnificent river, the O'Shanessy; and about two miles further on to Riversleigh Station, situated on a small creek between the O'Shanessy and Gregory Rivers. These two rivers are both fed by enormous springs and do not diminish in the dry season. It is a sight to remember in North Queensland to see these two great bodies of running water fifty yards wide and three or four feet deep running here parallel within four or five miles of each other, with banks clothed in luxuriant vegetation all the year round. The O'Shanessy, which is really the main stream, runs into the Gregory a few miles below the station, and a little below Gregory Downs the Gregory again splits up into several anabranches, one of which runs out into the Leichhardt.

On a hill opposite the station is an abrupt cliff which is known as the Tarpeian Rock, and is much more imposing than its original.

Here I spent a quiet Sunday. At Evensong we had all the men and the singing was very good considering that it was, I believe, the first service held here. There is a splendid waterhole in the creek in the front of the station, very deep and $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles long. It is said to be inhabited by gavials 15 feet long, and by swordfish 7 or 8 feet long, but they do not interfere with anyone who does not interfere with them, and I enjoyed a good swim. The day was intensely hot, and at night we had half-an-inch of rain— an unusual thing for this month.

Tuesday, August 31st. On Monday morning I walked up to the top of the Tarpeian Rock and had a fine view of the station below and the long waterhole fringed with trees. After lunch I rode out with Mr. M. to see some fine falls on the Gregory River, and then back on to the road where the buggy was waiting with Miss B. and a little girl who was staying with her. A boy who was sent to accompany us rode my horse, and I said good-bye to Mr. B. and drove the ladies 22 miles to the silver mines which are now quite deserted but for the caretaker, Mr. C. and his family. We spent the night there, and next morning drove on to Lawn Hill the Gregory and back into it again. It is one of the best-watered countries that I have seen in Northern Queensland. There is a small hot-air engine at the station which pumps the water from the river and supplies an excellent garden, besides being laid on to the house and yards. The engine which cost only £70 burns very little wood and requires scarcely any attention. In the evening I drove over to the hotel and held a very hearty service in one of the rooms, a large number being present, some inside and some outside. The following day, Friday, I wrote in the morning, and after an early lunch left with Mr. B. and his sister. We had a very heavy load, and did not get along very fast, camping for the night at The Knobs where a Station, 13 miles. The station is most picturesquely but somewhat impractically situated on the edge of a steep cliff on the top of a hill, and has a magnificent view away to the ranges which divide Queensland from the Northern Territory. All were hospitably welcomed by the manager, and I arranged to hold service after tea.

At sunset the mountains to the West, 10 to 12 miles away through the valley, look only five or six miles across, show a most beautiful shade of purple, and the whole view from the rocky terrace was very beautiful. It was in a hut on the edge of the cliff a few paces from the station that Joe Flick the outlaw stood at bay and shot the police sergeant and others who sought to arrest him. The dining-room table was used by the station hands as a shield and is full of bullet holes. The sergeant and others are buried in a little cemetery on the flat below, and Flick on a neighbouring creek.

We had a very hearty service at night. One of the men told me that he came out to the district from the old country in 1883, and since then had only once had an opportunity of attending service, when in 1899 he had paid a week's visit to Hughenden and attended the church of which I was then rector. With that exception he had not been away from his present work for twenty six years. The station had been once or twice visited, but he had been out on the run at the time.

I left Lawn Hill Station next day at 4 p.m., and rode 16 miles with Mr. B. to Archie Creek, where we camped. The night was very cold and I was very glad of an extra blanket Mr. B. lent me. Next morning I got an early breakfast and was on the road by 7 a.m., after saying good-bye to Mr. B., who kindly sent his black boy a mile or so to start me on the right road. I talked to the boy and found that his once numerous tribe was almost extinct. He had heard of the Mitchell River Mission and was anxious to learn about a friend who had, he believed, gone there. My horse was an excellent one, walking steadily five miles an hour, and I reached Sandy Creek so early that I determined to go on to the next water, ten miles further on, for lunch. This is a rocky limestone hole on the edge of a great plain six miles across. I reached Gregory Downs Station, 34 miles, at 3 p.m., and thus completed my round.

I stayed the night at Gregory Downs Station, and left next day in the coach about sundown. We travelled in a slow, aimless kind of way in the dark for nearly three hours, by which time we had accomplished about nine miles, and we then camped and passed a very cold night. Next morning we left early, and before breakfast passed a carrier camped by the wayside. Everything was smothered in dust, including the six children, the two youngest of which I baptised on a dusty sack spread under a dusty tree. They had not expected me so early, they explained, or they would have put up a bough shed. All day long we crawled along, doing about 40 miles between sunrise and sunset, when we camped again. We passed the house of one settler whom I visited. He is working with much energy to make a home on the banks of the Brook, and has about 1500 sheep besides a good garden. The oldest inhabitants shake their heads and say "wait till the floods come". He certainly deserves success, and I hope that the prophets of evil are wrong. Another cold night and a dry camp. Next day, Sunday, we started early again, the driver having kindly arranged to get me in on Sunday afternoon instead of Monday morning, the usual time. The day was hot. We camped for dinner on a muddy lagoon, where I was much interested in observing the manoeuvres which a native companion has to go through before he can alight from a flight without danger of breaking his long brittle legs. An intending aeroplaneist might study these birds with profit. We got to Burketown about 4 p.m., and I held a Confirmation at night, followed by a Celebration of the Holy Communion early the following morning.

I spent four days in Burketown visiting the few people now left, and having fortunately with me a number of books, for the distractions of Burketown are distinctly limited. Many of the houses disappeared in the cyclone last Christmas, and many more look as if they would not survive another wet season. Among other books I read Bishop Tucker's most fascinating "Eighteen years in Uganda," and Paul Bourget's "L'Étape." This last is, under the form of a novel, a most powerful protest against the anti-religious and anti-social ideals of modern France. It is very powerful as a story as well as a protest, and has reached its sixty-fourth thousand. On Wednesday I gave a lecture to a small but interested audience on "The Truth of Christianity," and left by the Waterlily on Thursday evening. We had two uncomfortable nights before joining the Warrego, which brought us to Thursday Island about 1 p.m. on Monday, September 13th.

Mitchell River.

Miss Barbara Matthews and Miss Martha A. Pick left Thursday Island in the Francis Pitt on Tuesday, September 14th, to join the staff of the Mitchell River Mission as the first women workers. Miss Robson went with them to see them settled in. We need not say how thankful we are for this new departure, and that we ask earnestly for the sympathy and prayers of our people for the new workers.

The Rev. Dr. Chapman on Bible in State Schools.

"It is needless for me to say that the placing of the Bible in the State Schools has my sincerest and heartiest endorsement. I spoke very strongly on this matter in Victoria, and I believe not without effect. To train our children without giving them instruction in God's Word is to produce a generation with a fatal defect. I can think of no peril greater than to have children grow up to manhood without knowing the Bible. From a purely literary standpoint this would be a mistake, but from a spiritual standpoint it is really fatal to the children's best interests. The knowledge of the Word of God, however superficial, strengthens character, increases the power of resistance to evil, makes better manhood and womanhood, and in every way prepares one for the conflicts of life. You may rest assured that if I have any influence in Queensland I cast it upon the study of God's Word in the schools, and I urge my friends to do everything in their power to make this position possible."

Brevities.

The Governor of Papua visited Thursday Island in the "Merrie England" in August.

About 350 Papuans are on ships articles in Thursday Island boats, and so far little has been done to care for them ashore. Thanks to the exertions of Mr. Curtis, their protector, a shelter-shed has been built for their use when ashore at the eastern end of Thursday Island. The Governor visited the shed and explained its object to the Papuans, whom he further gratified with a "ki-ki." There is no doubt the shelter-shed is a step in the right direction and we hope our Papuan visitors will feel they have a second home on Thursday Island.

We congratulate our hon. legal adviser, Judge Macnaughton, on his elevation to the bench.

We are glad to welcome Mr. Beryholtz to Thursday Island as Diocesan Accountant, and feel confident that diocesan affairs will benefit by his keen business capacity and thoroughness.

Doctor Chapman and Mr. Alexander, with their party, stayed a few hours on Thursday Island on their homeward way. Here they took their leave of Australia and Australia of them. Business houses were closed for an hour in the morning, and arrangements made for the soldiers to attend; and a heartfelt devotional meeting was held which, did more than stir the emotions transiently.

The Rev. W. M. Wilkinson of Cooktown has given up his parish in order to devote his whole time to the lonely settlers in the bush. He has been thoroughly visiting the Peninsula and is now on his way to Maytown, Mour Carbide, and the O.K. His action is a splendid example of unselfish devotion to duty, especially noteworthy in one who, no longer young, might be expected to look for some relief from the toil of constant bush travelling.

We have received a list of thirty-two English and six Continental Schools offering scholarships to the value of 50 per cent of the fees to Colonial boys and girls under an Imperial "Home Scheme," of which Lord Meath's "Empire Day" fame is the patron. All information as to schools and conditions may be obtained from Miss A. Stratford Cox, 93 Alfredstrasse, Schiller Platz, Düsseldorf, Germany. The scheme was started, we are told, in consequence of a lecture on the future of the British Empire by a German Professor, who pointed out that the grand-children of colonists do not regard the old land as home, and that in consequence the British Empire must fall to pieces. We do not agree with this theory, but nevertheless the scheme is good, and may be of practical use to some of our readers.

Thanks.

The Superintendent of Trubananam, Mitchell River, and Deaconess Buchanan of Melbourne return thanks for many kind gifts. Messrs. Carfoot, Lamb, Ives, and Williams sent bundles of clothing which are most useful. Mr. Wrenner sent a royal outfit for the King of the Koko-mundi. Mrs. Kroll, Miss Dove, Mr. McEwen, and Mrs. Cleveland have sent some both for the staff and to teach the native children. Money given by Holy Trinity Church, South Brisbane, and by a Salvation Army officer who visited Trubananam on bicycle, has been expended in procuring magic lantern and slides. This will be invaluable at the Mitchell. We thank Mr. McEwen of Sydney for his kindness in selecting and despatching the lantern and slides.

With another donation of money red and white bunting was procured, and Miss White and Miss Matthews have made a fine St. George's flag for use at Trubanamam.

Mr. Matthews is giving his numerous family a present of sweets. Miss Tait and many others have thought of the missionaries and sent gifts to cheer.

Xmas Presents.

The latest time for goods to reach Thursday Island so as to reach the Roper River and the Mitchell River Stations in time for Xmas is the first week of November. There are now two women workers at Trubanamam, so the Xmas gifts need not be exclusively masculine. The Moa gifts will be despatched a month later—i.e. early in December. Strong unbleached calico for underwear for the women is much needed.

Acknowledgement of Subscriptions.

The Secretary of the Carpentarian begs to acknowledge with thanks the following subscriptions to the Carpentarian received during the months of July, August and September.

Mr. C. Langman, 1s.
Per Mrs. Allan (Cooktown) 4s.
Per Mr. P. R. Allan (Palmerston) 8s.
Mrs. Corran, 4s.
Per the Rev. C. B. Mirrlees, Croydon, 12s.
(Messdames Hourston, Lucas, Montgomery and Phillips, and Messrs Allan, Dunbar, and T. A. C. Wilson 2s. each.)

Parish Notes.

PALMERSTON (PORT DARWIN).

Letters from Palmerston show that the parish are glad to have a resident rector once more, and have welcomed Mr. Arnold's arrival.

The hearty thanks of the parish are due to his Lordship the Bishop for his personal service at Palmerston, as well as for having secured a rector with so little delay.

To Mr. L. A. Irving sincere thanks are given for conducting Sunday services while the parish was without a minister.

Mr. Arnold intended visiting Pine Creek at the end of August, and hoped to get out to the tin rush at Umbrawarra while there.

GEORGETOWN.

We are delighted to print some extracts from the "Mundic Miner" of August 13th, giving an account of laying the foundation block of the church, which will be the first one on the Etheridge goldfields.

The ceremony of laying the foundation block of the Church of England in Georgetown took place last Friday afternoon, August 6th, the Rev. C. B. Mirrlees having journeyed up from Croydon to perform the ceremony.

At 3 o'clock in the afternoon the school children were to be seen marching from the State School to the ground, which was decorated with flags across and presented quite a holiday appearance. They were followed by Rev. C. B. Mirrlees and Rev. A. Hassell in their surplices. On arrival the hymn, "The Church's One Foundation" (215 A. and M.), was sung. Then came the beautiful prayers suitable for such an occasion, and the actual part of proving the block by means of a spirit level, and with a mallet made out of Australian wood the Rev. C. B. Mirrlees pronounced the block to be well and truly laid. Mr. Mirrlees then gave a most instructive and helpful address, basing his words on David building his own house, and thinking that it was not right that God should not have a house; he was not allowed to build, but prepared a building, and all his people gave most willingly.

Then followed the hymn, "We love the place, O God" (212 A. and M.), during which the freewill offering was collected and placed on the block, which amounted to £21 11s. 3d., after which Mr. Mirrlees offered up a prayer for those who are to be engaged in the building and pronounced the blessing.

Mr. Thomas Parker, seconded by Mr. W. A. Cooke, expressed the thanks of the congregation to Mr. Mirrlees for taking part in the impressive ceremony, and wished Mr. Hassell every success in his labours in the parish. Mr. Parker spoke with much feeling of the church as a monument of faith, tending to the stability and permanence of the congregation, and promoting their welfare in things material as well as spiritual.

The ladies of the town then invited all present to an afternoon tea picnic, which was much enjoyed by all.

A word of praise should be given to the children, who throughout the ceremony stood together within the blocks, and kept perfect silence and good order.

The mallet which was used at the ceremony was afterwards presented to Mr. Mirrlees by Mr. Fulton, the contractor, as a memento of the auspicious occasion.

Since the day of ceremony the amount of the freewill offering which was in aid of the furnishing of the church has amounted to £26.

We understand that the building is to be completed in two months' time, so we may hope to have it furnished and ready for dedication early next year, when we trust to have the Bishop of the Diocese with us.

CROYDON.

Sunday evening, July 25th, was a red-letter day for St. Margaret's, Croydon, when Miss Maud Jefferson, of the Belle Crome Company, sang two solos during the service, "O, Divine Redeemer," and "Rejoice greatly," from the "Messiah." The Belle Crome Company had been delighting Croydon audiences the week before, and Mr. Crome kindly allowed Miss Jefferson to sing in church, he acting as accompanist. On the previous night the last of the performance, Mr. Crome announced that Miss Jefferson would sing, and in consequence we had a large congregation, and a probably larger outside congregation. Miss Jefferson certainly gave us a great treat, and in these days of depression, when Croydon is hoping against hope, a kindness like this is perhaps doubly appreciated.

At the beginning of August the rector and Mrs. C. B. Mirrlees started off by coach to Georgetown to lay the foundation block of the new church up there. This journey contained rather more thrill than was anticipated, as in the small hours of the morning of the second day out the coach was only saved from turning completely over by the pole breaking. It was a serious enough predicament, as being miles away from anywhere it might have been difficult to get it mended. Fortunately, however, a kindly carrier, camped rather more than a mile away, came to the rescue. A sapling was cut down and firmly attached to the broken pole, and the journey to the next change was safely accomplished, and there a new pole was made. Owing to the delay the coach arrived in Georgetown at 10.30 p.m., three and a-half hours late, the coach having left at 4.30 a.m. The return journey was accomplished without mishap, save that all the occupants of the coach had a most unmerciful bumping.

On the Sunday evening on which the rector was absent the service in St. Margaret's was taken by Mr. T. Waram, the people's churchwarden. The service was, as usual, fully choral, and we understand the choir quite surpassed itself.

Owing to the change of the State school midwinter holidays, the annual Sunday school picnic had to be postponed from its usual date, about the end of June, to Wednesday, August 18th. When arrangements were being made, it was decided that the outing should be held at the Eighty-mile siding on the Normanton line, to make a variation from the usual picnic spot at Jassin's. Most of the arrangements had to be made during the rector's absence in Georgetown, and these were most ably conducted by the hon. secretary to the Parochial Council, Mr. C. H. Chippendall. Two days before the picnic Mr. C. H. Maslen, the rector's warden, went down on the train with Mr. Dawe, one of the linesmen, and put up a large bough shed. It was hard work, as the whole shed had to be made entirely, and after a strenuous day's work Mr. Maslen and Mr. Dawe worked their way back the fourteen miles on a trolley.

When the long-looked-for day arrived, the children met at St. Margaret's Church at 8 a.m., and after having got their tickets, marched to the station preceded by the Sunday School banner. It was a very excited throng of children that, together with a considerable number of adults, thronged the train. At Golden Gate the St. John's contingent joined the crowd and added to the excitement, many of the children from both Croydon and Golden Gate never having been in a train before. The day at the Eighty-mile siding was variously spent, the ladies of the picnic committee preparing for the various meals to be provided, the children in different forms of amusement, and the other grown-ups in camping under any trees where shade could be found. During the whole day sports were held under the superintendence of Mr. Chippendall, some of the events being most keenly contested. At last, like all good things, the day came to an end, and a tired and, we hope, happy crowd of children returned home just before sundown.

Our grateful thanks are due to all who in any way contributed to the day's success.

It always seems our lot to have to express our sorrow at the departure of some of our best workers, and this occasion is no exception to the rule. Two days after the Sunday School picnic Mr. Chippendall left for Charters Towers, to which place he has been transferred. His going makes a distinct blank in our somewhat attenuated number of churchworkers, as we could always count on anything Mr. Chippendall undertook being carried out in the best possible way. We would take this opportunity of thanking him most heartily for all he did for the Church in Croydon, and hope that our loss will be Charters Towers' gain.

The Carpenterian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA,
NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Volume IX. No. 35. Thursday Island, Oct. 1, 1909

What Remains to be Done.

When we ask ourselves what remains to be done in the diocese we do not forget to thank God for what has been done. In spite of bad times and an ever-dwindling population there has been real progress in the increase both of Churches and clergy from four to ten and the establishment of three entirely new missions, but we must be satisfied only when our provision for needs is adequate, not because it is less inadequate than it was.

1. We need a second priest to travel in the bush. Rev. W. M. Wilkinson with admirable self-devotion has resigned his parish of Cooktown in order to devote himself entirely to travelling in the bush and visiting the isolated camps, stations and settlements, but one man cannot possibly cover an area of 600,000 square miles. We need not only the priest but at least £100 a year towards his expenses. While the people do their best the expenses of travel are so great and the people so widely scattered that we cannot expect them to support the work entirely by themselves.

2. We need urgently a priest to travel by the Francis Pritt, to visit the Missions and provide celebrations of Holy Communion where there is no priest and to minister to the light-houses, lightships and islands. Here again we need at least £100 towards his expenses.

3. We need churches urgently at the Mitchell River and Moa Island Missions. The power of association of ideas is extremely strong among a primitive people, and how can we adequately teach the natives reverence and worship without any building that is set apart from common and necessary uses? We need at least £200 for each of these purposes.

4. We must look forward at no distant date to the establishment of two more aboriginal missions, one in the south-west corner of the Gulf, and one on the northern coast of the Northern Territory between Port Darwin and Cape Wessel. While these are unattempted we cannot be said to be doing our duty by the natives.

5. We want most urgently several hundred head of cattle for the Mitchell River Reserve. We have 600 square miles of splendid cattle country belonging to the Mission and only 30 head of cattle. If we had only a beast to the mile the Mission would be on a fair way to entire self-support.

Next August we shall celebrate the 10th anniversary of the formation of the Diocese of Carpentaria, and we would ask any of our friends who wish to help us to signalise the occasion by enabling us to make a forward movement in some of those directions that we have indicated.

During one of his short stays on Thursday Island lately, the Bishop found time to give an address to the soldiers in the Victoria Barracks on the Roman Army. The subject and its able handling were much appreciated by all present, and it is hoped the Bishop may be able to give another address in barracks before long.

The Mapoon Enquiry.

We do not propose at this stage to make any comment upon the Mapoon enquiry, because pending a decision by the Home Secretary the matter seems to us to be still sub judice, but we gladly take the opportunity of expressing our unstinted admiration for the splendid unselfishness with which Rev. N. Hey has for so many years devoted himself to the cause of the aboriginals, and our entire confidence in his kindness, justice and righteousness.

The matter cannot be allowed to rest where it is, and we hope to return to it in a later issue.

The Bishop's Movements.

The Bishop leaves Thursday Island on October 5th, to attend the Provincial Synod in Brisbane, and to preach for our mission in Sydney and Melbourne. His engagements are as follows.

Oct. 12-22.—Provincial Synod, Brisbane.

Oct. 23-Nov. 7.—Preach and speak, Sydney, for A.B.M.

First half November, Melbourne.

Second half November, Sydney.

Return to Thursday Island early in December.

Port Darwin.

The Bishop paid a short visit to Port Darwin early in July and was much pleased to find that although a delay of nearly three months had occurred since the departure of the late Rector that there had been no cessation of the services, which had been read by Mr. Irvine of the B.A.T. Co., in a way that would have taught a lesson to many of our clergy, and no diminution of the congregations and offertories. It is a tribute to the solidity of the work done by a parish priest when the work goes on when he is no longer there. The Bishop was only able to stay a week, as there was no boat for a month after that by which he left, and so could not visit Pine Creek as usual; but the show being on at Port Darwin he met many of the country people.

Rev. L. Arnold of Melbourne has been appointed Rector in succession to Rev. J. B. Drabble and arrived at Port Darwin by the Changsha on August 4th. Mr. Arnold was able to spend Sunday at Thursday Island on his way, and preached a powerful sermon at evensong in the Cathedral.

Cooktown.

Rev. W. M. Wilkinson has set a practical example of Christian unselfishness by resigning the parish of Cooktown to devote himself entirely to the needs of the bush. At an age when most men would be looking for lighter work he has given up everything to be a wanderer with no home but his pack-bags, for the sake of the people scattered in stations, homesteads, and little mining camps over the vast area from Cape York to the O.K. He left Cooktown on July 28th for Ebagoolah, Coen, and the Peninsula, and hopes to complete his first journey by the end of September, when he will start on another long journey to the Palmer and O.K. He is greatly missed in Cooktown, where he was beloved. The people intend to present him with a complete outfit for bush work.

The Bishop arrived at Cooktown by the Warrego on August 4th, and remained until August 15th, taking the services on the two Sundays, and giving a lecture during the week on the "Truth of Christianity." He left on the evening of August 15th for Burketown. Rev. A. M. Hassell will be in charge until the end of September, as Mr. Wilkinson's successor has not yet been appointed.

Body and Soul.

The book with the above title, recently published by Rev. Percy Dearmer (Sir Isaac Pitman & Co., 6s.) is extremely interesting, and most valuable at a time when "Christian Science" is making headway in spite of its dangerous fallacies and errors because of the neglected truths which lie behind it. Mr. Dearmer analyses in a popular yet scientific manner the physiological, psychological, and religious aspects of the relation of the mind to the body, and shows how great is the control exercised over the body by the mind. He shows that there is no prima facie impossibility about the healing of any curable disease by mental or spiritual means, though some diseases or accidents cause such physical destruction that no known means at all will restore the injured part. This does not mean that medical science is useless; it may be criminal not to avail ourselves of its aid, but mental and spiritual means will sometimes cure what medical science alone has given up as a case hopeless. We are often asked why miracle ceased with the days of the Apostles, and are apt to regard with suspicion the accounts of mediaeval miraculous cures, but the catena of cases given by Mr. Dearmer in his appendix shows as a matter of fact that miraculous cures, or spiritual cures, have taken place continuously since the earliest days of Christianity. He quotes examples, not only from mediaeval saints, but of miraculous cures wrought by such very modern persons as George Fox, John Wesley, Swedenborg, Prince Hohenlohe, Edward Irving, Father Matthew, Pastor Blumhardt, and Father John of Cronstadt. It is worthy of note that spiritual and mental healing are by no means confined to hysterical and cognate forms of disease, but cover the widest range. For instance, among the cures certified to by competent medical authority at Lourdes, nervous disease are in a minority and the first place is taken by pulmonary tuberculosis.

The question arises whether the Church is doing what she should to recognise the place which ought to be held by spiritual means in the healing of the sick, and it can hardly be answered otherwise than in the negative. The subject was discussed last year by the Bishop at the Lambeth Conference. Unfortunatelyunction, which was the usual ancient means of spiritual healing, has been perverted by the Roman Catholic Church into a preparation for death, an extraordinary twisting of its meaning. The Bishops did not recommend the sanctioning of the anointing of the sick as a rite of the Church, but added that they did not advise the prohibition of anointing.

earnestly desired by the sick person; and recommended that the form of service be fixed by consultation with the Bishop of the diocese. It remains to be seen to what extent the growing recognition of all power of spiritual healing will tend to make a reality of the permission thus cautiously granted by the Lambeth Conference.

Visit to Moa.

I left Thursday Island at 11 a.m., on Tuesday, July 13th, in the Francis Pritt. The weather was squally but the wind and tide favourable. A heavy squall near Scott's Rock compelled us to double reef the mainsail, and there was a rough sea but we did fairly well, and ran in through the opening of the reef under Moa Peak a little before 4 p.m. On my last visit we could not see to enter and had to anchor outside all night, a very unpleasant experience. It was dead low water and several patches on the bottom seemed unpleasantly close. I went ashore about 5 p.m., and as the new Church House was not yet occupied I took up my quarters there. About 7.30 p.m. all the community gathered for prayers, and I gave a short address on Confirmation. I slept on the verandah and when I woke in the early dawn I looked down the long line of the broad village street planted each side with young cocoanut trees to the conical grassy hill behind, and Moa Peak wreathed in clouds above it, and then towards the east where the dawn was brightening over the sea behind the volcanic island cone of Naghir, and showing the white waves breaking on the reef which was already beginning to show its rich red brown in contrast to the blue water beyond. At 6 a.m. the first bell rang and all the children gathered for a swim under the care of one of the elder men, and at 7.15 the community met for morning prayer. After breakfast I visited the school and was much pleased with the intelligence of the children. I was explaining to them the meaning of a sacred monogram which hung from my watchchain and said "It came from Athens, but I suppose you don't know where that is," when I was answered by a chorus of "the chief town of Greece." Some reference was made to the new Governor of Queensland, and I found that they could tell me all about his name, history, and previous appointments. The reading was excellent, though I chose a part of the Old Testament that they had not previously seen, and the drawing and map-making were particularly good.

The rest of the morning I was occupied in passing the contractor's work on the new house and other practical matters. In the afternoon Sonny, one of the Councillors, took me out to see the gardens which are doing remarkably well. The bananas and yams are bearing well, and the cocoanuts coming on. He had lost nearly a ton of pumpkins owing to there being no boat to take them in to market, and I promised to take a lot in for him by the Francis Pritt. In the evening the new church room was used for the first time, and there was ample accommodation for all. Not much furniture was needed, as the congregation sit on mats on the floor. I confirmed four men and six women who had been recognised as communicants by the L.M.S., but had elected to cast in their lot with Moa. The service was a very solemn one, and the congregation most reverent. The singing was very sweet, and far more powerful than had been possible in the old crowded little thatch house.

Next morning at 7 a.m. there was a celebration of the Holy Communion, and the catechumens and elder scholars were allowed to be present at the end of the room. To my pleasure the "Kyrie" was sung most sweetly, and the whole service was very beautiful. We had no need of a reredos, for through the open window behind the temporary altar we could see the ranges of hills rising up clothed in vegetation, and adorned with pinnacles of rock where the fleecy clouds were floating across the deep blue sky, while the noise of the surf on the reef, and the sighing of the morning wind in the trees formed a musical accompaniment. Nothing could have been more reverent than the behaviour of the whole congregation. After breakfast I had a meeting of the men to discuss matters of importance to the community. The first of these was the question of the extension of the boundaries of the mission as the numbers were growing, and new-comers were having to go further afield to find land suitable to cultivation. A petition had already been sent down to the Government but no answer had been received, and I was requested to take the matter up. Then there was the need of some kind of survey and some marking and mapping of the boundaries of the different cultivations, and I promised to try to get someone to undertake this. Then there was the application of new-comers for land on which to build their houses as the village has already nearly filled the long street parallel to the beach to the north. It was determined to allow new comers to build to the south of the Mission Buildings Reserve along the beach in the opposite direction, and a big tree was marked as the point at which building might begin. Then an intricate point was raised as to the ownership of certain cocoanut trees planted by others before the mission was started, but choked and ready to perish until "their lives had been saved" by some of the villagers who had cleared, and tended them. In some instances the original planter had given them to more than one person at a time, and the question was whether the tree belonged to the person to whom it had been given or to the person who "save his life."

Then the united wisdom was asked to sit in judgment on an application for the adoption of a child, a favourite native custom. One such recent case had been emphatically censured and presented. A woman with only one child had given it away to another woman, apparently to save herself trouble. She was ordered to take it back at once. In the present instance, the parents had eight children, and a single man of good character wished to adopt a little boy. It was resolved that while the practice of giving children for adoption was not to be encouraged as a rule, it might be permitted in this case on an agreement being made in writing setting forth all the conditions and circumstances of the case, so that neither side could afterwards repudiate it. After the council I took some photographs and watched the pumpkins being taken off to the Francis Pritt in a small cutter surrounded by delighted boys, hanging on to sides and rigging.

At low water I went out on the reef and watched the men fishing with a net kindly given by Mr. Kashiwagi. It has been of the very greatest service, and seems to be well kept and looked after, although it has several times been torn by catching in it young sharks and other large fish. The haul that I saw consisted of some 60 plump little fish of about half a pound weight, often the catches are much larger. On Thursday afternoon I walked out to the beautiful little cemetery in a fold of the hills with a vision of brown reef and white surf and blue sea beyond. There is only one tombstone, a marble cross with the inscription "Alea aged 19". He was a young man just married and his little son is laid beside him. The cross can be seen, so the lads who guided me said, far out at sea. The rest of the afternoon was occupied with going into many details of the work with Deaconess Buchanan, to whose untiring zeal and noble example the whole success of the Mission is due.

In the evening all again met for service, and I baptised two men, one being the village policeman, and the other the father of a large family. I had intended to go on board so as to be ready for an early start in the morning, but as we had some native passengers to take in, I determined to sleep on shore. It was fortunate that I did, as when the dinghy was going off to the ship with some of the crew who had come on shore for service, it was capsized and sunk by the heavy sea, fortunately without damage to the boat or men, save a total wetting.

I was determined to get off in good time and had every one up before six a.m., and there was a long procession along the beach in the grey to the point where the dingy could come ashore on a sandy beach. There we parted amid much shaking of dusky hands, and many cries of farewell, leaving the Deaconess to conduct her flock back to their abodes. We got off about 7 a.m., and it was well that we had made an early start, for wind and tide were both against us and we had to beat all the way, in a flurry of squalls and rain, which at times blotted out all the islands, much-needed guides amid the perplexing networks of reefs, which are very dangerous in the dark or when the wind fails and the swift tide bears you helplessly towards the reef without any possibility of anchoring in the deep water which extends to within a few feet of it. We came in a new way round the end of the Long Reef and to the west of Wednesday Island, and arrived safely about 4.30 p.m., after a most interesting and happy visit.

Australian Board of Missions.

We have received an urgent appeal, signed by all the Australian Archbishops and Bishops, on behalf of the Australian Board of Missions and the missions in connection with it. There is a debt of £1850 on Yarrabah and £1900 on the New Guinea Mission, and an appeal is made for £5000 to clear these debts and to place the work on a sound footing. The need is urgent, and we ask all our readers to do what they can to help, even if they can only send a little.

An appeal for money has also been made by the Australian Board of Missions to the Bishops of the various dioceses in Australia, and the Bishops have asked the laity to contribute towards the fund. Subscriptions should be sent as soon as possible.

Principal Resolutions

OF THE FIRST FOUR CONFERENCES OF THE CLERGY AND LAITY OF THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA, 1902—1909.

Aboriginal Mission.

That the Conference recognising the duty of the Church to the aboriginals within the diocese, hereby pledges itself to support the Bishop in his endeavours to establish a mission on the Mitchell River for the evangelisation of the native population.—Feb. 26, 1902.

Diocesan Conference.

That it is desirable to hold a Diocesan Conference until such time as a Diocesan Synod is established.

That it should consist of all the clergy licensed in the Diocese and one lay representative from each Parish.

That it meet at least once in two years.

That a Standing Committee be appointed, such committee to consist of three clergy and three laymen, one-third of each order being nominated by the Bishop and two-thirds elected by the Conference. The committee so elected hold office until the meeting of the next Conference.

That the Standing Committee be known as the Diocesan Council.

That it meet at least once in every quarter.—Feb. 27, 1902.

Diocesan Regulations.

That the Diocesan Regulations be agreed to. [Most of these are printed on the outer page of the "Carpentarian." The following are omitted there from want of space.]

Marriage Regulations. (1). The clergy are recommended to the Registrar General by the Bishop that they may be registered for the solemnisation of marriages, and no clergyman may solemnise marriages until so recommended and registered. This registration gives the clergy no right to celebrate marriages otherwise than as the customs and laws of the Church allow.

(3). Clergy who hold the Bishop's leave to issue his licenses are termed "Surrogates."

(6). Surrogates may not issue licenses for the celebration of marriages in Churches other than those within their own parish or districts. But when the clergyman of a parish or district has not been licensed as a Surrogate, application must be made to the Surrogate appointed to issue licenses for the celebration of marriages within that parish or district.

(8). Quarterly returns must be made of all marriages celebrated, and the fees due to the Diocese must be transmitted at the same time.

(9). No fee may be demanded for marriage by banns, and if any freewill offerings are made in such cases they may be entirely retained by the clergyman.—Feb. 26, 1902.

Mission Work among Japanese and Chinese.

That this Conference expresses its sense of the need of missionary effort among the Japanese of Thursday Island, and the Chinese of Port Darwin, and respectfully recommends that the Bishop take such action as he may think necessary and possible for their instruction in the Christian Faith.—Feb. 27, 1902.

Church Property.

That the Bishop be asked to hold in trust any properties which may be acquired by the Church in the diocese until such time as a Diocesan Synod is created.—Feb. 27, 1902.

Gambling.

That the members of this Conference view with alarm the spread of the gambling evil in Australia, and hereby pledge themselves to condemn the practice to the utmost of their ability, believing as they do that it is inimical to the highest interests of Australian manhood.

The Home and Morals.

That this Conference is of the opinion that the home life of a community is intimately connected with its moral standard. The authority and control of parents on the one hand, and the obedience and honour of children on the other, are the absolute conditions of the permanent well-being of the family and the State. The Conference would therefore take this opportunity of emphasizing the need of clear, definite, and systematic instruction on the part of clergy, teachers and others concerning these primary principles of morality in the home and the nation.—Feb. 27, 1902.

Provincial Action.

That it be a recommendation to the Bishop that his Lordship should signify the consent of the Diocese of Carpentaria to the Provincial Scheme, and that further, the Bishop should be asked to obtain if possible such modifications in the proposals as may be deemed necessary in the interests of this and other dioceses of the Province.—Feb. 27, 1902.

Raffles, Etc.

That this Conference desires to express its conviction that direct giving is the most scriptural as well as the most effective means of raising money for Church purposes, and that the practices of raffling and other questionable means of obtaining Church funds should be absolutely avoided.—Feb. 28, 1902.

Deportation of Islanders.

That this Conference, being convinced that a grievous wrong would be done were the deportation clauses of the Pacific Islanders Act to be put in force with regard to those Islanders who have been for a long time domiciled in Queensland, requests the Bishop to keep himself so informed of the probable action of the Federal Government that it may be afforded an opportunity of timely protest should such action be actually contemplated.—Feb. 28, 1902.

Marriage.

That this Conference deplors the degradation of marriage in Australia as illustrated by the recent report of the Royal Commission on the decline of the birth-rate in New South Wales.—July 27, 1904.

General Synod.

That the Conference accepts the Determinations of the General Synod of 1900.—July 27, 1904.

Offertories at Extra-Parochial Services.

That the offertories at extra-parochial services conducted by the Bishop in bush districts be devoted to the Bishop's travelling expenses, and that the extra expenses incurred in collecting funds for the Diocese in the south be charged against the amount collected; further, seeing that one-third of the Episcopal income of £300 is spent in necessary travelling expenses, it is desirable that as soon as possible provision be made by the diocese to relieve the Bishop of the burden.—July 27, 1904.

"Carpentarian."

That the Conference calls attention to the diocesan organ "The Carpentarian" and advises more strenuous efforts by the clergy to increase its circulation.—July 28, 1904.

Sunday Morning Services.

That this Conference considers it desirable that attention should be called to the tendency to neglect Chu ch worship, especially that of Sunday morning.—July 28, 1904.

General Synod.

That Determinations 1—6 and 8—11 of the General Synod of 1905 be accepted.—June 20, 1906.

Girls' Friendly Society.

That it is desirable to form a Diocesan Branch of the Girls' Friendly Society.—June 20, 1906.

Sunday School Lessons.

That the Inter-diocesan Sunday School Lessons published by the C.E.S.S. Institute be adopted.—June 20, 1906.

South Sea Islanders.

That this Conference desires to bring under the notice of the Commonwealth Government the extreme hardship and inhumanity which will result in many cases should the whole of the Pacific Islanders resident in this district be indiscriminately deported from Australia under the Pacific Labourers Act of 1901, as many of these islanders are married and have families, and have been resident in North Queensland for various terms, up to in some cases forty years; and trusts that the Minister will exercise the discretionary powers vested in him so that such hardship and inhumanity may be avoided.—June 21, 1906.

Assistant Clergy.

That in the opinion of this Conference, assistant clergy may be present at meetings of parochial councils, but without the power of voting.—June 21, 1906.

Provincial Constitution.

That the Provincial Constitution of Queensland be ratified by the conference.—June 21, 1906.

Alcohol.

That the representatives of this Diocese at General Synod be requested to submit for consideration the advisability of the Church taking united action with a view of furthering any movement having for its object the diminution of the evils consequent on the excessive use of alcohol.—June 21, 1906.

Bible in State Schools.

That in the opinion of this Conference it is imperative that steps should be taken in all parishes in the Queensland portion of this Diocese to bring the Bible in States Schools League before the people, in view of the coming referendum on religious education in State schools.—May 31, 1909.

Mothers' Union.

That in the opinion of this Conference it is desirable to establish a Diocesan Branch of the Mothers' Union.—May 31, 1909.

C.E.T.S.

That it is desirable to establish a Diocesan Branch of the Church of England Temperance Society.—May 31, 1909.

Transfer of Bishop's College.

That the action of the Diocesan Council in agreeing to the transfer of the theological students to Brisbane, and the use of the college as a Bishop's house, be approved.—May 31, 1909.

Upkeep of Bishop's House.

That the sum of £120 per annum for the upkeep of Bishop's House be regarded as a recognised call on diocesan funds.—May 31, 1909.

DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA.—Diocesan Statistics for the Year ending 31st March, 1909.

THE DIOCESE.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east, by the Northern Territory on the west, and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19 deg. 30 min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east par. 144 and thence N. to lat. S. 16 deg. 40 min., and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory of South Australia, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 sq. miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 16,500 whites, 7,000 Japanese, Chinese and other aliens, and 35,000 aborigines. The white population is chiefly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre N. of Cape York.

FINANCE.

The Diocese has no endowment beyond the Bishop's income of £300 per annum.

MISSIONS.

Missions are carried on among the Japanese at Thursday Island, among the S. Sea Islanders at Thursday Island Mosman, and Moa, and among the aborigines on the Mitchell and Roper Rivers.

SPECIAL OFFERTORIES.

On Easter Day the offertories are given to the Clergyman of the Parish, and on Good Friday, to the Australian Board of Missions.

ANNUAL FIXTURES.

(1) March 31st—Parish accounts to close, and to be prepared for presentation to Easter meeting.

(2) Week preceding the Annual Easter Meeting—Roll Book to be revised to date, and copy thereof to be forwarded to the Bishop.

(3) Easter Meeting to be held within twenty-one days after Easter Day; for election of Churchwardens, passing accounts, etc. N.B.—Copies of Easter Report and Balance Sheets to be sent to the Bishop. ("Parishes Regulation Canon," clauses 6, 10, and 24).

Bishop's Diary.

I left Thursday Island by the Empire on September 28, and arrived in Brisbane on Sunday, October 3. I spent a busy fortnight in Brisbane with meetings of the Bishops of the Province, the Provincial Synod, preaching, and the great missionary meeting in the Protestant Hall.

The meeting of the Provincial Synod was brief, but most useful business was transacted. Rev. W. M. Woods and Rev. Canon Jones acted as our clerical representatives, and Mr. Joseph Hughes as our lay representative. Mr. Hughes was elected chairman of committees.

I left Brisbane on October 20 and stayed a day with the Bishop of Grafton and Armidale and a day with Archdeacon Rigg at Muswellbrook, reaching Sydney on October 23. I preached in Sydney on the Sunday, and on the Tuesday was present at Mr. Woolcombe's magnificent meeting for men in the Town Hall. On the following day I left for Goulburn, where I held a meeting on behalf of the diocese; and then on to Melbourne, where I preached for the diocese on Sunday, 31st.

I left Melbourne on Tuesday, November 2, Cup Day; and as the train passed Flemington I could see the 143,000 people collected on the racecourse. I could not help wondering when the people of Australia would learn to compare what they spend on pleasure with what they spend on the service of God.

During the following week I spoke for the diocese at Geelong, Terang, Coroit, and Camperdown; then I returned to Melbourne, where I had a very busy week with sometimes our meetings in the day, ending up with preaching on "Missions" in the Cathedral on Sunday, November 14. On the following day I left for Sydney, and was present at an important meeting of the Bishops held for the purpose of reorganising the Board of Missions; and on the following day at the enthronement of the new Archbishop of Sydney, who has been most warmly welcomed and made a most favourable impression upon his people.

I remained in Sydney for nearly a fortnight to speak and preach on behalf of the Board of Missions, leaving for Brisbane on November 29, and for Cooktown on the following Saturday. From Cooktown I go to Georgetown to open the new church, and from thence to Croydon and Normanton, and hope to return to Thursday Island by January 18.

The Lepers at Peel Island, Brisbane.

The Bishop of Carpentaria writes;—
S.S. Otter,

Oct. 6, 1909.

I have just been visiting the lepers at Peel Island. I had not very long, as I had to get back to catch the steamer, but I was very glad to have had the opportunity. I talked to the white lepers for a few minutes, and then went down to see the South Sea boys. My old friends from Friday Island were delighted to see a familiar face; but I was saddened to see what terrible ravages the disease had made in many cases. A course of treatment by injection is being tried on Tom Moreton in the hope of a cure, but so far the result seems to be to make him feel ill. A little church has been built and the walls covered with sacred pictures, among them those brought out from England, which they much admire. Mr. and Mrs. Brown are still in charge, and look extremely well. We had a little service in the church, and the address on the text, "I know thy tribulation and thy poverty (but thou art rich). Fear not the things which thou art about to suffer. Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee the crown of life," was listened to with the deepest attention. As they sang the last hymn, "God be with you till we meet again," I could not but think it probable that many of us would not meet again here. Rev. Davies has been visiting them regularly, and the Archbishop lately held a confirmation. There is no doubt of the religion of these poor fellows. Their conduct is excellent. The church needs a quantity of material to complete it, and I hope they will soon get it.

CHAPEL AND HOSPITAL.

The little chapel at Trubanaman plays an increasingly important part in influencing, more or less consciously, the lives of the natives. Though the service may be still unintelligible to them, it is not meaningless. The very fact of assembling together for some unknown but not unfelt good has its effect in strengthening the idea of social life. Family life is beginning to be touched by the church life. Already men and women, united by tribal law, have learnt to come to the chapel and have their union sanctified by the blessing of the church and little children are brought to baptism. Many adults are preparing earnestly for baptism and it will be a very great day for the mission when those whom she has patiently watched and trained are admitted into the Church of Christ. For the Mission Staff the quiet services in the freshness of early morning or in the restful beauty of the sunset are a reminder. They have hallowed memories of the Communion Services held there when the Bishop or the Vicar of Thursday Island have been able to visit Trubanaman, and the humble little altar dressed every day by the children with fresh lilies and grasses serves as a constant inspiration.

The present chapel is a makeshift. It is the living room, with all the wind that blows, with a mud floor and rough seats and desks.

When the bell (a cow bell) rings morning and evening it is pretty to see the women and children come trooping over the compound in their bright prints.

The men sit behind as a rule the services are attended by two Kings from neighbouring camps, one an old man, the other young and extremely tall and thin with high shoulders and very long legs. The old King was immensely gratified by a gift from Thursday Island of an artillery man's uniform. This he wore night and day until the Superintendent, fearing the heavy khaki tunic would stifle him, induced him to be content with trousers and helmet for daily wear and keep the tunic for full dress parade on Sundays. He has handed on his former much delapidated helmet to his brother King, which adds to his already uncommon height.

The little school-boys sit in front of their chapel and form the choir. The scarlet lavas look well against their velvety dark skins. On Sundays they are supposed to wear white calicoes but the mission does not often run to a change of clothing.

The boys sing shrilly but sweetly and in excellent tune, their faces screwed up for the effort and the little red tongues and white teeth shining out vividly.

To prayers as a rule come a kitten, a possum and a cockatoo, they follow the children and spend the time pecking or chasing or patting each other but the children are very attentive and reverent and take no notice of the antics of their pets until the service is over.

On Sunday morning before service the congregation assemble to practice the hymns and chants and it is really wonderful how quick they are in picking up tunes and words.

Sometimes the Superintendent gives a short address to his "boys and girls" in simple but good English, pidgin English is neither desirable nor necessary. Their faces show that they can follow and understand a good deal.

The present chapel is woefully crowded and the site of the new and permanent building is already marked out and work will be begun shortly.

The little hospital is one of the most attractive buildings on the station. Built of split pandanus and mud, with thatch of palm leaves, hard floor and whitewashed inside and out it is cool, clean and serviceable. About once a week the whole flock come up for a real Mrs. Squeers' dose of salts, made more palatable with lemon juice when obtainable. Some take it bravely, others with wry faces. The two Kings are generally present at this ceremony and take their doses royally. Some hide, and are hunted up by indignant and officious sufferers. A good deal of work is got through every morning at the hospital. The station natives are always needing sores or wounds dressed, eyes have to be attended to and sometimes teeth extracted.

The wild or camp blacks are beginning to swerve a little in their allegiance to their own witch-doctors and will come up themselves or bring their children for treatment.

A young gin—a mass of disease—was brought in from a camp and stayed two or three days in hospital. Her mother accompanied her and sat by her daughter night and day brushing away the flies with a wild turkey's wing or lifting her daughter either into the shade or the sun.

It was touching to see the sick woman, when a pannikin of milk was brought her, pushing it towards her mother that she too might partake. Her people stole her away one night so there was no chance of doing her any lasting good. A very tall woman carried her little child astride her shoulders to be attended to—the little one's foot had been badly burnt in the ever-smouldering camp fire, and after being cleaned and dressed for some days showed signs of improvement.

The trying part to the Superintendent is that should a patient become worse under hospital treatment, the prestige of the mission suffers. Few of the natives have as yet sufficient confidence to stand a failure in the efforts of the missionary. They would see in it at once a sign of the evil spirit's displeasure.

There was a cheering sign recently that a spirit of confidence in the Missionary and a trust in God is growing. A little baptized infant was dying. Like David, the mother weiled and lamented but when the baby died and she was told "Jesus has taken Topsy" she smiled and was quite reconciled. The natives ascribe most of their illness and trouble to witch-craft. Some one has pointed the magic bone at them and it is well known how they will give themselves up to die when bewitched. Sometimes by clever sleight of hand the witch doctor extracts the bone which is supposed to have entered a vital part and faith-healing speedily effects a cure. A good deal of sickness is probably hydatids caused by the water they drink and the mangy dogs which share all food and drink. A blow or wound, however alarming, soon heals up, but sores, rheumatism, and pneumonia are very prevalent. It would be a great help to the Superintendent if a doctor would find time for a visit to Trubanaman. Manson's "Tropical Diseases" is of great help in diagnosing complaints, but a few hints from an expert on the spot would be invaluable.

The doctor, if fond of sport would not regret his journey, he would see some of the finest cattle country in the north and would get any amount of shooting—ibis, duck, pigs, alligators, kangaroos and so forth, and be sure of a really unique and interesting visit.

There is so much that is needful both for the souls and bodies of these people, and there is enough money in Australia to supply it, without in the least neglecting those of our own race who need help. White people can at all events make their needs known, the natives suffer dumbly. It is inhuman to leave them to die in misery, it is not with Christ's sanction that we leave them to live in darkness and degradation.

Women of Trubanaman, Mitchell River.

Until quite lately nothing has been done for the women at Trubanaman Mission Station.

With the advent of Miss Matthews and Miss Pick, the first women-workers on the Staff, this side of the work is now beginning to receive the attention it demands.

It is wonderful how quickly the women and girls respond to sympathetic treatment and firm kind training.

Every Saturday morning a women's meeting is held, when the work for the ensuing week is apportioned. Different women are chosen each week for washing, cooking, baking and other duties so that all have a chance of becoming proficient in every branch of domestic work.

The day's work is well organized so as to be neither heavy nor monotonous, the required work has to be thoroughly done and the women already take a pride in their duties.

Directly after breakfast the huts of the married couples are inspected. The women sweep the mud floors of the interior and also all round the outside of the huts. All household gear, blankets, pannikins and so forth, has to be in order and many of the women take a real pride in their humble house-keeping.

The single girls' quarters are close to the ladies' quarters, and the younger girls sleep in a large sewing room next to the ladies' sleeping-room.

Even on the hottest nights fires are always kept smouldering in the huts, partly to keep away mosquitoes, partly to give the inhabitants courage for they are desperately afraid of the dark. The little girls roll themselves up in their blankets, not being allowed fires, and lie about on the matting like grey bolsters.

After house-keeping duties in the mission building have been attended to, the younger women go off to school, the elder gather in the sewing-room, where they are taught to mend their ragged dresses of their husbands' equally ragged trousers or lava-lavas.

Already each woman has made herself a large and small calico bag to contain her daily rations of flour and rice, and Miss Matthews has great hopes of them being able to make their own dresses before long. The sewing lesson is the time to get to know the women individually, as they squat in a circle on the floor, laboriously threading their needles, or sewing industriously but with many a heavy sigh, and be sure that if they can escape attention for one moment they will be running their seams instead of hemming them.

Old Kate, the widow of a King, attends the sewing-class punctiliously. Her idea of sewing is to make the smallest amount of stitches go to the furthest possible distance.

Near her sits handsome stately Polly, a very big woman, just in from some months' "walk about" in the bush. She is a mother to all the younger women being shrewd and sensible and kindly. Pretty little Yalkabille, with a shell necklace twisted round her slender throat sits mending her husband Sergeant's clothes, which she herself has torn in a tiff.

Annie a bright looking girl with curly hair more like a Papuan than an Australian native, has also just come in from a prolonged "walk about." Tired and footsore she was brought in by some of the Station men, who lent her a pair of moleskins and let her ride one of their horses. Then there is Kitty, the mother of three well-grown children and expecting her fourth shortly. This is unusual as very few even of the strong health women have more than one child. This fact leads one to the problem of race preservation. If it is a good thing that the race should not die out, then fresh blood must be introduced but how? We have deported the South Sea Islanders regardless of the fact as proved in Torres Straits that the children of South Sea men and aboriginal women are physically and mentally a fine race.

But this question is too large and too difficult to be discussed here. Beatrice neé Possum comes next. She begged to have her name changed, evidently as a direct result of the elevating influences brought by the two women workers into her life. She bears the name of Beatrice with becoming dignity. Handsome and clever, she and her husband Terry are the model pair on the station.

Maggie the wit of the party sits beside her, she has constituted herself a kind of Chief of Staff to the ladies and is most useful as interpreter. She has one son, Rory, with whom she lived on a cattle station, where both mother and child were distinguished as fearless riders and cattle-hands. She is wild, impulsive, hot-tempered and warm-hearted. One never knows what moment she will choose to fold one in her ardent embrace. A very charming face and figure is that of little Bobbina, shortly to be married to one of the finest of the young men on the Station. They have both been with the mission since its inception and the wedding is likely to be a most satisfactory one, especially as the young lovers are preparing earnestly and intelligently for Baptism so as to begin their married life as members of Christ.

An interesting figure is Lucy Myall (wild black) who is but newly come to the Station with her two hungry-looking thin little daughters to whom the names of May and Maud have been given. She appeared with them at the Station one Sunday morning, all three gaunt, wolfish, unclean and unclothed. The Mission has already done much for her and her daughters, little Maud is the life and pet of the place, and Lucy is beginning to lose her wolfish look. Her arrival had something of the nature of a tragedy connected with it. It appears her husband had tired of her and thrown her over or a more youthful bride. Strangely enough her husband with his new wife, Jessie, came to the station from another quarter shortly after Lucy and her daughters arrived. Jessie, rough strong and good-looking is almost a ripple owing to an accident to her knee. She walks with the aid of a strong tall pointed stick and yet, strange to say, is a supple and active dancer and was to be seen soon after her arrival instructing her rival's eldest daughter, with others, in some new dance. The meeting of these two women naturally brought difficulties and until matters were talked over and settled by the Superintendent and the married people on the station, there was much jealousy betrayed and some blows exchanged. The husband has now taken back his first wife and Jessie has chosen a husband from among the station men.

Most of the women have their upper front teeth knocked out the same as the men. They like to wear a fillet of possum hair or red wool or fibre tied round their heads.

When they have colds they gather some grass or herb which they stick through the hole pierced through the nostril. These fierce green mustaches produce an indescribably comic effect.

Their voices are capable of wonderful modulations, from a thin die-a-way wail to a deep passionate guttural declamation; the tones are vibrant but not pleasing.

They have however an infectiously merry laugh. It is quite delightful to see their antics on washing day which is a real "day out" for them. Clothing is cast aside and they sit among the lilies in the warm brown water soaping and rubbing the different gorments. Now and then a laundress disappears under the water for mussels, or swims over the lagoon for a particularly tempting and juicy lily-stem. On the bank other women are seeing to the boiling of the clothes and the work goes on in the most charming and merry fashion, everyone enjoying themselves hugely.

The clothes when finished are not quite all that one could desire, but short-comings are easily forgiven for the sake of the joy and zest of the washer-women.

Another labour they enjoy is taking the pots and pans down to the lagoon to clean in the sand, this is part of the mornings work of the kitchen-maids and they extract much fun out of it.

When the wet season begins the women will all have their gardens to attend to. Gifts of vegetable seeds are always opportune and helpful. Last wet season they grew pea-nuts, melons, pumpkins, carrots and many other vegetables which are most helpful in keeping them in good health.

At night, when "Lights Out" is sounded at 9 p.m. the Superintendent goes round to each of the married peoples' huts and kneels with them at their evening Prayer. It is very wonderful to see how the Light is breaking into the lives of these hitherto neglected, wild, ignorant women.

They need, and have a right to expect, the Prayers and the help of all Christian women. Let it be forth-coming for the sake of One born of a woman.

Rev. C. B. Mirrlees B.A., has had to resign from the diocese on account of his own and Mrs. Mirrlees' ill health. We are very grateful for the services rendered to the diocese by Mr. Mirrlees who came out to the diocese at his own expense and has with Mrs. Mirrlees done most faithful service at Croydon for the last two years. We trust that they will both soon be fully restored to health and none the worse for their northern experiences.

THE BIBLE IN STATE SCHOOLS REFERENDUM.
My dear People,—

A referendum on the subject of the Bible in State schools will be taken at the ensuing Federal elections, which will take place sometime before next June.

I hereby appoint the last Sunday in January as a day of prayer and intercession for the cause of religious instruction in schools, and I urge all Church people to be present at the Holy Communion and other services on that day, and to unite in prayer to Almighty God that the referendum may give us back the Bible as an essential part of our children's education, and give them an opportunity of being instructed in the faith of their parents.

I further urge all Church people to spare no efforts to make known to others the need of voting for the Bible at the referendum, as if we lose this opportunity we may never have another in this generation.

The occasion is a grave one, and I solemnly appeal to all with whom the call of their Bishop has any weight to respond to this appeal.

GILBERT, BISHOP OF CARPENTARIA.

December 1, 1909.

Notes.

A fund has been opened for a memorial to the late Most Rev. W. Saumarez Smith, D.D., Archbishop of Sydney. Subscriptions may be sent to Messrs. T. A. Dibbs and J. Russell French, Hon. Treasurer, Bank of N.S.W. Sydney.

Mr. Matthews, Superintendent of Trubaman Mission, and Deaconess Buchanan, in charge of St Paul's Mission, Moa, have both visited Thursday Island recently. They desire to thank their friends there for much kindness and hospitality and for many useful gifts to the missions. Fowls, books, papers and clothing were given them and some of the children collected mango seeds for planting. Mr. Matthews returned to Trubaman by the Francis Pritt and Deaconess Buchanan to her outpost duty by the "John Douglas." We wish them health and happiness throughout the trying wet season. Mr. Matthews brought good reports of his sister and Miss Pick, who have quite settled down to their work and have already won the confidence of many of the women and children.

The missions have to thank the Superintendent of the State Nursery at Cairns for a carefully selected and most valuable assortment of seeds and plants. It is of the greatest consequence that the missions should produce their own food supply and at the same time the training of the natives in agriculture is one of the surest means of raising and developing the race.

In the class lists of the Australian College of Theology for the present year we are glad to see that two students for the Diocese of Carpentaria, Messrs. Ayscough and Lane, were successful in obtaining a pass as Licentiates in Theology (Th.L.).

Both these gentlemen are students at the Theological College, Nundah, Brisbane.

Rev. W. E. Godson has been appointed Rector of Cooktown in succession to Rev. W. M. Wilkinson and came into residence on Dec. 1st.

Sermon

PREACHED IN ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL, MELBOURNE,
ON SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1909.

And it shall come to pass afterwards that I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh, your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions, and also upon the servants and the handmaids in those days will I pour out my Spirit.—JOEL II., 28.

These words were quoted long after by St. Peter as prophetic of that great Pentecostal outburst of the Christian Spirit which swept away in a moment the cherished national antipathies of Jew and Gentile, so that for a brief space it outran the slow century-long progress of missionary effort, and for a moment at least Parthians and Medes and Elamites and the dwellers in Mesopotamia and in Judæa, in Cappadocia, in Pontus and Asia, Phrygia and Pamphylia, and in the parts of Libya about Cyrene, and the strangers of Rome, Jews and proselytes, Cretes and Arabians heard speak in their own tongues of the wonderful works of God.

Missionary work is no doubt founded on ideals, and the ordinary man is rather suspicious of ideals. He does not much believe in talk, and he does not want to see visions and dream dreams. He wants something practical and tangible, and he likes to see the use of a thing before he is prepared to spend much thought or money upon it. Yet the study alike of thought and of history leaves us little room to doubt that it is by ideals that nations grow and thrive and live, and that with the loss of ideals they dwindle and starve and die. It is not my intention to labour the point now, what I wish is to show that one ideal, the missionary ideal, has a very real and practical bearing on common things and on those conditions of social life which are of the closest importance to each man and woman among us.

The question ultimately depends on the meaning of life. Is life a means or an end? If life is an end in itself, if the sole object of man is to extract for himself a maximum of pleasure and a minimum of pain from the few years that he spends on earth, then obviously missionary effort is only a form of silly sentimentalism, and the sooner it is swept away by a robust common sense the better.

You, however, by your presence here in this temple dedicated to the service of God, show that you do not believe that life is a mere end. You believe that it is a means to something higher and wider than your own individual interests.

What is this true end of social and corporate life? May we say that probably most would agree that it is the greatest good of the greatest number. It is true that taken narrowly and by themselves these words may lend themselves to a tyranny of majorities or a lean and barren utilitarianism, and it is true that as Christians we might prefer to put it, with a well-known catechism, that the main end of man is to glorify God and to enjoy him forever: but after all, the reason why we glorify God is because, pace Calvin, we believe that He is the highest good and that He wishes all men without exception to enjoy it. May we not say then that not only do Christians recognise the greatest good of the greatest number as the true end of life, but that it is generally recognized as an ideal by those who have rejected

Christianity in favour of some modern socialistic creed and by most modern philosophies, and even that it is being increasingly recognised by those nations which have as yet only begun to come under Christian influences, Japan, Turkey, and China?

Now bearing this in view, and the general interest in social questions shows how strong a hold it has upon our imaginations, we may note that the greatest good of a community cannot be attained while any part of it is being neglected. A man dare not neglect a poisoned scratch because it is only on his little finger, because it will spread and affect his whole body; so a society cannot neglect a portion of the body politic, least a poisoned sore should gangrene the whole body.

For instance, in Australia we cannot afford to neglect our aboriginals, and that not only for the sake of the aboriginals but for the sake of the white men who are in contact with them. Nothing is so bad for most men as to be placed in the relation of irresponsible master over a helpless and servile race; the result is too often a real degradation of the white man in self-help, self-respect, energy, and morals.

I note that a few weeks ago the Belgian officials, replying to Sir Edward Grey's remonstrances on the long-continued and ghastly atrocities in the Congo, countered his charges by referring to the treatment of the blacks in Western Australia. Had we established a strong missionary diocese in North-West Australia twenty years ago we should have been spared the shame of appearing to contribute to thwart England's efforts to obtain redress for the victims of Red Rubber.

But the lack of the missionary spirit in Australia in the past has had even graver consequences. It led people in Australia to speak and think of the Chinese and Japanese with undisguised contempt and to subject them to many indignities. Another nation, the Russians, shared our contempt for the Japanese until they discovered that it was they not the Japanese who were fools at the cost of national disaster and dishonour. We have fortunately escaped the results of our misjudgment in this particular case; but who can say what harm has been done and is being done to ourselves by our prejudiced miscalculations, which would have been impossible had our missionary enterprise been on a sufficiently large scale to give us a true and sympathetic insight into the character, capacity, and resource of those whom we ignorantly set down as uncivilised savages?

Given that we seek for our own sakes the good of the greatest number in our community, and that we cannot afford to neglect or despise any element in it, another thought follows, and that is this: We are beginning more and more to see that if we are to attain the highest good we must extend our interests beyond the limits of our own community: and gather in all that is best in other communities too, so either a nation or a Church must share in the life and progress of the world if it would not stagnate and fall behind.

This is an extension of a well-known law of nature. Even animals suffer from keeping to themselves. The dangers of in-breeding are well known. Stock quickly deteriorate unless strengthened by the introduction of an outside strain. So it is with men. The very virtues peculiar to a community may lead to its destruction unless they are balanced by other virtues introduced from without. Our own race is a striking example, first of the results of missionary enterprise, and secondly of the beneficial results of the capacity to absorb different elements and different strains, Celt, Carthaginian, Teuton, Norman, Hugonot, Hollander, Jew, have all brought their distinctive characteristics to make a progressive and permanent race.

Now it is not reasonable to suppose that we in Australia have nothing left to learn. I believe that we may learn something even from the despised aboriginal. I select this lowest type because if it can be shown that we have something to learn from the aboriginal, a fortiori we may learn from higher races.

One of the most striking features of the wild aboriginal is their social instinct within the tribe. We are all dissatisfied with our own social conditions. The unequal distribution of wealth and opportunity is a recognised evil. We are all Socialists in the sense that we long that these evils may be redressed; but the aboriginals are the most advanced Socialists in Australia. With the exception of his wife no native has any private property. Whatever he has he is ready to share with others. Professor Spenser has pointed out that what is called the ingratitude of the aboriginal springs from this cause. He does not thank for a gift because he does not see why he should. He is ready to give you whatever you want, even if it is his last possession. It seems to him the most natural thing in the world to give or to receive. He measures the call to give simply and entirely by the need of the recipient.

Now I do not say that we ought to adopt this extreme communism, but we must admit that there is something in this generous giving to everyone that needs which contrasts not ignobly with our modern greed for individual gain—a spirit not remote from the ideals and practice of certain primitive Christians.

Or again, there is in the aboriginal a most marked capacity for intelligent development. Some years ago this was doubted and denied, but to-day there is no reasonable doubt, and denial is only possible by ignoring easily ascertainable facts.

If the aboriginals are like children, they are like children all through—i.e., they have the child's power of growth and development. The work of our own missions at Yarrabah and Mitchell River, the Lutheran Mission at Cape Bedford, the Presbyterian Mission at Mapoon, and the Roman Catholic Mission in Western Australia, has shown beyond possibility of doubt that it is not only not impossible, but that it is easy with patience and common-sense to change in a few years a savage tribe into a good-living and steadily working industrial Christian community, with a good standard of devotion and morals.

This capacity for social and moral development on the part of what were once said to be the lowest race of mankind is not without its lesson and its moral for ourselves. All the older nations, at any rate, have to deal with questions of the moral, social, and intellectual development of degraded city slum life, not very different to that which confronts the man who seeks to raise the aboriginals; and the methods which ensure success are not very dissimilar in the one case and the other. But if we have something to learn, be it ever so little, from the aboriginals, we have much to learn from China and Japan, from the strong family life and deep respect for parents of the former, and from the discipline, efficiency, and patriotic self-devotion of the latter.

Now there is but one way in which the ideal of the greatest good of the greatest number can be adequately realised, and that is by the growth of the spirit of service, by the growing conviction among men and women that it is their duty to live not for themselves, but for the community, by men and women finding their happiness and a sufficient career in the unselfish service of their fellow men. By no other method can we put an end to political or municipal corruption, or cops with social evils.

Perhaps there never was a time when this was more keenly realised than at present. In England thousands of men are so giving their lives for the public good, whether as patient investigators of social conditions like Charles Booth or Octavia Hill, as municipal reformers, or settlement or temperance or rescue workers, or carers for fatherless children. It is this voluntary unpaid unselfish labour and service, whether within or without the Christian Church, which is the hope of the State, the only barrier against general apathy and cold officialdom.

Have you ever reflected on the value of missionary work in stimulating and encouraging the spirit of service? Missionary work possibly requires the fullest and most complete sacrifice of self, and by that very fact is a standing rebuke to the spirit of selfish isolation and unconcern. We are sometimes told that good men and women are "wasted" on missionary work, but do we ever reflect how many are stirred and roused by their example, not perhaps to follow exactly in their steps, but to a deeper and more sincere spirit of service in their own life and their own neighbourhood? The man who gives his life to the service of, say, the aboriginal cannot help thereby suggesting to his neighbours the question as to whether there is no call to them to give at least some part of their life to the service of their own people to the victims of drink, license, or evil social conditions. Missionary work, so far from being a waste, is one of the most potent aids in arousing the spirit of social service. When we ask what is the motive power of this spirit of service, the answer is that it is a conviction of the value of every human soul. We have come to see that old idea of the "common" man with a common soul is a false one. We know that rank, knowledge, wealth are but the external trappings of the soul, that affection, courage, courtesy, devotion, tact, consideration, compassion, purity, enthusiasm, loyalty, truthfulness, justice, unselfishness, may be found quite as fully developed among the poor and ignorant as among the rich and the learned. We desire that every one should be free to develop the good and the capacity that is in him. I need not point out that missionary work is but a fuller and further development of this democratic principle. It refuses to be bound by an arbitrary and meaningless colour line in its desire to give every human soul an opportunity to develop the capacity for good that is in him. It finds for instance in the aboriginal an utter absence of modern knowledge, art, and culture; but it finds a soul capable of deep and lifelong fidelity, capable of a real sense of sin and a desire for a higher life, capable of courtesy, thoughtfulness, tact, pity, affection, and unselfishness. We say again that these things form the real soul, and that the people who are capable of these things are worth an effort to make them possible for them.

I have, of course, carefully abstained from referring to the main reason why we as Christians should put missionary work in the forefront of our efforts; because Christ deigned to put service done to the least of human souls on a level with service done to Himself, and because He put missionary effort in the forefront of Christian duty. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren ye have done it unto me." "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature."

I have tried to show that, even apart from this primary and unavoidable command of Christ, missionary effort is more closely bound up with our common life than we are always ready to admit, and can be neglected only at grave peril to ourselves.

Let us pray for a wider outpouring of the spirit of God, that our old men may no longer fear to dream dreams our or young men to see visions of the day when the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea.

The Dedication of Church in Georgetown.

In the last "Carpentarian" we read an account of the laying of the foundation block of the first church on the Etheridge Goldfields a area of about 13,000 square miles on August 6th, 1909. We are now most thankful to say that the work began on that day, has been completed and was dedicated to Almighty God by the name of St. Michael and All Angels by the Bishop of the Diocese on Christmas Eve. The building is 35ft. long by 25 broad and stands on a hill overlooking the whole town. The total cost of the building including seats has been about £240, the whole of this sum has been raised, and the church was opened free of debt.

The hour fixed for the dedication service was half-past four on Christmas Eve. Punctually at that time the opening hymn 215 A. and M. "The Church's one Foundation" was sung by the congregation, and while the last verse was being sung the doors at the west end were closed, the Bishop and the Rev. A. Hassell meanwhile coming round the vestry. As the last note of the hymn was being sung the Bishop on the door three times with his pastoral staff. The doors were then thrown open and at the steps the Bishop and Mr. Hassell recited verses 7 to the end of Psalm xxiv and during the Gloria proceeded to the chancel. Here Mr. Hassell read a petition asking the Bishop to dedicate the church which was signed by Mr. Hassell as curate in charge and Mr. Munt, the hon. treasurer for the building fund, the Bishop replies that he is willing to do so. Then followed hymn 240 "Pleasant are Thy Courts Above," after which the Bishop offered up prayers for those who should be baptized, those who should be confirmed, those who should receive the sacrament of the body and blood of Christ, those who should be joined together in the holy estate of matrimony within the building, that God's holy word should be grafted inwardly into the hearts of the hearers, and lastly for those who should confess their sins and offer up their prayers and praises to Almighty God within the place might have true pardon and be enlightened and sanctified by the Holy Spirit so that they might be able to serve and worship Him here below. Then the Bishop standing in front of the altar with his pastoral staff in his hand solemnly pronounced the dedication words "By virtue of our sacred office in the church of God we do now dedicate and set apart from profane and common uses this church under the name of St. Michael and All Angels in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost." Amen.

The special hymn for the dedication of churches No. 395 was then sung, at the conclusion of which the Bishop gave a most helpful and instructive address. After which hymn 242 "We love the place O God" was sung, and during the singing of it the offertory in aid of the building fund was taken which amounted to £11 3s. 8d. and after the blessing pronounced by the Bishop from the altar, the thanksgiving hymn No. 379 "Now thank we all our God" was sung, and so ended a most impressive service, which will long be kept in remembrance by all who were able to attend.

The special gifts for the church were:—Altar and rails, Rev. C. B. Mirrlees; altar linen, Nurse Cross Walcho, N.S.W.; altar frontal, Rev. C. F. Hall; altar cross and baptismal shell, Croydon Church Council; altar vases, Georgetown Sunday School teachers; cedar prayer desk and lectern, Rev. A. Hassall; crumets, Mr. P. Sloan, Georgetown; book markers, Mr. R. D. Stewart.

The first service in the church was the celebration of Holy Communion at half-past 7 on Christmas morning, the Bishop being celebrant. Morning prayer and a second celebration was at 11 o'clock, the Bishop preaching.

Sunday, St. Stephens Day, was a busy one for the Bishop. He celebrated at half-past 7, read the lessons and matts, spoke to the children in the afternoon, read the lessons and preached at evensong, at which service the church was full and was very hearty throughout "Onward Christian Soldiers" was sung as a processional. On Tuesday evening, 28th, the Bishop spoke on religious instruction in state schools, and left us by coach on Wednesday for Croydon, leaving many happy remembrances both by his words and actions behind. On his next visit we hope to have a band of young soldiers of Christ ready for the sacred rite for confirmation.

Bible in State Schools.

"SIMULTANEOUS SUNDAY."

The executive of the Bible in State Schools League having requested that the last Sunday in January be observed simultaneously throughout Queensland by those Churches in sympathy with the movement as a day of prayer for divine assistance and when the movement shall be brought before the congregations, intimations have been received that the proposal has been approved by the Archbishop of Brisbane, the President of the Methodist Conference of Queensland, the President of the German Lutheran Synod of Queensland, Bishop White of Carpentaria, Bishop Frodsham of North Queensland, Bishop Halford of Rockhampton, Brigadier Winter commanding officer of the southern province of the Salvation Army, and Major Ross commanding officer of the northern province of the Salvation Army.

Rev. John Prunard M.A., has been appointed Rector of Croydon in succession to Rev. C. B. Mirrlees M.A.

Impressions of Trubananman Mission Mitchell River.

My third visit to Trubananman Mission Station has left me with some very definite ideas.

I have learned something of native life. have watched and approved of the methods adopted to increase the value and happiness of that life and here experience ends and theories, ill-defined and possibly impracticable, step in.

I saw the mission station in touch more or less with perhaps two hundred and fifty of the thousand natives within its borders.

I saw the men and women being raised from the savagery of their life in the bush and made manly and womanly by the influences of cleanliness, of good food, of work and of discipline. I saw the children responding to mental training and I saw how over and above all else a dim conception of Love and Hope was beginning to fight against the lower animal nature, to contend with terrible superstitious fears, and to bring self-restraint and self-respect into play amongst the natives.

It is a great work and worthy of all a man's, nay of a nation's energy although (or is it because?) the proportion to be raised is as the one to the ninety-nine who need no such help.

The factors employed in the work at Trubananman consist largely in appeals to the strong innate sense of fairness in the natives and later, to their common sense. An appreciation of humour helps on the situation at times and the idea of family life and family responsibilities is slowly gaining a footing.

The married couples' huts, business meetings of men and women, and the putting a man who has shown promise in charge of a piece of work, all help towards the desired end.

The services in Chapel which begin and end each day's work and the family prayers in huts or quarters are beginning to be more than a superstitious form; the natives are learning that there are other than evil powers at the back of things, that they have a claim on a good Spirit for protection and that in return, certain demands are made of them.

Work is naturally the great means of development. Every day the men line up for orders and set about their tasks contentedly. Building and agriculture, care of gardens and live stock give employment to all.

The architecture of the station is purely local and original. Split pandanus is nailed on each side of the frame-work of the building and the interstices filled with mud. Pandanus leaves form the roof. The houses are white-washed and are clean, cool and durable.

Agriculture is, for want of materials, still in its infancy. It is essential that the station should be self-supporting in the matter of food supplies and cultivation must be enormously developed.

The land is capable of producing almost any tropical plant, cassava, cotton, corn, coffee, pine-apples, bananas, sweet potatoes, tobacco, cocoa-nuts and so on. Irrigation by dams and wells will give a rich return.

Of course there are always difficulties and failures. Last year, owing to a late and heavy wet season the crops of corn and pumpkins were ruined when all but ripe.

The banks of a dam were eaten or riddled through by crabs and all the water swept away. But every farmer has these troubles. If the station had a fair start in the matter of farming equipment, plough-horses, harness, plough, corn-sower and so forth, there would soon be no need to do what had to be done this year—send many of the people “walk about” i.e. back to the bush to do for themselves as there was no means of keeping them on the station.

Cattle should be the mainstay of the station; with 5000 head Trubananman as the head station would keep many an out-station going. Of the 5000 head the station now possesses under 50. All the splendid cattle land is lying useless at present—we hope not for long.

The next forward move on the Reserve must be the establishment of branch or out-stations. It will be otherwise impossible to come in contact with the tribes on the magnificent or on the Mitchell waters.

As the training of the natives at the head station progresses it will become possible to send out married couples as caretakers and gardeners and as efficient helpers, in interpreting for and bringing in people to be taught at the Mission.

A pound of flour, a quarter pound of rice per diem, an occasional tin of treacle, a few yards of print—this is what it costs to help a native to better himself, and make the wilderness blossom. The immediate task before the mission is that of converting these nomadic hunting tribes into a settled agricultural community.

It is not worth while refuting the stupid argument which will intrude itself here “Why not leave the natives alone?” If they could be left alone we might agree to say nothing, but as cattle stations are pressing upon them from every side and railways may soon be cutting up their hunting grounds we may leave that argument once and for ever.

Two of many problems may be considered here.

The work must be extended so as to embrace all Australian aborigines; it must be a national work entrusted by the nation to the churches. How is this best to be done? Look at the map, see the coast line of the Gulf, its large islands, look at the Northern Territory, its coast line broken by magnificent rivers, look down the N. East and N. West coasts of Australia—there is plenty of scope for Australians to do something for their own people.

This is however a matter chiefly of ways and means backed by goodwill and energy. Few will deny that it is the duty of Australia and Australians to ensure the original inhabitants of the land a “fair deal.” The second problem is more difficult of solution.

Is it to our interests that the native race be allowed to die out? Is there not plenty of use for them in the tropical climate where they can do work which a white man could scarcely take up without detriment to his health?

Ask the cattle station managers how they would manage without native stockmen.

Comparatively few Australians know anything of the conditions of life in the tropical north, it is therefore difficult for them to form an opinion in the matter which would carry weight.

To those who believe—if only from utilitarian considerations—that it is to Australia's advantage to strengthen and raise the aborigines—comes the question of the necessity for an influx of fresh blood into the race.

Those who have visited the islands of Torres Strait can testify to the fine results produced by marriages between South Sea Islanders and Torres Strait natives. The children of these unions are excellently equipped for the work of developing their rich islands—strong, intelligent, adaptable, resourceful.

Without them what use would the islands be? One needs only to think of the few white people who have chosen to settle on one or another of them, and the question is answered or waived. So it would be on the mainland. A wise infusion of fresh blood South Sea or Papuan let us say, would give us an equally useful people there. There would be no rivalry with the white race. We are not likely to have America's problem to face. We need not fear to act justly and kindly to the natives. The danger with us would be in denying them their rights. May these matters be carefully considered by all Australians before it is too late to act.

Croydon.

The Rev. C. B. Mirrlees and Mrs. Mirrlees said good-bye to their parishioners at a social held in the Masonic Hall, Croydon, on Nov. 10th. There was dancing and music after which Mr. T. Waram, the parishioner's warden, gave expression to the deep feeling of regret at their departure. It would be difficult to find their substitutes. They had worked unselfishly and well, and had given liberally and ostentatiously. He hoped that they would be happy and prosperous wherever they lived, and assured them of the admiration and affection which the people of the district entertained for them. On behalf of the church, he presented to Mr. Mirrlees a gold medallion, and to Mrs. Mirrlees a gold cross, both being made of Croydon metal.

Mr. Mirrlees, in replying, thanked his congregation very heartily for their kind words and gifts. He was glad that the people had worked so well with him during his residence in Croydon, and was indeed sorry to leave them. He would be pleased to see and welcome any of them who might make a trip to the Old Country.

After refreshments and a short conversation, the company dispersed at midnight.

The following were the singers and their songs:—Miss May Shore, “All in the hush of twilight;” Miss May Hosking, “The dear home songs;” Mr. D. P. Viles, “True till death;” Mr. K. L. Viles, “The Romany Lass;” Mr. W. H. Stephens, “Queen of the earth;” Mr. F. W. Cuthbert, “When other lips” and “Eileen Alannah;” Mr. W. G. Horne, “Anchored.” The accompanists were Mrs. K. L. Viles, Miss Gill, and Miss Hosking, Messrs. W. G. Horne (piano), and J. Wheeler (violin), played for the dances.

The refreshments were served by Mesdames Maslen, Greig, Rennon, and Willock, and the Mrs. Amy and Florence Gill, and Miss Connie Clough.

The Rector and Mrs. Mirrlees left Croydon on November 12 in time to catch the Dugong for Thursday Island. There was a large crowd of members and children of the congregation at the railway station.

The Rev. John Pranker, the present rector, arrived on November 13th, having met

Mr. and Mrs. Mirtlees at Normanton. Mr. C. H. Maslen, the Rector's Warden, was at the station to receive him, and introduced him at once to Mr. T. Waram, the people's warden, Mr. W. H. Stephens, Mr. E. D. Harries, Mr. A. B. Murray of the Church Council, and other members of the congregation. For several days the thermometer registered over 100deg. of heat, which was very trying after a cool voyage. However, soon after his arrival, Mr. Prankerd visited Golden Gate, and is making himself known to his parishioners.

Thursday Island Notes.

SCRIPTURE UNION.

On the evening of Nov. 22nd Deaconess Buchanan, gave a very pleasant and instructive evening to the members of the Scripture Union in Thursday Island.

The gathering was characteristic; quite young boys and girls sat side by side with their elders as members of the union.

The Vicar addressed the gathering and said that the union established over fifteen years ago in Thursday Island showed wonderful vitality and steady growth. He said that a great feature of the Union is that its vitality is quite independent of meetings, of which there have been very few since Deaconess Buchanan ceased to be a resident of Thursday Island.

He then pointed out to the members that they can and should be of great help in The Bible in State schools movement.

Mrs. Mackenzie who has belonged to the Scripture Union since she was a child, followed with a most encouraging and interesting address in which she showed how her membership had helped not only herself, but others, especially the sick with whom she had come in contact.

Deaconess Buchanan then reviewed the year's work, and spoke appreciatively of three members Trixie Bebrouth, Laurie Zabel and Charlie Rotumah, who had passed away during the year.

Two new members added their names to the roll, and Mrs. Jones then spoke, connecting three thoughts.—(1) Remember now Thy Creator in the days of Thy Youth; (2) The mill will never grind with the water that is past; (3) The Gods help those who help themselves. The members then enjoyed the refreshments Deaconess Buchanan had provided, and the meeting ended with a very pleasing show from her magic lantern.

MISS ROBSON'S FAREWELL.

It is a good thing that one is able to hide one's feelings of sadness of farewell behind music, flowers and refreshments; so that what might have been a somewhat sober function, had every appearance of gaiety.

Much thanks is due to the committee who so successfully collected the contents of the purse of gold presented to Miss Robson, and who organized such a good programme for the evening.

The band played so well and every item on the programme was excellent.

We could not help lapsing into sadness during the interval when Mr. Mackenzie (chairman of the Shire Council) read and presented an illuminated address to Miss Robson; the Vicar followed by presenting the purse to Miss Robson and making an appreciative speech in which he spoke warmly of Miss Robson's work in the Diocese and in the parish in particular.

On behalf of the men of the R.A.A. stationed at Thursday Island, Sergeant Thomas presented an address and a purse of gold, as "An appreciation of Miss Robson's goodness to them."

It was pleasing to see so many children in the gathering—one of whom, a toddler—showed his intimate relationship with the lady of the evening—for just as she was about to move towards the stage to reply to the addresses, he ran across the room and climbed into her arms.

Miss Robson appeared to gather courage from her comrade in arms and made a little speech expressive of her heartfelt thankfulness for the kindness she had received during her three and a-half years stay at Thursday Island. She said she should never forget her Thursday Island friends, and we are sure they will not forget her. Many good wishes for happiness in her new work at Sydney follow her.

Miss Robson's Japanese friends had previously entertained her to a farewell tea at the Japanese Club and had presented her with a purse of money.

THE GOLDEN OFFERTORY.

We publish the result of the effort to raise funds by straight-out giving which was brought to a successful issue on Christmas Day, when the contents of the Christmas boxes were offered together with the Christmas offerings for the Service of God.

The results are as follows:—Christmas Day Offertories £9 2s. 9d.; by Christmas Boxes plus a donation of £1 1s., £8 18s. 5d.; total, £18 1s. 2d.

BAND OF HOPE.

The last meeting of the year was held on Tuesday, November 30th, and took the form of a social evening.

The members and helpers to the number of about 80 assembled in the Parish Institute at 7.30 p.m. A most enjoyable evening was spent. "Musical chairs" caused great fun and after such strenuous exertions a magic lantern was much appreciated.

The magic lantern exhibition provided by Mr. Field will long be remembered and after nearly one and a-half hours there was a deep sigh of regret as the last picture was announced. Mr. Field, well known in the North for his work as lay reader and as a master of the Francis Pritt, is on a visit to Thursday Island and Torres Straits. He is evidently an expert in photography and lantern slides. The members of the Band of Hope showed their appreciation by vociferous cheering at the close of the entertainment.

Refreshments kindly prepared by the Band of Hope workers brought the evening to a close at 10 p.m. A downpour of tropical rain greeted the juveniles on their journey home.

CHRISTMAS SERVICES.

The cathedral, which had been beautifully decorated for the festival, was well attended on Christmas Day. We are glad to note an improvement in the attendance at the early morning services. The church was crowded at the 10 a.m. service. The cadets were present at this service.

In the evening, as in past years, there was a carol service very well rendered by an augmentee choir. Mrs. Broadbent sang as a solo the carol "When Christ was born of Mary free" and Mr. Cairns sang "Nazareth."

We thank them for excellent renderings. We have heard many words of approval of the services and music of the Christmas Festival. We thank all who helped. Mr. A. S. Cairns presided at the organ and his assistance was no small factor in making the services what they were. We look back upon a very happy Christmas, favoured as is not often the case by beautiful weather.

MOTHERS' UNION.

The last meeting for the year was held on the fourth Friday of November. Mrs. Mackenzie clearly and ably demonstrated sick-room nursing with a real bed and a sham patient. Our best thanks to the lecturer. Mrs. Milman, our President, was much missed; we hope she will be with us for the first meeting of next year, the fourth Friday of March, 1916.

We believe that during this year, our meetings, together with the quarterly services in the Cathedral, have helped those who have attended; they have made us think more on the things that matter, and we believe that the thinking will not be barren of fruit, for example it may be easy to direct our children to read their Bible and to say their prayers, but our Union holds up a higher ideal, it says "Read with them;" "Pray with them;" to some of us this means breaking new ground, but some of us have set to work.

We are also leaving to work beyond ourselves and our children, and in small ways we are trying to help others less fortunate than ourselves.

The keenness of some of our members for the Union may be gauged from the fact that some have not missed one meeting since the beginning.

Acknowledgement of Subscriptions.

The Secretary of the Carpentarian begs to acknowledge with thanks the following subscriptions to the paper. Mrs. Pritt, Mr. Kashiwagi, Mrs. King, (Camden) 2s. Miss V. Gibbins 3s. 6d. Mr. Ogilvie 6s.

Notice.

The Secretary of the Carpentarian begs to notify to its readers that any subscriptions or donations to the Diocese or to special work therein, will be received in Melbourne by Miss Clarke, The Chapter House, and in Sydney by Miss Paige, A.B.M. Office.

THE DIOCESE.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east, by the Northern Territory on the west, and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19 deg. 30 min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east par. 144 and thence N. to lat. S. 16 deg. 40 min., and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory of South Australia, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 q. miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 16,500 whites, 7,000 Japanese, Chinese and other aliens, and 35,000 aborigines. The white population is chiefly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre N. of Cap. York.

FINANCE.

The Diocese has no endowment beyond the Bishop's income of £300 per annum.

MISSIONS.

Missions are carried on among the Japanese at Thursday Island, among the S. Sea Islanders at Thursday Island Mosman, and Moa, and among the aborigines on the Mitchell and Roper Rivers.

SPECIAL OFFERTORIES.

On Easter Day the offertories are given to the Clergyman of the Parish, and on Good Friday to the Australian Board of Missions.

BUILDING REGULATIONS.

Plans for the building or alteration of Churches, Church Rooms, and Rectories must be submitted to the Bishop for approval before any contract is entered into, but such approval does not imply any Diocesan responsibility for the cost of the same.

No alteration may be made in any consecrated building without a faculty from the Bishop.

FROM MARRIAGE REGULATIONS.

2. No marriage may be celebrated otherwise than by banns or by Episcopal license.

4. No Surrogate may issue a license for, or any clergyman celebrate the marriage of, any divorced person whatsoever without reference to the Bishop, and permission obtained from him.

5. No marriage may be celebrated otherwise than in a Church or accustomed place of public worship except by express permission of the Bishop; provided that in urgent cases, founded on special circumstances, when reference to the Bishop is practically impossible, the clergyman shall act on his discretion, and forthwith report the circumstances to the Bishop.

7. The authorised fee for the Bishop's license is £3 3s. The Surrogate is authorised to retain for his own use this fee, with the exception of 10s. 6d., which is payable to the Church Management Fund. Where only £2 2s. or a smaller sum is paid, the Surrogate is authorised to retain three-fourths of the fee paid.

Meeting of Diocesan Council.

A meeting of the Diocesan Council was held at Bishop's House on Saturday March 26th at 5 p.m.

Present the Bishop in the chair, Revs. J. Jones, B.A., and E. J. Nass, M.A., and Messrs. Milman, A. L. Sullivan, Walker, and Wells. The Bishop welcomed Mr. Wells as a new member of the council. The Bishop said that the diocesan expenses for the remaining 10 months of the year would not amount to less than £900, including the cost of the Francis Pritt. The estimated subscriptions and grants to the diocese did not amount to this sum, so that care and economy would be necessary.

The Bishop then moved the following resolutions which were seconded by Mr. Milman, and after the members of the council had spoken strongly in support, carried unanimously. That this meeting of the Diocesan Council desires to place on record its sense of the great loss sustained by the diocese by the departure for England of Rev. J. Jones B.A., Abbot of the Cathedral and Administrator of the Diocese in the absence of the Bishop. Mr. Jones had voted a vast amount of unpaid labour to the missionary and other work of the diocese, and to the superintendence of the Francis Pritt, and has carried out his many diocesan duties with conspicuous ability and success, and the members of the Council in conjunction with the Bishop of the diocese best thank Mr. Jones most heartily for his great services and to wish him every happiness in his new sphere of work, and is glad that he will still be connected with the diocese as Comptroller in England.

That the thanks of the Diocesan Council be given to Mrs. Jones for her many and unceasing voluntary labours on behalf of the missionary work of the Diocese during the last year and a-half years, and the heartiest good wishes for her future welfare and happiness. It was resolved to give an increase of wages to the S. Sea catechist at Moa as his present amount was considered insufficient, and to insure the crew of the Francis Pritt under the Employers' Liability Act. A sub-committee consisting of the Vicar of Thursday Island and Messrs. Wells and Sullivan was appointed to consider the purchase of a cutter for Moa and the charter of a boat to take stores to the Mitchell while the Francis Pritt was at the Roper. The Bishop said in the increasing amount of business detail in the work of the diocese he should look more and more to the help of the Diocesan Council.

Mitchell River Mission.

We are glad to report that all the missionaries of the Mitchell River Mission at Trabanaman are well, and experienced no trouble during the wet season, although the Mitchell River was in such high flood that the water came into the house at Dunbar Station. The site of the station was selected with much care with a view to possible floods, and seems to have justified its choice. The only trouble was that provisions ran short and many of the natives had to be sent into the bush to get their own food until communications could be re-established. We give some extracts from letters received from Miss Matthews and Miss Pick:—

"We had a very happy Christmas. The boys brought in a quantity of green and flowers and we decorated the Church. It looked very nice. On Christmas Eve a bullock was killed for the mission boys, after tea we had service as usual, then the boys had corroboree till about 11 o'clock, when H. gathered all the mission people, besides a number of camp people together and brought the organ out in the moonlight. We sang, "While Shepherds watched their flocks by night," and H. told them about the shepherds, and the birth of Christ, Bendigo acting as interpreter for the camp natives. About 6 o'clock Christmas morning, we heard a great deal of laughing and talking, the boys were cutting up the bullock; they are very happy people, they always make plenty of amusement out of their work. They all had a big piece given to them for their dinner, it was all gone the next day. Christmas day in the morning the men were all lined up, and they all had new pipes, tobacco, pocket-handkerchiefs, and tin whistles; then came the women, they had beads, hand-mirrors, pocket-handkerchiefs, and some of them had text cards to put up in their huts; after that we had service, singing two Christmas hymns Miss Pick had taught the school children. In the afternoon they had races and competition was very keen, the prize being a handkerchief, and judging by the handkerchiefs worn at evening service I think everybody got a prize, every man, woman and child had one, some wore them on their heads, some over their shoulders like a shawl and others round their necks. We have started a patch-work quilt, and have nearly enough strips made for one. Most of the girls sew very well, and are very fond of it, but I am sorry to say they have no pride in their own dress. We were all very pleased to welcome Mr. Matthews home again. He received such a welcome from the boys they being the first to hear the glad cry from the camp people. They all went out in a body to meet him with spears and womarabs in their hands. As soon as he was near enough they gave a war whoop, rushing to shake his hand. He must have been very tired for he had walked all the way from the coast, but he would not rest until he had spoken to all.

We had a very bright service on Easter Day. At present the agone is a perfect picture with its pretty violet tinted lilies. I use them every day for the church with some light feathery grasses. The week before Easter Annie, one of our married girls, had a baby boy. She was away from us and faithful old Maggie looked after her.

John Grady, who was the first native to come in contact with the mission and who was for a time with the Bishop at Thursday Island, and accompanied the party that founded the Mission, died on March 10th. We had been ill for a long time and at the last was a mere skeleton. Mr. Matthews could not have done more to make John Grady's last hours easier and happier if he had been his own brother. Two of the boys wrapped the body in grass and it was taken into Church early in the morning, and after the first part of the Burial service was said it was laid to rest in the little cemetery at Trabanaman.

Our Easter Gift was a mail which arrived just as we came out of morning service; it was only a small one and should have been here in January. Our next mail should be here next week, and we shall have communication with the outer world again.

St. Paul's, Moa.

[From the first issue of the "St. Paul's, Moa Monthly Magazine," composed and written by the children of the school.]

"Thursday night, April 7th, 1910, we were all asleep when four men came in a dinghy from Mabuiag because, we are sorry to say, their cutter sank on the other side of Moa Peak during a sudden squall that blew in the night. They were on their way to Badu. We are very thankful that God saved their lives, but we are very sorry that they lost their boat with all their things, their clothes, their shell and a pearl."

"Some of our own men are putting up four new houses this month."

"Our two Councillors are sick with fever."

The contributors are Kosea, Bana, Mary Bann, Mindrai, and Alice.

From a letter by Deaconess Buchanan:—"The school was under difficulties during the wet season, as speaking and hearing are impossible, as you know, when the rain is heavy on an iron roof. Yesterday for a reading lesson I took the hymn "Conquering Kings, etc.," and was explaining and questioning "From the foes they captive make" and a boy promptly suggested "all same little girl belong Naaman's wife." I thought this very apt, as I had not asked for a case in point and was simply questioning as to the meaning of words. These are little encouragements. God does teach them to remember His word. Sometimes in other lessons they fit in an illustration from the Bible. I was teaching spelling from the black-board to a young class. Some of them cannot pronounce "ship" and "chip," two Primer words, and I was showing them to put their tongue between their teeth; they always spell the words wrong. The elder class afterwards said to me (they were doing their work at the time). "Teacher, that small class all same Sibboleth." It is a long time since they read that, but it showed they remembered. I am very anxious that they may remember to do, and you must pray that they may obey the teaching they learn with their heads, "doers of the word not hearers only." It is a very needful prayer for Moa for all, teachers and taught, children and adults."

A Letter From Moa.

Dear Mrs. Nash,—"I am sorry Mr. Nash had such a horrid trip here, rough, in all senses wet, mosquitoes, hurried, and all very sad saying good-bye to Mr. Jones. The children asked me what Mr. Nash would question them about on his next visit, I said "impossible to say! but probably some thing very hard." A small boy said "Teassher all same like Queen of Sheba." I said "Yes, but with very different results." Some of my Moa men told me you took the "Boys" class in the Home, and I learnt about Arthur David, and his baptism, so you see they carried away your good words. I hope you will always take that class, however small. Large rain and mosquitoes have been terrible. I am glad Mr. Nash has not been here. As I was sitting in my grass house room resting before afternoon school, a little native girl brought me in her slate to correct and said, "Oh! Teassher, big snake!" A d sure enough he was curled up above my head on the rafter. I sent her flying for a man who came and speared him to the ground. He was such a big one. I can't think how he came in unnoticed; this was a few days ago, and I find myself looking up and around every time the grass shakes or moves. Thank you for your kind note and lovely papers; the children are so much interested in the Paris floods, as they are learning a little about countries in Europe and know the River Seine, and the comet which we see very early in the morning eastward. I am now sending the illustrated paper to the lightships "The Treasury" to the Mitchell River. It is kind of you indeed to spare them for me. One of our men came to ask me to write to a Mission Station to get him a wife: he heard of a native widow who he thinks would suit him. I have written and am hoping my words will wake up a warm response of love on her part. My last effort for him was fruitless as the lady then in view preferred to remain as she was. I almost feared my words were not sufficiently inducive. He is such a fine old fellow, and I have had him so ill with fever, he certainly needs someone to manage for him.—Yours, very sincerely,

F. G. BUCHANAN, (Deaconess).

One of my Moa lads on a diving boat called here on Sunday, and told me "Mr. Nash speak good word long me;" he must have been in a class.

Thursday Island Notes.

EASTER VESTRY.

The Easter Meeting was held on April 14th, the Bishop presiding over a good attendance of parishioners. The Churchwardens submitted a report and statement of accounts showing a balance of £2 12s. 2d., the total receipts for the year being £817 17s. 4d., of which the Society of the Treasury contributed £58 18s. 9d. The report of the late Vicar (Rev. J. Jones) was read, giving a full account of the work of the parish organisation during the year.

The Vicar (Rev. E. J. Nash) nominated Mr. Wells as Churchwarden for the ensuing year, and the meeting elected Lieut. Miles, R.A.A., as People's Warden.

The Parochial Church Council was then appointed. The Vicar nominated Mr. H. Milman and Lieut. Macdonald. For the remaining four places on the Council the meeting nominated seven:—Messrs. Sullivan, Mitchell, Cairns, Aiken, Morey, Allen, and Armstrong. A ballot was taken and resulted as follows:—Mr. Cairns, 26, Mr. Sullivan 21, Mr. Mitchell 17, Mr. Morey 16. These four were declared elected. The meeting concluded with prayer.

St. Michael and All Angels' Church, Georgetown.

Our Easter services this year were indeed very hearty, the bell which was given us by the residents of Oak Park Station was rung for the first time. Naturally there was some excitement as to what it would sound like, as one had never been heard before in Georgetown, but in spite of a strong wind blowing from the town it was heard distinctly everywhere and was generally pronounced a success. It is earnestly to be hoped that it will also have a desired effect in calling the people together to worship in God's House for many years to come.

Not having a priest with us we were unable to receive the Holy Communion, but we hope that even if we were debarred from receiving our Risen Lord at His Feast, many did receive Him in spirit on that day.

Matins was said at 9 a.m. with a fairly good congregation, Mr. Hassell (the curate in charge) took the plain facts of the Resurrection as his subject for his address.

In the afternoon the Sunday School prizes were presented by Mrs. Munt. We were glad to see so many of the parents present—in fact the church was full, one side of children and the other of parents. After a short service Mr. Hassell spoke to the children on the "Witnesses of the Resurrection," and his words were listened to attentively by all, he then asked Mrs. Munt to present the prizes. We were sorry that our superintendent, Miss Plate, was not with us, particularly as the cause was her having to undergo a slight operation. We are glad to hear that she is well on the way to recovery, and hope soon to see her back as our superintendent.

Evensong was sung at 8 p.m. with a very full church, Mr. Hassell taking at this service "The Joys of Easter" for his address. It was the first time the service had been sung here and it was indeed done very sweetly, and we hope soon to be able to sing the service at least every Sunday evening.

The first Easter meeting to inaugurate the district as a parish, was held after evensong on Sunday, April 10th. Mr. Hassell reserved his nomination for clergyman's warden to a future date. Our good old trusty friend and helper, Mr. Munt, was elected people's warden, and the council consist of Mesdames Munt, Geddes, Misses M. Plate, V. Cook, Irene Watkins, and Messrs. Wilks and Everett.

The Bishop arrived from Croydon on Thursday, April 14th, and on Friday evening conducted a preparation class for Holy Communion. On Sunday there was a celebration of Holy Communion at 7.30 a.m., with thirteen communicants. At 10 a.m. the Bishop addressed the Sunday School and preached at matins. At 11 a.m., after matins, he dedicated the new bell, and a midday celebration followed with four communicants. In the evening he confirmed three male and one female candidates and on the Monday was present at the first meeting of the newly constituted Parochial Council. He left on Wednesday for Croydon.

Croydon.

The rector, Rev. J. Pranker, M.A., has been laid up in the hospital for six weeks with typhoid fever. He is now well again after a fortnight's change to Normanton.

Rev. H. Ayscough visited Croydon and took the services on Sunday, April 3rd, and the Bishop on April 10th and 24th. The other services were conducted by Messrs. E. Harries and Warham. The excellent choir has been a great help during the enforced absence of the rector.

The Easter meeting was held after evensong on Sunday, April 24th, the rector being in the chair. Mr. E. D. Harries was nominated as Rector's warden and Mr. Warham re-elected people's warden. The following were appointed members of the Parochial Council:—Messrs. Maslen, J. Chandler, H. Chandler, Steeven Murray, and Wilson. The balance sheet shows a slight increase on the receipts for the previous year.

The Bishop visited Golden Gate and preached there as well as at Croydon.

Normanton.

The parish deeply regrets the departure for Port Darwin of Rev. H. Ayscough. Mr. Ayscough has won general affection and led the affairs of the parish in perfect order.

The Easter meeting was held on March 30th. Messrs. G. Darvall and R. Sherr were appointed Rector's and people's wardens respectively, and the following were appointed Parochial Councillors:—Messrs. Locke, Scott, A. S. Scott, Schipke, and Horne.

Rev. F. Lane, Thursday Island, arrived on April 8th and took up his work as Mr. Ayscough's successor.

The Bishop, accompanied by the Rev. Pranker, arrived on April 25th and stayed until April 19th. He preached at Evensong on Wednesday April 27th and was afterwards present at a meeting of the Parochial Council.

The Wunderlich lining for the church is arrived, and the east end of the church has been covered, making a vast difference in the pearance of the church. The rest of the church will be done as soon as sufficient funds are in hand to put up the material already in hand.

During the Bishop's stay a series of meditations for the clergy were given in the church by the Bishop, and there was a celebration of Holy Communion on Thursday, April 28th, at 7.30 a.m.

The Daily Religious Instruction Class is well attended and seems to be doing excellent work. The Rector of the parish is chaplain of the gaol and his visits are much appreciated by the prisoners.

Normanton Rectory.

The Rectory of St. Peter's, Normanton, was the scene of an impromptu clerical assembly from Monday, April 25th, to Friday, April 29th, as all orders of the ministry were represented by a bishop, a priest, a deacon and the critics by the rectory cat who was heard to declare that she did not think much of bishops who covered their beds with a canvas sheet and left a self-respecting member of the household no place to sleep on, and that times were not now what they used to be. The day began with matins at 7.30 a.m., after which the whole party, minus the cat, adjourned to breakfast at the hotel as the present occupant does not, like his predecessor, add co king to his other accomplishments. We were received with vituperative remarks by the cat on our return. She said she could not see why men wanted to go away from home for meals, with the result that the cupboard was so bare that she thought of shifting her quarters very soon, as she had not even succeeded in finding a church mouse. She did not know what Normanton was coming to. We soothed her feelings as best we could and then bishop and deacon proceeded to catechize the Religious Instruction Class which meets at 8.45 daily. It only numbers about 30, but the children are most attentive and regular and show signs of very careful teaching. Then each adjourned to his own work until 11 a.m. when we met to study the Greek text of the Pastoral Epistles. The deacon hazarded an opinion that it is a pity that they were not written in English, but was promptly suppressed; and withdrew into a position of unspoken protest; the priest asked thoughtfully simple questions with an air of candour and innocence and the bishop tried to answer them with an air of benign ignorance. The time passed quickly till the dinner hour, the return from which was emphasised by further protests from the cat who had found the morning uninteresting. In the afternoon the bishop and deacon found duties in the parish and the priest, who was pretending to be quite well and strong after six weeks in the hospital with typhoid, took a stretcher in the stable and the latest work of a modern socialistic and secular prophet, which he studied so diligently that whenever we asked him how he was getting on we found him still at the same page. The evening was spent in a devotional meeting in the church with meditations on Our Lord's great Pastoral Prayer and a stretcher on the veranda not unvisited by mosquitoes brought the day's work to a close.

Easter Offerings.

The Bishop again received in Easter week a cheque for £100 for the work of the diocese from a gentleman who wishes to be anonymous. It is needless to say that it was very welcome as was also another Easter offering of £10 10s.

It is somewhat remarkable that whereas an anonymous friend of the diocese gave £100 in January 1906, and 1907, and 1908, and was unable to continue his subscription beyond that year, in the following years 1909 and 1910 his place was unexpectedly filled by another donor who had no knowledge of the former or of the fact that his subscription was no longer available. Truly God has supplied our need.

Easter.

[This article should have appeared in our last number.]

The recurrence of the Church's greatest festival brings to us ever thoughts of hope. When we contemplate our own failures and shortcomings, the coldness, indifference and worldliness of so many professing Christians and the bitterness of outward attacks on the faith there is much to daunt us. Who of us can regard our position with complacency when we remember that out of the number of professing churchmen only a handful are regular communicants, that drunkenness, immorality and gambling are rampant, that so far the State has ignored God in the education of the children, that latitudinarianism is lauded as a virtue and absence of convictions is the readiest passport to popularity?

Easter is the best of antidotes to the depression of spirit caused by the thought of these things.

What could have been more hopeless than the outlook of the Church, on the eve of the first Easter Day? Christ was dead and buried and the Apostles scattered in despairing terror. The best and most understanding had given up hope, what must have been the condition of the rank and file? The Church could not apparently have been in a worse plight till Easter Day. That made all the difference. The resurrection of Christ was the resurrection of His Church, and over and over again has the story been repeated. Over and over again by the craft and wiles of the devil and by the carnal will and frailty of her members has the Church sunk from her ideal, and over and over again has the resurrection power of Christ roused her to a new and higher life. In the fourth century she was so nearly overwhelmed with a flood of false doctrine, and worldly policy that it could be said with a show of truth that one loyal champion stood for catholic truth against the world. Again in the eighth century she was in imminent danger of being crushed by Mohammedanism. In the tenth century and in the fifteenth she nearly perished from internal abuses and in the eighteenth Voltaire ventured on the prophecy that in forty years Christianity would be extinct. Yet the Church has ever risen stronger for the purification of outward persecution, and wiser for the discipline of internal suffering. God has never left her and Christ has always fulfilled His promise that the gates of hell shall not prevail against her.

As it has been during the centuries of the past so will it be in the future. Experience teaches the marvellous power of recovery, the latent energy of the Church. We cannot prevent her progress but it lies with us to hasten or retard it, and Easter reminds us how much we may do if we will act in faith, how sudden, how bewildering to enemies, how startling even to the faithful may be the resurrection of spiritual life.

In spite of much to depress it is undeniable that the last generation has witnessed a marvellous revival of spiritual activities in our own Church. It rests with us to carry on the good work and to repeat the message in terms understood of our generation. Easter bids us awake and arise, and hope and be strong.

Pearls.

Above is an angry-storm swept sea, but below a pearl is growing in the calm depths. So beneath "the waves of this troublesome world" does the soul grow in silence and in peace.

The oyster has a rough repulsive shell and gross shapeless flesh, but it contains the purest pearl of great price, so the body may be ugly and the flesh weigh down the incorruptible spirit, but all the while be fashioned a soul of the purest lustre.

The pearl is formed by resistance to foreign bodies, grit or sand which vex and trouble from within, so the soul is formed by resistance to inner evil and if there were no evil to resist it is doubtful if the soul could grow at all.

The shape, size and value of the pearl depend on the amount of the resistance to the foreign body within the shell, so the growth, perfection, and beauty of the soul depend on the amount of its resistance to sin and to impatience of suffering.

Sometimes a piece of metal, say a cross, is dropped into the shell to induce the formation of a pearl of strange and beautiful shape and exceptional value, so God sometimes drops a heavy cross into our lives in order to develop the beauty and perfection of the soul.

The exquisite lustre of the pearl is derived from the substance of the dull shapeless flesh of the oyster so the bodily nature forms the raw material from which the soul grows into beauty. It must therefore be revered as the means to the higher beauty of the soul.

The pearl is of extraordinary hardness and durability yet it is made out of the soft perishable flesh of the oyster, so the soul which is eternal grows out of the body which is perishable. The full beauty and value of the pearl is not seen until the death of the oyster, so "it doth not yet appear what we shall be."

Aboriginal Traditions.

The Goongabee tribe near Cape Grafton has traditions of two great beings named Ghuongah and Bator who lived in remote ages. The first named was the teacher of the art of war and the inventor of the totem divisions. He offended the great spirit who in revenge caused the waters of the Pacific to rise and flood the country. Ghuongah with his two wives fled to the top of the mountain and at last stopped the flood by making a fire and heating stones redhot and rolling them into the water. Bator was the inventor of fire. He tried for a long time to make it by rubbing two sticks together, but in vain, until at last he uttered an exclamation of despair, upon which a small black bird appeared in the sky bearing on its back a live coal. This bird has ever since borne a bright red spot on its back, and is still common at Yarrabah.

The King's Death.

The heavy boom of the minute guns at Thursday Island proclaiming the sad news of the King's death could not but awake a responsive echo in every heart.

That the one man who had the confidence and esteem of all parties in England should be taken away in the very hour of the greatest constitutional struggle that England has seen for a century; that the commanding personality who had won the noble title of the Peacemaker of Europe should suddenly have to resign his office at a time of anxious tension and much mutual suspicion among the nations, is one of those mysteries of God which it is idle for us to try to fathom. The writer saw the King at Windsor a couple of years ago, bright, alert, courteous, full of energy of service which seemed as though it might burn brightly for at least a dozen years.

It is no use disguising the fact that the times are critical for our Mother Land. Foreign jealousy and competition without are met by a country torn by internal dissension and bitter party strife, with results that none can foresee. We can only pray that the loss of one of England's greatest assets in the shape of her trusted and experienced ruler may help to bring home to people the thought of the need of confidence in an arm that is stronger than that of flesh, and the need of justifying that confidence by a curtailment of growing luxury and a deeper attention to higher things.

We offer a loyal welcome to the new King, and pray that the Divine aid may enable him to fulfil the duties of his high office in a way that befits the descendant of Queen Victoria and King Edward VII.

The Referendum.

Against expectation, in spite of faint hearts and fears, in the face of keen opposition we have won.

A friend in England who knows Australia well, writing a month before the elections said: "It will be a glorious miracle if you win." We have won; and those who know how much faithful prayer has been offered will be least disposed to deny that there was in the voting the influence of a higher power than that of man. The numbers are not absolutely complete at the time of writing, but approximately 70,000 voted "Yes" and 52,000 "No", making a total of 122,000 votes recorded as against 160,000 recorded in the Senate elections on the same day.

We have gained a great victory, and gained it without bitterness or strife, but it is only a step towards the final struggle, and we must relax no effort until Parliament has expressed the will of the people in just and efficient legislation. Every member of Parliament and would-be member must be given to understand that the electors are on the alert to see whether their wishes are obeyed or flouted. We have no desire whatever to bring this question into politics, only it must be clearly understood that we are not going to throw away the result of years of work and teaching, and that we are in dead earnest and would rather fight the question at every election than allow it to be postponed or shelved.

We are devoutly thankful that there has been no bitterness so far. We want to do full justice to those who cannot see with us. We would rather abate somewhat of our rights than not do them fullest justice; but the decision of the people has been made and we are not going to let it be set aside.

The Primacy.

The Most Rev. John Charles Wright, D.D., Archbishop of Sydney, has been finally elected Primate of Australia and Tasmania. The appointment is in the hands of the Bishops, and on the first count the votes were equally divided between the Archbishops of Brisbane and Sydney. On a fresh vote being taken the Archbishop of Sydney was elected. We are sure that he will worthily fill the high position to which he has been called; and there are so many reasons why it is desirable that the Primacy should remain in Sydney that every conservative instinct is gratified by the result. It is most satisfactory to know that our own Metropolitan stands so high in the esteem and confidence of the Church that in spite of the enormous preponderance of reasons for voting for Sydney, he obtained one-half of the votes of the Bishops. No one who knows him suspects him of any desire for election, and we may be thankful that the extra strain and work has not been laid upon him, as it must inevitably have diminished the time and care which he was able to bestow upon the province.

While, however, we cheerfully and loyally accept the result, and tender to the new Primate our warm assurances of welcome and of confidence, it is both permissible and necessary to make some comments with a view to the conduct of the next election, however much we hope that it may be in the very far-distant future.

In the first place, it is obviously necessary that the method of election should be clearly and strictly defined. This can, of course, be done at the next General Synod. We hope that when this is done the late method of election by post will be absolutely barred. Surely in a matter of such importance the Bishops ought to meet in council and pray for the guidance of the Holy Spirit of God. Some provision might be made for ascertaining the opinion of those who had reasonable excuse for absence, if this were thought desirable; but we hope that it will be the first and last election conducted by the undignified method of postal ballot. In the second place, it ought to be clearly understood whether or no it is needful for General Synod to meet in the See city of the Primate. The disadvantages of meeting in Brisbane or (if W.A. be formed into a Province) in Perth are obvious, but we see no reason why, if the Primate resided in either of these towns, the General Synod should not meet in Sydney or Melbourne, or in the Federal capital. The voting at the late election has clearly shown that the Bishops are not prepared to elect as a matter of course whomsoever the diocese of Sydney may appoint as their Archbishop, and there is therefore much need that the whole situation should be carefully faced and considered in the interests of the entire Church.

Departure of Rev. J. Jones.

On March 29th Rev. J. Jones, B.A., left for England after five and a-half years work for the diocese and the parish of Thursday Island.

We are sometimes tempted to speak as though the Church was losing her hold upon the people, and especially upon the men, but no one who witnessed Mr. Jones's departure and realised the general sorrow of the whole community at losing one who had been so near to the hearts of all could doubt that where the Church is faithfully represented she has lost none of her ancient power. With all Mr. Jones's attraction for men and winning personality, there was absolutely nothing of the popularity seeker in his life or work. He was to all, first and foremost, the parson, the parish priest; and no one ever for a moment forgot it. Many of the results of his work lie deeply hidden, known only to few or to those immediately concerned; but the bright and happy life and cheerful hopefulness of the man, whose whole heart was so evidently in the work of his calling, appealed to all, and have done good service in building up the faith of many who were not directly connected with the Church. His services to the diocese, and especially to its missionary work, were very great and entirely a voluntary addition to his parochial work. From the Bishop to the smallest choir-boy in Thursday Island there are none who do not feel sadly that they have lost a real friend and spiritual helper, and who do not turn their regret into a prayer that God will give to him and his the fullest measure of happiness and blessing for the future.

Experience v. Belief.

There are many reasons why we should believe in God, but the very strongest reason is one which by its nature can primarily appeal only to those who do already believe in Him. It does not, however, follow that the argument can carry no weight with those who have not attained to faith. The argument from "Personal Experience" appeals with extraordinary force to those who have had such experience and to those only, but no wise man refuses to believe the experience of others only on the grounds that it has not been his own.

Let us give a concrete example. Jones, after living in a country town from childhood, suddenly disappears under circumstances, finding of clothes, &c., which lead to the almost inevitable conclusion that he has been drowned when bathing. There are no reasons whatever to suppose that he wishes to abscond or feign death; all the evidence points the other way. All efforts to trace him are vain. A body is ultimately found which all trustworthy witnesses, including the nearest relatives, believe to be his. After a decent interval the law but expresses universal conviction in assuming his death.

Now suppose that twenty years later a contemporary of Jones comes back from his travels and says that he met Jones in a remote village in Persia and talked to him, and was convinced by a hundred little details that could be known only by a schoolmate and contemporary that it was Jones indeed. Then it is clear that if he were known to be an honourable, intelligent and observant man that his evidence as to Jones being alive would have great weight. It would weigh more than the evidence of 4000 of his fellow townsmen that they had never seen or heard anything of Jones for twenty years, and had no reason to believe him alive and many to believe him dead. Nor would his evidence be appreciably weakened even though other fellow townsmen travelled to Persia and returned to say that they had found no trace of Jones, though it would be greatly strengthened if another independent and trustworthy witness said that he also had met Jones, whether in Persia or elsewhere.

Now we may apply exactly the same argument to God. If one honest and trustworthy man says that he has found and talked with God, and received from him not one or two but thousands of answers to his requests and proofs of his presence and power, then the evidence of that man, besides being of overwhelming certainty to himself, has also a claim to general assent far stronger than that of a thousand persons who can only say that they themselves never had such an experience.

For with God the point of the whole matter is that He will only make Himself known in His fulness to His friends. He will not condescend to be sat upon and tried by curious and self-confident critics. He will reveal Himself only to the simple hearted who wish to love and serve Him. "If any man wishes to do His will, he shall know of the teaching," and no one else.

Now it is a fact that not one but thousands of men and women admittedly of the highest and noblest characters and the most self-sacrificing lives that the world has seen, of all nations, characters and types in all ages, as much to-day as ever in the past, have declared and do declare that they have known and spoken with God, and that He has answered them not once or twice but always, continuously, and under every possible variety of mood and circumstance.

The subject of answers to prayer is not an easy one to explain to those who have no experience of it, because they have never prayed in faith, and faith is the great condition of response. Yet tens of thousands of earth's best and purest souls, learned and unlearned alike, tell us their conviction that God does always answer their prayers. Not always, they admit, in the way they expect; not always at once, but very often as they hope and expect, very often at once, but always in the end and more fully and completely and, as they now see, more wisely and lovingly than they had expected.

When we reflect upon it, the evidence is of enormous breadth, weight and complexity. I see no reason for supposing that so many thousands of men and women who testify by their lives to their love of truth and goodness should be conspiring to deceive themselves and others. Whatever have they to gain by it? Would they as rational beings continue to devote hours to a strenuous mental and moral effort which experience would have soon taught them was useless? Why should men and women devote hours to private prayer, and devote more and more time to it as they grow older and more experienced, when there is absolutely no compulsion, unless they had found by experience that it had results worth the effort? If prayer were a delusion there might be a happy response here and there, but for every response there would be a dozen failures: and what soul is there that would not soon become weary of such a barren work? The fact that the best men and women do find happiness and strength and response in prayer, and do tend to pray more and more, is the strongest proof that we have of the existence of a loving Father who responds to prayer.

But we may carry the thought a little further. It is not merely that those who pray do find a response from a higher power to their prayers, but they find in human life a reasonableness and a purpose for which non-Christian or nominally Christian philosophers have looked in vain.

From one point of view life is indeed a dark enigma. The presence and apparently unequal incidence of pain and suffering, the apparent triumphs of evil, the natural corruption of man's heart, the silence of God—all these things trouble and bewilder; yet to the Christian the problem is not insoluble. He has a clue which, if it cannot solve every mystery, can at least solve as much as we need to guide our own life.

A conviction grows upon him, based upon his own experience, that life is reasonable, and from the Christian standpoint much more than tolerable. He sees that, however much pleasure may be a good gift of God to sweeten life, it is not the end and purpose of life. If he feels the presence and pressure of evil, he feels that without the possibility of evil there could be for him no struggle, no triumph, no victory, no good in any real sense of the word; he might be good as a clock is good, but not good as a man is good. Pain and suffering come to him by experience to be not ends but means, means to higher goods and deeper lessons, for the attainment of which they are but a cheap price to pay: nay, the very silence of God, that refusal to speak to the world at large, that patient suffering of insult and wrong is, he seems to see, the necessary condition of the production of faith, that greatest gift of God to man, that purest joy of which the human soul is capable. There are and always have been tens of thousands of faithful men and women who, having chosen not the easy but the hard path, having faced for others far more than their share of the sin and suffering and sorrow of life, declare calmly and unhesitatingly that life is reasonable, that it has an end, a purpose, and a consummation, and that end is good. They declare that not only is this so, but that it is their conviction, so far as their own experience goes, that their own lives for all the sorrow and the suffering could not have been framed and ordered in a better and more perfect way than they have been to secure the high ends which they believe God has in view; and that whatever has been amiss has sprung not from the environment of their lives, however hard and dark that may seem to have been, but from their own failure or wilful refusal to respond aright to the conditions in which they were placed.

We have recently had two striking examples of the way in which even the greatest troubles and sufferings fail to move those whose souls are based in God. Of Bishop Wilkinson it was said by the Bishop of London that he knew no man who seemed to him so like what he thought an incarnation of Jesus Christ would be, yet on this holiest of men there came as the result of the overwork which caused him to resign the See of Truro a trial than which it is impossible to imagine a greater. He believed for nearly two years that there was no hope of his personal salvation, and the result was a melancholy so profound that he was never seen to smile. Yet so profound was his faith that in spite of his conviction that he would himself be no sharer in the joys of heaven, he did not cease to labour so earnestly for the salvation of others that none but his very nearest intimates knew of the cloud that rested on his own soul. He was able to say not only "Though He slay me," but "Though He destroy me body and soul yet will I trust Him, yet will I love and serve Him," and he was rewarded by the lifting of the cloud as suddenly as it came, and the power to devote fifteen more years of the most faithful work of his life to the service of the Church as Bishop of St. Andrew's and Primus of Scotland, and to pass at once in the midst of a speech full of radiant faith into the very presence of God.

The other example is the death of Bishop Awdrey. After a life of hard and faithful missionary service he was obliged to resign his see and come home to linger for two years in the racking pain of a terrible disease. Yet we read with wonder the calm words which he dictated a few days before his death:—

"Perhaps one who is suffering from a painful and incurable disease, which moreover, disables him from former useful work, may be allowed to bear his testimony to the fact that the suffering has not only been a great help to him in the higher spiritual life, but that it contains revelations in regard to what that life means which, so far as he sees, could hardly have been obtained in any other way."

The use which our Lord made of suffering both in Himself and in others seems to forbid our classing it with sin among the works of the devil. I cannot, for example, regard a cancer which gives enforced leisure at the close of life for a recollectedness less compatible with active service, and for the crowning work of patience, either with the Christian Scientist as non-existent in reality and deriving apparent existence only from the sufferer's want of faith, or as an evil out-growing the good which grows from it, or as inflicted in cruelty with evil intent, when in fact the whole period of this earthly life is our childhood, leading on to the full age of the eternal life beyond the grave, and is spent under the guiding hand of a Father who in our education is not less firm than He is wise and loving."

We cannot readily imagine men being called upon to suffer more deeply than these two men. Yet they are but types of thousands of simple unknown souls, who, like them, are convinced of the reasonableness of life in the light of the teaching of Jesus Christ.

We have no right to set aside the facts of religious experience. They are as much facts as the facts of science, and they need as much an explanation. We have one and one only that we believe to be sufficient—the fact of the presence and purpose of God.

Much Misused Proverbs.

TO KNOW ALL IS TO FORGIVE ALL.

This is absurd on the face of it because we never do know all. It is true that much harsh judgement is based upon imperfect knowledge, and it is true that we are to always forgive, but the need of forgiveness is to be based not on the supposition that our brother has really, if we knew all, done no wrong, but on the fact that we ourselves have equally done wrong. If the proverb were true it would mean that there was no such thing as sin in ourselves or in others.

IT WILL BE ALL THE SAME A HUNDRED YEARS
HENCE.

To say this is to deny that events have causes. It is palpably false. Every act, word, and even thought, of to-day affects the future not only for 100 years but for all time. There is not even a shadow of truth in the saying.

THERE IS ONLY ONE ROAD.

This is another palpable fallacy. There may be a thousand lines drawn between two points but there cannot possibly be more than one straight line, therefore to say of people who are obviously going different roads that there is only one road is absurd. They may be all wrong but they cannot all be right. This saying practically denies that there is any such thing as truth at all.

FOR FORMS AND CREEDS LET FOOLS AND BIGOTS FIGHT.
HE CAN'T BE WRONG WHOSE LIFE IS IN THE RIGHT.

Here again is an obvious fallacy. It is very easy to imagine circumstances under which it would pay a man far better in his own interests to lead a right life, but it is false to say that that man is all right because it is in his interest to do right. If his heart and belief are wrong his outwardly correct life is but hypocrisy and will profit him nothing. Even Plato saw this when he gave us his wonderful apologue of the bad man who was honoured and respected and the good man who was despised and crucified, and declared for the latter.

SOWING HIS WILD OATS.

This proverb, often used to excuse youthful sin, carries its own confutation with it. The wild oats sown as seeds will grow wild oats in later years choking and killing the good seed. "Be not deceived, God is not mocked. What a man soweth that shall he also reap. He that soweth to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption."

ONLY HIS OWN ENEMY.

No man can do harm to himself alone. Inasmuch as he lowers his own standard he inevitably lowers the standard of others around him by his example. At best he deprives them of the help they should have received from him, at the worst he drags them down with him. "No man liveth unto himself or dieth unto himself."

Laying the Ghost.

During a confirmation tour in the diocese of Peterborough, Dr. Creighton put up one evening in an old manor house and slept in a room supposed to be haunted. Next morning at breakfast the Bishop was asked if he had seen the ghost, "Yes" he replied, but I have laid it; it will never trouble you again. It vanished instantly when I asked for a subscription towards the restoration of Peterborough Cathedral."

Bush Memories.

The coach slid down the greasy bank into the turbid yellow stream, and the anxious passengers craned their necks as the leaders plunged and struggled with the rush of the current. It was just low enough to cross, and as the horses strained up the slippery road the driver remarked to the clergyman beside him just out from the old country "Lucky we got through, boss!" "Yes," replied the parson "You would of course not have attempted it had not your experience assured you that there was no danger to be apprehended." "Jus' so" was the reply, "we ain't allowed to take no risks with them mails, but bless you, you'd a been all right. Bill Thompson, the man you are going to fix up down to R, is an old friend of mine, and as he was kinder anxious to have his wedding up to time, I promised that if she" with a jerk towards the river, "was up I'd take out two of the horses and tie you on to one of them, and bring you up somehow afore time. I wouldn't ha' gone back on Bill. I'd a' got a horse there somehow if the river had been half-a-mile wide." The parson said nothing but thought much.

A Simile.

I stood once by the banks of a foul and muddy canal where a boy had fallen in and after many vain struggles had sunk down through the dark waters till his body rested helpless and unconscious on the oozy bottom. As I came up a strong swimmer, who had also been summoned to the spot, threw off his clothes and plunged down out of sight under the foul stream. After a long interval he appeared bearing in his arms the senseless form of the boy, and by patient effort life and strength were brought back to one who seemed beyond all human aid.

So does the Holy Spirit of God plunge down into the foul stream of an evil life and wrestle for the last time with the soul that is drowned in trespasses and sin and bear him upward to see if perchance there be left some spark of life to answer to the Divine call.

Missions.

People often talk of the failure of Missions. They do not know what they are talking about. As a matter of fact the spread of Christianity has been extraordinarily rapid, especially during the past century. It has been computed that in 1800 there were only 200,000,000 Christians in the world, and by 1900 these had grown to over 500,000,000 or one-third of the total population of the globe. If the present rate of increase is maintained almost the whole world may be Christian by the end of the present century. We must remember that not only is one-third of the world Christian but it is the dominant third in culture, civilisation, and material power.

A Lawful Cause.

The bridegroom was in extremis. He was a foreigner and his knowledge of the English language had its limitations. His agitation was extreme and his bewilderment at the complicated preliminaries of the marriage ceremony was rapidly passing into terror. With stammering lips he repeated the words of the declaration which set forth in long winded phraseology that there was "no kindred or relationship or alliance or want of consent of parents or guardians" to prevent his being married to the buxom widow, who watched his anxious efforts with the calmness born of experience "or any other lawful cause" persisted the clergyman, "Or any any other awful cause" gasped the unhappy man, and sat down too relieved that it was over to notice the titter with which his version was received.

Sand.

My God I am as sand;
Of weakness, hid or known,
Convicted if men mock;
Yet have I heard that sand
By pressure may grow stone:
Make Thou my sand thy rock.
1909.

Prayer and Work.

A little girl was greatly perturbed by the discovery that her brother had set traps to catch birds. Questioned as to what she had done in the matter she replied "I prayed that the traps might not catch the birds". "Anything else?" "Yes," she said, "then I went and kicked the traps all to pieces."

The World's Tragedy.

A small volume of recent and hitherto unpublished poems, by the Bishop of Carpentaria, will be ready early in July and may be obtained from the manager of the Diocesan Book Depot, Thursday Island, price 2s. or 6 copies for 10s. The "World's Tragedy," the poem which gives its name to the collection, was described by the Bishop of London as "very powerful," and the remainder of the poems are partly descriptive of spiritual experiences and partly of the scenery of tropical North Queensland, together with one or two translations of French and German verse.

THE DIOCESE.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east, by the Northern Territory on the west, and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19 deg. 30 min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east par. 144 and thence N. to lat. S. 16 deg. 40 min., and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory of South Australia, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 sq. miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 16,500 whites, 7,000 Japanese, Chinese and other aliens, and 35,000 aboriginals. The white population is chiefly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre N. of Cape York.

FINANCE.

The Diocese has no endowment beyond the Bishop's income of £300 per annum.

MISSIONS.

Missions are carried on among the Japanese at Thursday Island, among the S. Sea Islanders at Thursday Island Mosman, and Moa, and among the aboriginals on the Mitchell and Roper Rivers.

SPECIAL OFFERTORIES.

On Easter Day the offertories are given to the Clergyman of the Parish, and on Good Friday to the Australian Board of Missions.

ANNUAL FIXTURES.

(1) March 31st—Parish accounts to close, and to be prepared for presentation to Easter meeting.

(2) Week preceding the Annual Easter Meeting—Roll Book to be revised to date, and copy thereof to be forwarded to the Bishop.

(3) Easter Meeting to be held within twenty-one days after Easter Day; for election of Churchwardens, passing accounts, etc. N.B.—Copies of Easter Report and Balance Sheets to be sent to the Bishop. ("Parishes Regulation Canon," clauses 6, 10, and 24).

BUILDING REGULATIONS.

Plans for the building or alteration of Churches, Church Rooms, and Rectories must be submitted to the Bishop for approval before any contract is entered into, but such approval does not imply any Diocesan responsibility for the cost of the same.

No alteration may be made in any consecrated building without a faculty from the Bishop.

FROM MARRIAGE REGULATIONS.

2. No marriage may be celebrated otherwise than by banns or by Episcopal license.

4. No Surrogate may issue a license for, or any clergyman celebrate the marriage of, any divorced person whatsoever without reference to the Bishop, and permission obtained from him.

5. No marriage may be celebrated otherwise than in a Church or accustomed place of public worship except by express permission of the Bishop; provided that in urgent cases, founded on special circumstances, when reference to the Bishop is practically impossible, the clergyman shall act on his discretion, and forthwith report the circumstances to the Bishop.

7. The authorised fee for the Bishop's license is £3 3s. The Surrogate is authorised to retain for his own use this fee, with the exception of 10s. 6d., which is payable to the Church Management Fund. Where only £2 2s. or a smaller sum is paid, the Surrogate is authorised to retain three-fourths of the fee paid.

Conference Address

By RIGHT REV. GILBERT WHITE, D.D., BISHOP OF CARPENTARIA, AUGUST 30, 1910.

WELCOME.

In the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost I welcome you to the Fifth Conference of the Clergy and Laity of the Diocese of Carpentaria, held on the octave of the tenth anniversary of the foundation of the diocese.

THE METROPOLITAN.

In the first place, as in duty bound, I welcome you, my Lord Archbishop of Brisbane, as Metropolitan of this Province; and I thank you for sparing the time in the midst of your arduous labours to come and help and counsel us in this distant island. But it is not merely as in duty bound that we welcome you. Your brave leadership of the church in this Province, your generous and unswerving kindness to this missionary diocese, your absolute devotion to the highest ideals have so much endeared you to us that our welcome is deeper and truer than can be expressed in mere words. We recognise how much you have to give us, and if we have nothing to offer in return at least we can and do pay you the tribute of our unfeigned affection and deep respect.

THE CLERGY.

In the next place, I welcome you, my brethren of the clergy. You have come with great difficulty and from immense distances. I welcome you with gratitude, for you have been bearing in much isolation the burden and heat of the day. During the last two years the strain of financial depression in the North has been acute. You have seen the members of your congregations depart for more prosperous centres, and an almost impossible burden thrown on the few that remain. You have had to bear the very hardest of all tests, the cheerful ministration to congregations ever dwindling in means and numbers, and unable, through no fault of their own, to adequately support their church; you have had to face poverty and privation, and you have done bravely and cheerfully, with no word of reproach either to me or to your people. I thank you with all my heart. It is a sore grief to me that just at the time when the diocese is perhaps more fully manned than it has ever been with faithful and loyal clergy, a time of outward depression has made your labours so difficult and so trying.

THE LAITY.

Thirdly, I welcome you, my brethren of the laity. I deeply regret, as I know you do, that time and distance have made it impossible for any of the parishes to send their own direct lay representatives; but many of you have been chosen by parishes because you have in the past resided there and know from personal experience the needs of the churches in which in the past you have held parochial office. If I wish others here it is not that I do not value deeply your presence and good counsel. You care for your church and you know the conditions of our northern life. We rely upon you for frank advice and faithful performance of your duty.

CONFERENCE.

The object of our conference is twofold. In the first place the clergy will meet for mutual consultation, and for a quiet day of devotion which His Grace the Archbishop has kindly consented to conduct; and secondly, the clergy and laity will meet for an open conference on various subjects of pressing and parochial interest.

Among the questions on which you will be asked to express an opinion are the formation of a Diocesan Synod, Sunday Schools, Insurance and Superannuation of Clergy, Sunday Morning Services, C.E. Men's Society, "Carpentarian," Parochial Finance, Missions, and Temperance work. I hope that the discussions will be full and frank and productive of real good.

THE KING'S DEATH.

There are three events which have happened since our last conference, which demand some words of reference. The first is the death of our much loved King. It is not too much to say that the words "The King died at midnight" sounded like a blow or sudden clash of alarm throughout the civilised world, for the world at large and not only his own people in particular had grown accustomed to the thought that there was on the throne a wise and genial statesman, known to possess an immense influence and known to be always ready to exercise it for the solution of difficulties and the preservation of peace. There can be no greater tribute to the character of the late King than the consternation caused by the news of his death.

The office and work of a constitutional sovereign has come to be of the greatest importance in a modern state. The old arbitrary power of the King has departed for ever, but in its place have been substituted immense though largely unrecognised opportunities for good. It is a position full of difficulty abounding in pitfalls for the unwary, a position in which there is small allowance for blunders, but still a position which more than any other can be made great by the greatness of its holder. Those who have read the letters of the late Queen Victoria will know what unceasing labour, what minute care, what scrupulous honesty, what extraordinary consideration and tact the office of sovereign involves.

A great statesman has his years of relief: when out of office he can devote himself to the easier task of criticism: even the President of a great country can relax and shoot lions on the termination of his term, but for the King there is no such time of release. His whole life has to be devoted absolutely to his work, and even his short holidays bring little release from the need of active watchfulness and care. It is difficult to conceive of any position requiring more complete self-abnegation, more complete absorption in a mass of detailed duties, more complete devotion to a largely monotonous round of work.

There can be little doubt that the late King set before himself a high ideal of public service at a comparatively early age and laboured assiduously to prepare himself for the duties of his office. We can scarcely doubt that the two great illnesses from which he suffered deepened the seriousness with which he set himself to fulfil his life's work. We are apt to think of the King simply as the King of the British people, and from this point of view his power has been "broad based upon the people's will." He has been recognised as one who fully represented the national life, and to whom the good of his people was the supreme object, but we must remember that in addition to his subjects of our own race there are some 350,000,000 people who looked to him not as their constitutional monarch, but with all the Asiatic and African respect for a supreme and in their eyes irresponsible ruler. It is no slight tribute to the late King that by his tact and understanding he managed so to combine these two separate parts as to prevent his millions of coloured subjects from despising their Emperor as the mere mouthpiece of a political party, or rendering himself ridiculous to Western ideas by an affectation of Eastern autocracy and magnificence. It was not, however, only in his own dominions and throughout his enormous empire that King Edward was loved and trusted.

From the time he became King it was evident that as Prince of Wales he had been laying the foundation of a deep knowledge of continental politics and cultivating a friendship with continental statesmen which was of inestimable value in allaying international jealousies and promoting the cause of peace.

So widely has this been recognised that the King came to be known as Edward the Peacemaker, and no man could wish to be known by a more honourable title. Europe for the last ten years has been like an ever-arming camp of mutually jealous and suspicious nationalities, and who shall say how much England and Europe alike owe to the man who with infinite tact, and a power due to men's confidence in his experience and honesty, has walked for years amid the most explosive elements, with a good-humoured smile that disarmed suspicion and a wisdom that suggested a way out of many an apparent impasse. This was no common man, and we thank God for the honour that he has shed upon our nation as we sadly mourn his loss.

Of the present King comparatively little is generally known, but we have no reason to suppose that he will show himself unworthy of the high example set by the last two reigns, or prove an unworthy successor of Edward and Victoria. He certainly needs our prayers. In praying for him we are praying for ourselves and our country. That he may be given wisdom to moderate the violence of party strife at home; that he may worthily occupy the imaginations and affections of the vast subject population of the Empire; that he may draw closer the bonds of affection between the self-governing colonies and the Old Country; that he may, like his father, be a power for peace in Europe; for these and all other gifts of God to him I bid you pray.

THE PRIMACY.

With regard to the second matter, that of the Primacy, I may perhaps be permitted to repeat some words that I have already used. "The Most Rev. John Charles Wright, D.D., Archbishop of Sydney, has been finally elected Primate of Australia and Tasmania. The appointment is in the hands of the Bishops, and on the first counts the votes were equally divided between the Archbishops of Brisbane and Sydney. On a fresh vote being taken the Archbishop of Sydney was elected. We are sure that he will worthily fill the high position to which he has been called; and there are so many reasons why it is desirable that the Primacy should remain in Sydney that every conservative instinct is gratified by the result. It is most satisfactory to know that our own Metropolitan stands so high in the esteem and confidence of the Church that in spite of the enormous preponderance of reasons for voting for Sydney, he obtained one-half of the votes of the Bishops. No one who knows him suspects him of any desire for election, and we may be thankful that the extra strain and work has not been laid upon him, as it must inevitably have diminished the time and care which he was able to bestow upon the province.

While, however we cheerfully and loyally accept the result, and tender to the new Primate our warm assurances of welcome and of confidence, it is both permissible and necessary to make some comments with a view to the conduct of the next election, however much we hope that it may be in the very far distant future.

In the first place, it is obviously necessary that the method of election should be clearly and strictly defined. This can, of course, be done at the next General Synod. We hope that when this is done the late method of election by post will be absolutely barred. Surely in a matter of such importance the Bishops ought to meet in council and pray for the guidance of the Holy Spirit of God. Some provision might be made for ascertaining the opinion of those who had reasonable excuse for absence, if this were thought desirable; but we hope that it will be the first and last election conducted by the undignified method of postal ballot. In the second place, it ought to be clearly understood whether or no it is needful for General Synod to meet in the See city of the Primate. The disadvantages of meeting in Brisbane or (if W.A. be formed into a Province) in Perth are obvious, but we see no reason why, if the Primate resided in either of these towns, the General Synod should not meet in Sydney or Melbourne, or in the Federal capital. The voting at the late election has clearly shown that the Bishops are not prepared to elect as a matter of course whomsoever the diocese of Sydney may appoint as their Archbishop, and there is therefore much need that the whole situation should be carefully faced and considered in the interests of the entire Church."

RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION REFERENDUM.

The result of the Referendum has been more satisfactory than we had ventured to hope. The final figures are: For Religious Instruction 74,223, against 56,641. Informal 7651. Total votes cast 138560, or 53 per cent of the electors on the roll. The majority in our favour is thus 17,547. Of the electorates forty-four out of sixty-one show a majority in favour of Religious Instruction. I regret to say that in the two Northern dioceses the majority was hostile. In our own diocese we won in only one electorate [Cooktown and Thursday Island] while we lost in three. In North Queensland three were favourable and five hostile, in Rockhampton five were favourable and five unfavourable. We see by this how much we owe to the diocese of Brisbane, with its splendid majority of over 20,000 on the right side. Under God much of our success is due to the untiring labour and whole hearted enthusiasm of our Organising Secretary Rev. J. Garland, but throughout the Province there has been much earnest prayer and faithful labour. We have made one great step in advance but we must not think that the work is done. The results of the Referendum have still to be embodied in just and effective legislation, and at the time of writing it would seem as if the Bill which has been introduced would meet with virulent opposition in Parliament. If the Bill should not pass it will mean the resumption of the struggle with a resolute determination on our part to fight to the end by every lawful means for the rights which we can now justly claim, as they have been conceded by the will of the people.

DIOCESE OF NORTH WEST AUSTRALIA

We welcome most heartily the enthronement at Carnarvon on July 4th of Rt. Rev. Gerard Trower, D.D., late Bishop of Likoma as Bishop of the new diocese of North West Australia. We in the North know well all the difficulty and isolation of the work that lies before him. We rejoice exceedingly in the successful formation of the diocese owing to the unremitting labours of the Bishop of Perth, and we pray for God's fullest blessing on the work of the newly appointed Bishop, who has already shown his earnestness and zeal both in Australia and Africa.

DIOCESAN FINANCE.

The Diocesan Accounts for 1909 have been already published in the "Carpentarian" and will be submitted for your discussion. The receipts appear large because a sum of £800 was received mainly as the result of the Bishop's visit to England. Nearly half this amount was expended in 1908. A sum of £149 9s. 10d. in connection with the Francis Pritt and Mitchell River Mission also belongs to 1908, being received just too late to be included in last year's accounts. Several parochial assessments for 1909 were pretermitted by the Bishop in lieu of parochial grants to the same amount. I hope that the accounts will be thoroughly discussed, as nothing but good can come from criticism in this instance. There is no other opportunity for the review of the financial policy of the diocese.

PAROCHIAL WORK.

The work of the parishes has gone on steadily in spite of ever-increasing depression of the North and the gradual dwindling of population.

I subjoin the statistics for last year compared with the average for the previous three years:—

	1909	Average
Baptisms	179	163
Marriages	29	41
Confirmees	62	70
Burials	66	54
Communicants	467	516
S.S. Children	562	550
S.S. Teachers	46	48

The amount raised by the eight parishes for parochial purposes, exclusive of diocesan grants, amounted to £1358. Five years ago the six parishes which then existed were able to raise £2318 for the same purpose, while the average of the last three years was £1782. This gives some idea of the financial strain. Our parishes have lost one-half of their income in five years, through no fault of the Church or clergy, for the parishes have never been more efficiently filled and worked than they are at present. It is impossible that the strain should be borne indefinitely. We must either have help or the Church must retire from impossible positions. The difficulty is that the parishes are so far apart that it is impossible to amalgamate two or more. In connection with this point I have to acknowledge with much gratitude the generous promise of Mr. R. Christison a North Queensland station owner to contribute a sum of £600 in three annual instalments of £200 each for mission work among our own people. If all those who own property in the North would follow Mr. Christison's fine example, and recognise their responsibility as he has done, the work of the Church would be far less arduous than it is.

CLERGY.

During the last twelve months we have lost Rev. J. Jones, to whose splendid services I referred in my last Conference Address, Rev. L. Arnold, who resigned the parish of Palmerston after a few months' incumbency; and Rev. J. Huthnance, who has resigned the Superintendentship of the Roper River Mission. On the other hand we welcome for the first time Rev. E. J. Nash, M.A., who at an age when most men are beginning to look for a more settled rather than a less settled sphere of work has given up the beautiful parish of Leatherhead to work as Subdean of our Cathedral and Vicar of Thursday Island; Rev. W. E. Godson, M.A., who is doing excellent work as Rector of Cooktown; Rev. J. Pranker, M.A., who has been generously lent us for two years by the Archbishop of Brisbane, and whom we congratulate on his recovery to health after a serious illness; Rev. A. M. Hassell, who has taken up the Rev. F. C. Hall's work at Georgetown and lives in the saddle; and Rev. F. T. Lane, Th.L., who has taken the place of Rev. H. H. Ayscough, Th.L., who has temporarily gone to Palmerston at my request, and who at the end of the year is leaving us for two years in order to take his Arts degree before returning to the north. Rev. W. M. Wilkinson is with us only in spirit, as he is engaged on one of those huge bush journeys in which he traverses the Peninsula from end to end. His heroic labours shed honour on his diocese. Rev. E. Taffs has been doing most faithful work at Mossman for over six years; and we welcome him heartily among us. During the last twelve months I have visited Port Darwin, Mossman, Burketown, and the Mitchell River once; Georgetown, Croydon, and Normanton twice; Cooktown and Moa three times; and I also attended the Provincial Synod in Brisbane, and went on to Sydney and Melbourne to speak on behalf of the Australian Board of Missions.

DIOCESAN COUNCIL.

We have lost from the Diocesan Council the valuable services of Mr. A. P. Walker, who has acted as Hon. Diocesan Secretary for many years, and has shown the deepest interest in all that concerns the welfare of the Church. We are glad to welcome a new member in Mr. A. S. Wells. I have received from the members of the Diocesan Council the greatest assistance in dealing with many matters of business, and the attendance at meetings has always been excellent. The Diocese owes them much for their ready services.

We regret the departure of Mr. O. Beryholtz, Diocesan Accountant. He showed the keenest interest in his work during the short time he held office. Mr. Hennessey has been appointed shipping agent for the Diocese, and Rev. E. J. Nash has for the present most kindly undertaken the charge of the Diocesan accounts. He is an expert bookkeeper and has relieved me of a great amount of detail work, which my constant absences prevent my attending to myself.

MISS ROBSON.

Here I wish to express my profound gratitude to Miss Robson for the splendid work which she has done during the last four years. With whole hearted enthusiasm she put her most exceptional gifts at the service of the diocese, and she has left the deep imprint of her personality on our missionary, parochial, and diocesan work. Her brilliant pen has also done much and we hope will still do much to make our work known. Her departure for the South has left a great and not easily filled gap in many departments.

CARPENTARIAN ASSOCIATION.

I have to acknowledge much generous help from outside the Diocese: From S.P.G., S.P.C.K., and the C. & C.C.S.; from Lord Beauchamp, who has again generously promised £100 for the support of the students for the Diocese for the next three years; from an anonymous donor who has for the last two years given £100 as an Easter offering to the work of the Diocese; and from many other friends in England and Australia who have given according to their means. Our especial thanks are due to Miss Gascoigne, the energetic Hon. Secretary of the Carpentarian Association in England, which has done much to make the diocese known by the excellent little publication "Carpentarian Notes," and which has contributed over £100 this year to our funds. The Carpentarian Association in Victoria was merged into the Australian Missionary Society, and this again into the Association for Missionary Service of Victoria. These changes and the pressing needs of the A.B.M. debt have resulted in a large falling off of our receipts from Victoria. The new secretary of the Society, Rev. T. K. Pitt, M.A., was formerly one of our clergy; and I hope that the interest he still feels in it may result in a revival of help.

A.B.M.

We welcome most thankfully the new arrangements and the new staff of the A.B.M. We are already able to testify to the promptness and life which are being thrown into its business. We contributed our share to the Debt Fund although we were assessed proportionately at a far higher rate than any other diocese. I have every hope for the future of the reconstructed A.B.M.

MITCHELL RIVER MISSION.

One of the first acts of the new Executive has been to ask this diocese to undertake the entire management of the Mitchell River Mission, the A.B.M. providing an annual £750, including the Government grant towards the expenses. I decided that it would not be right to refuse this request, as it is obvious that we are able to do the work better than anyone at a distance. At the same time it means much time and thought and many anxieties. I have to express the grateful thanks of the Church to Rev. E. J. Nash for the way in which, following the example of his predecessor, Rev. J. Jones, he has devoted an immense amount of time and labour to the work of this Mission. I have lately returned from a visit to the Mission and I was very much impressed by the good work which has been done. The progress of the Mission has been steady during the five years of its existence, and the presence of two lady workers for the last year has given a great impetus to the family life of the station. There are now, all told, about 90 persons resident at the Station, including 15 married couples, and the mission in addition comes in contact with and influences many hundreds of the surrounding natives. The Superintendent, Mr. Matthews, is doing a great work quietly and unobtrusively. A lugger, the Lily, has been purchased for the Mission, and Tom Solomon, the captain, is rapidly training the natives to be good seamen.

MOA ISLAND MISSION.

Here again we have had remarkable progress under the devoted care of Deaconess Buchanan. A fine school-house has been erected at the entire cost of the diocese, and a useful cutter, the Banzai, has been purchased to run between Thursday Island and Moa and brings the mails and produce. Joe Bauri is in command, in addition to his work as catechist. The industry of the people in cultivating their gardens and plantations has been so marked that the Government has granted a large increase of the reserve, which now extends for two or three miles round the village. The children in the school have made remarkable progress. We are very grateful to Dr. Breinl for visiting the Mission and giving us much most useful advice.

ROPER RIVER MISSION.

The Mission has been suffering much from the absence, followed by the resignation, of its energetic head, Rev. J. Huchance. Messrs. Sharp and Joynt have stuck gallantly to their posts. James Noble and his wife have returned to Yarrabah, having stayed considerably beyond the year for which they came and done excellent work.

THE FRANCIS PRITT.

The Francis Pritt has done excellent work during the past year. We much regret the retirement of the master, Captain Cunningham, in consequence of severe and protracted attacks of malarial fever. He has shown great care and attention to duty and brought the ship in safely through many difficulties and dangers.

Owing to the fact that both the Mitchell and Moa have now their own vessels with a draft of water more suitable to their particular work than that of the Francis Pritt and that the Roper River Mission proposes to obtain its supplies in future via Port Darwin, we have determined to offer the Francis Pritt for sale, with the condition that the name be changed; and to put the money received for her to a special fund for the purpose of building a new Francis Pritt with a draft of water which will enable her to enter Trubananman Creek, so soon as such a vessel is required, which will probably be within the next two years.

Having thus dealt with our present position, I may perhaps be allowed to turn for a few moments to the past.

A RETROSPECT.

Looked back upon from the point of view of the life of a diocese, ten years form but a very short period, especially if they be the first years in which there is necessarily somewhat of confusion and incompleteness, but from the point of view of those of us who have from the first been associated with the work of organisation and have noted the signs of growth and expansion, ten years seem a long time and productive of many changes. In the first place it must be noted that during these ten years the area covered by the Diocese of Carpentaria has been steadily retreating as regards its population. In 1901 when the census was taken there were in the Queensland part of the diocese according to returns kindly furnished by the Department 15,324 whites, about 15,000 aboriginals, and 3527 coloured persons other than aboriginals. To-day there are as nearly as I have been able to ascertain about 10,000 whites, about 9,000 aboriginals, and 2330 coloured persons other than aboriginals. In the Northern Territory part of the diocese the white population has decreased from 1,500 to 1,000, and the Chinese have largely decreased also.

GROWTH.

In view of these facts, and the fact also that with this decrease of population has come a steady impoverishment of those that remain, we have reason to be thankful that the church has not only maintained her position but grown steadily in spite of obstacles. In 1900, when the diocese was founded, there were but four parishes with clergy—those of Thursday Island, Cooktown, Port Douglas and Croydon. In 1910, in spite of the diminution of the whole population by at least a third, there are resident clergy in eight parishes—i.e., Thursday Island, Cooktown, Mosman, Croydon, Normanton, Georgetown, Palmerston, and Laura. During the last ten years churches have been built at Palmerston, Golden Gate, Mount Molloy, and Georgetown; and rectories at Thursday Island, Mosman and Croydon, in addition to the Parish Institute and Bishop's House at Thursday Island.

MISSIONS.

On the side of direct missionary work there has been a very real advance during the last ten years. In 1900 the only missionary work in the diocese was the mission to the South Sea Islanders and Japanese at Thursday Island. We have now in addition three firmly established missions—one at the Mitchell River and one at Moa Island under the direct control of the diocese, and one at Roper River under the control of C.M.A. We have seven white and five native missionaries at work, in addition to the mission ships Francis Pritt, Banzai and Lily.

PRAYER.

These things are not mentioned in any spirit of diocesan self-congratulation, for we are conscious of our own failures; but as a tribute of thankfulness to Almighty God Who has given us blessings above all that we desired or deserved. I attribute in great measure, as I have on other occasions said, whatever success may have attended the work of the diocese, to the earnest prayers of those who have been willing to aid by using the little diocesan Intercession Paper so regularly since the commencement of the work, and I appeal for others to help us in the same way.

CLERGY.

Looking back on the staff of the diocese during the past ten years two points seem to stand out clearly. In the first place, we have been extremely fortunate in obtaining good and devoted clergy; and in the second place it is obvious from past experience that owing to a variety of causes we cannot expect our clergy to stay long with us. Twenty-five new clergy have come to work in the diocese during the past ten years, and of these twenty have already left us after a term of service averaging less than three years, while only three—Revs. W. M. Wilkinson, E. Taffs, and J. Jones have completed five years of service. There are many reasons for this regrettable state of things, isolation of work, poverty of parishes, a tropical climate, consideration for the health of wife and children, prospects of a wider sphere of work with some possibility of provision for age in the South; but when all is said it is not satisfactory to reflect that a work which after all is interesting if hard, and which is in no special sense unhealthy, cannot retain a larger proportion of the clergy. Is it too much for a harassed bishop to plead that the average term of service should be over instead of under three years? I cannot fail to see the force of a remark sometimes made to me by the laity. "We have to spend all our life here; why will the clergy not stay a little longer with us?" I ought to acknowledge that I have constantly received the greatest kindness and consideration with regard to clergy from my brother bishops in the South, and my especial thanks are due to my own Metropolitan, who has often supplied my needs at great inconvenience to his own work.

A PERSONAL RETROSPECT.

It so happens that this is the 25th anniversary of my arrival from England for work in what is practically the same diocese, for the diocese of Carpentaria was formed out of the diocese in which I was previously at work as parish priest and archdeacon. I do not propose to weary you with reminiscences of earlier days or to play the part of a laudator temporis acti; but some hesitating comparison may possibly be of interest. I say hesitating because it is extremely difficult to give an accurate and unbiassed opinion, I should have thought that there had been a falling off in the attendance at public worship, but on looking at my diary I find that on my first visits to Townsville and Charters Towers in 1885 I noted "congregation very small," "congregation very poor in the morning." Memory would have played me false but for this note. I think, however, that the duty of being present at public worship was more generally acknowledged, and that much larger sums were given for church purposes; but it is fair to remember that money was much more plentiful then than now in the North, and I am inclined to think that there is more real self-denial among those who are really Churchmen now than then. There was I think less unbelief, less questioning of the Christian faith, but also perhaps less acting on their belief by those who did believe. Communicants were probably more numerous and perhaps less consistent. On the whole I am disposed to think that the attitude of the people towards religion has not changed very greatly during the last twenty-five years. There was then very much less way to make up, and much of it never has been made up. On the other hand greater efforts are now being made to provide religious ministrations, and I do not think that the people are more slow in reality to respond, though there is certainly less outward profession of willingness to do so.

MISSIONARY OUTLOOK.

To return, however, to that missionary outlook which is and must always be the distinguishing mark of this diocese, situated as it is on the highway between Australia and the East and receiving in full force those Eastern influences which, whether we like it or not, must be felt in ever increasing force in Australia. I do not ignore the urgent need of work among the aborigines, who claim at present almost our full attention, but the work among the aborigines though a national duty and privilege is a local duty, while our attitude towards the East, though largely determined by the view we take of such local duties, is a greater and more serious matter in so far as its results are more far-reaching and permanent.

AWAKENING OF THE EAST.

The great fact that we cannot ignore is the growth of the Eastern nations in national spirit, scientific knowledge, and practical efficiency. We see the process almost completed in a marvellously short time in Japan, and in process of development in China and in India. What is to be our attitude towards it? It is to be noted in the first place that this awakening of the East is due chiefly to Christian influences, partly in the first instance to direct missionary work, and partly to the knowledge of that Western civilisation which, as Dean Church has shown, is so closely connected with the Christian inspiration from which it unconsciously sprang. Can we as a Christian people stand aloof and say that this material and spiritual awakening of the East is no business of ours? Surely it is through Christianity that we have become what we are, and we cannot ignore or turn our backs on the power that has made us, nor with safety to ourselves wrap us up in a cloak of spiritual isolation.

SPIRITUAL ISOLATION.

When a people is spiritually self-contained and has no desire to impress its spiritual convictions on others, it is a sign that it is lacking in elements that are necessary to the preservation alike of its own spiritual and its own material strength. It cannot be too clearly understood, for it is a lesson that all history teaches, that material power and strength is the result of precedent spiritual force and intensity, and that when these decay the end of a nation's life and energy is already in view. The reason is not far to seek. It is only a spiritual and idealistic force of some kind, whether it be religious, moral or patriotic, which has power to hold in check natural selfishness and to allow of the growth of that spirit of unselfish and self-sacrificing devotion to the public good, which alone can make a people strong. Now, it is not possible for a people to hold strongly to religious beliefs or moral convictions, or even to be in the higher sense patriotic without wishing to inspire others with their own beliefs. By patriotism I understand not that narrow and selfish outlook, which says "My country right or wrong," but a love of one's country which shows itself in wishing for it and being prepared to suffer to attain for it the realisation of the highest ideals, and the attainment of the truest freedom and happiness; and these ideals are common to all mankind. True patriotism rejoices when other peoples imitate what it believes to be best in its own national life, as for instance, when a nation substitutes, like Turkey, representative government for despotism. Now I take it that missionary work is from one point of view the expression of the desire to share with others what we believe to be the secret of what is highest and best in our own national consciousness. It is no doubt in obedience to the command of Christ that we undertake it, but we obey the command the more gladly because experience has taught us that the spirit of Christ does purify and uplift the national as well as the individual life, and that righteousness is a national and social as well as an individual affair. If we rightly condemn "laissez faire" with regard to the evils and corruptions of our own state or society, the same spirit will lead us also to desire to remedy the evils from which other people suffer too. Christian missions are the true and logical expressions of a democracy which refuses to regard nationality as conferring any greater inherent privilege than aristocracy, and asks why being born white confers a privilege (other than the privilege of responsibility) which is not conferred by being born rich. Our own national life can only be healthy and strong in Australia if we possess ideals which will lead to self-sacrifice and enthusiasm on the part of our people, and if we do have these ideals they must and will show themselves in missionary work; and if missionary work languishes it is a sign that the state is languishing in what concerns its very life and future existence. But behind all this lies a momentous question.

IS CHRISTIANITY UNIVERSAL?

Is Christianity a religion for all the peoples of the earth, or is it only the form in which our Western spiritual aspirations have expressed and embodied themselves? It must, I think be admitted that just as the Jewish Christians could not conceive of a Christianity which transcended the limits of Judaism, so we as missionaries have too often forgotten that Christianity is a world religion. We have often so faithfully presented Christianity in the form in which it has Occidentally and nationally developed that we have largely succeeded in convincing the people of the East that Christianity is a western religion suitable enough for the practical pushing nations of Europe and America, but with no vital message for the more contemplative and patient peoples of the Orient. Yet when we look back at the origins of Christianity, we must admit that at first it was singularly lacking in formal shape and organisation. The words of Christ were seed thoughts and fundamental principles rather than settled ordinances and enactments, and His positive formal injunctions were but two. However much we may value our own developments of form and practice, because they are consecrated by the example of generations of our forefathers and for that very reason suited to us, their children, it seems only reasonable to admit that an Eastern people might have developed, and might still develop, the essential principles of Christianity on different lines. This in no way affects our belief that the development to which we are accustomed is a part of God's living order and purpose for us, and cannot be departed from or tampered with without the gravest spiritual consequences.

There is, however, nothing inherently limited or local in Christianity. Arising in the East it has hitherto appealed for the most part more particularly to the West, but its appeal to the East is as real as its appeal to the West, and is being every year more widely responded to. That there are fragments of Eastern religions and Eastern ideals embedded in Christ's teaching is exactly what we should have expected in the teaching of Him Who made all men and never left any generation without some witness to Himself. The fact that God has been perfectly manifested in Christ is entirely compatible with His being imperfectly manifested in the hopes, ideals and aspirations of nations, who in these imperfect manifestations may have grasped some truths even more firmly than we have done with Christianity; nor can we hope for the perfect understanding and complete manifestation of the power and beauty of Christianity until the East has brought its deep instinctive sense of the abiding presence of God, its powers of self-forgetful devotion, and its appreciation of the value of the spiritual as compared with the material, to add to the practical sense, the constructive ability and the untiring energy of the West.

IS CHRIST'S CLAIM RELATIVE OR ABSOLUTE?

The same question may be put in another form, and one that is of vital importance to our spiritual life. Is the claim of Christ upon us relative or absolute? Is it that of supreme religious genius or of an ultimate religious revelation? That Christ has an enormous claim on our reverence and obedience as by far the greatest religious teacher that the world has ever seen would be disputed by few, but obviously such a conception of His appeal to us leaves the way open for the fullest criticism and for the superseding of His moral and religious teaching by higher and truer conceptions if the world, while acknowledging its debt to Him, is able in the process of time to evolve such higher conceptions for itself. Now this attitude of criticism and assumed superior knowledge is largely adopted in the present day, not only by irresponsible exponents of so-called new theologies, but by not a few critics and scholars who profess to write from a Christian point of view, and even in some instances hold positions in the Church.

CRITICISM.

It is not necessary to point out how far such a position is from the Catholic belief in the supreme and absolute authority of Christ, which has prevailed from the days of the apostles and which Saint Paul expressed with such burning intensity. Of course, such criticism is based on the plea that we do not know what the exact teaching of Christ was, or how far it has been modified by the theories of His disciples. Now I should be the last to deny that there is a very real field for reverent criticism in the important task of endeavouring to ascertain the real words of Christ, but when one critic tells us that there are only seven sayings that we can confidently regard as authentic, and another doubts the existence even of these, it is surely time that those who accept the absolute authority of Christ should ask what are the limits of fair and reasonable criticism, and demand that those who deny the absolute authority of Christ should speak from without and not from within the Christian Church. It is impossible to read much modern criticism without feeling that the critic's opinion of the authenticity of Christ's words depends very largely on the opinion of their appropriateness and moral value, and we have a right to ask whence they derive their standard and power of judging. If their criteria are ultimately derived from Christ's own teaching it is obvious that criticism, just as true and far as it goes, must be confined within comparatively narrow limits or it will become self-destructive. If, on the other hand, they argue on the supposed naturally developed moral sense of mankind, which is gradually establishing higher standards of truth and conduct, we may well ask what is the proof that such an improved moral sense exists apart from the teachings of Christianity. Surely Christians who hold to the Catholic Faith have a right to maintain that there is abundant evidence that the personality of Christ made an impression on His contemporaries, and brought about results which are not compatible with any sensible deviation or subtraction from the teaching of Christ as found in the Gospels, and that this view has been abundantly established by the experience of those generations of Christians who have accepted Christ as an absolute authority.

For ourselves the question is a vital one, and we cannot allow students and critics who often speak from the calm of a learned leisure, which has little contact with the sins and sorrows of practical life, to dogmatise without protest as to what that teaching of Christ ought to have been, which those who have to face the hardest problems of life find to be, just as it is, their power and strength and stay. The critic too often says, "Here is a book which I assume to be false until I have proved it to be true." The Christian says, "Here is a book which has proved its vital force in my life and experience; I must therefore assume it true unless I have strong evidence that it is false." Thank God we have in England a number of devout and reverent as well as fearless critics, who have done much to remove difficulties, and to revive and reinvigorate Biblical studies; it is against the abuse and not the use of the critical faculty that we protest.

PROBLEMS.

I have every sympathy with those who find much to bewilder them in religion and in life (may we say in religion because religion is a part of life?). Why does truth seem to grow old and have to be so often re-stated in new, and, as we think, unsatisfactory forms? Why does the good appear sometimes to fail? Why do good people differ so much on matters which seem vital? Why is there so much suffering of the innocent? Why does God keep such still silence? Why is there such a stress at times on those under-girders of our life, faith and hope. These and other questions press in and bewilder even the earnest and religious man. What is the answer? It seems to me that the answer and the only answer is Christ—not the vague phantom that survives the subtle discriminations of the critics, not the Christ of apologetic and argument however devout, but the living Christ of experience, the Christ that is found of them that seek Him with tears of penitence and stern efforts after self-denial, the voice of God that is not silent but speaks, and pleads and wrestles with the soul. It is my own conviction that the facts of life do correspond to the theory of life as we find it in the Gospels; and that to those who strive, however distantly, to follow Christ, the hardness and mystery of His sayings resolve themselves into sober truth and fact, and hence the cure of the evils and perplexities of life lies in a simpler return to the precepts and example of Christ. This does not mean an absence of the accessories of worship. If Christ be all that we believe Him to be we cannot spend too much on His worship and honour. It means a simpler realisation of Christ's view of life and His estimate of the relative values of what life has to offer.

THE SPIRIT OF CHRIST.

While Christians value wealth so highly and devote so little of it to the service of God we have not the spirit of Christ.

While love of ourselves is still undispossessed by love of our neighbour we have not the spirit of Christ.

While worship is regarded as a matter of taste and prayer, as needful only in an emergency, we have not the spirit of Christ.

The Christian ideal of life is a great thing, and much harm is done by allowing any inadequate conception to pass for it. The Christian ideal of life means real self-surrender and self-negation, and the consecration of the commonest things of life to the service of God. Our work as a church and a diocese will have failed unless it has realised something of this spirit of Christ. No material progress, no increase of numbers, no credit or reputation can compensate for its absence. As a diocese of the Christian Church we must be judged by the extent to which the spirit of Christ is manifested in us, and I can pray no better prayer for you among whom I have now these ten years been called to labour than that the spirit of Christ may ever grow in you, rest upon you and lead you into that true wisdom of the knowledge of God, in comparison with which all else that earth has to offer is in no way to be accounted of.

Fifth Biennial Conference

OF THE CLERGY AND LAITY OF THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA.

The Conference was opened at 11 a.m. on Tuesday, August 30th, by a Celebration of Holy Communion. The Bishop was the celebrant. The sermon was preached by the Sub-dean, Rev. E. J. Nash, M.A., on St. Luke, chap. 10 v. 1. We subjoin part of his address :

It might seem at first sight to be merely a concession to human weakness, when Our Lord sent the disciples two and two on their work of preaching the Kingdom of God: but in reality He was thus giving expression to an important principle, which constantly appears in different forms throughout His teaching.

It is of course true that the natural man can appreciate the value of sympathy without the aid of revelation; he knows that "union is strength"—that two are better than one—that it is easier to work effectively when others approve and assist. But Christ's teaching goes infinitely further than this; for while two men can certainly lay more bricks or plough more ground than one man, it does not follow that two men praying can exert a greater force than one; spiritual things are not to be measured by the laws of arithmetic, and hence it was a new revelation which He gave when He said "where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." In other words, Christian sympathy calls forth a special exercise of the Divine Power.

Our Lord knew, as His disciples could not know, the terrible strength of the forces working against them when they set out to preach the kingdom. They indeed in their new zeal would think lightly of difficulties and would in consequence be more easily overcome by the scorn, the cold indifference, the immovable prejudices, which would meet them on every hand. But He knew; and in His wisdom He was training them by easy steps to know their weakness, and their strength; their utter inability by their own unaided efforts to convert a world which seeks happiness—not blessedness, and satisfaction—not sanctification.

And so He does not merely provide for each a sympathetic fellow worker, but also (what they would come to know was far more important) a bond of union with Himself. In His instructions to the Seventy we may note three things. 1. The message He committed to them was an authoritative proclamation of the Kingdom of God: like Ezekiel they were to deliver the message regardless of its reception or rejection—"Whether they hear or whether they will forbear." 2. He gave them a super-human power that will be recognised by the spiritually-minded and must be used, even though disregarded by the unbelieving: this gift of power always appears and is more clearly defined in subsequent statements of the Commission, and here it is shewn in the command "say, Peace be to this house." And, 3. He gave them an assurance that they were fellow workers with Himself; they were to go to the cities to which He himself would come: ie He would follow up their work by His own direct influence.

Let us apply these three helps to the case of the parish priest of to-day. 1. It is a great strength to remember that the message is not our own; it is not left to us to devise by our own skill, our own cleverness or knowledge of the world, a message suitable to the different types of men; we are not empowered to water it down, merely because men are unwilling to accept it. There is a great temptation to make concessions, and like all the most dangerous temptations it comes under the cloak of a desire to do God better service; and so far too many have given way to it. But we have to proclaim the Kingdom of God to warn men, whether they accept it or not, that the Kingdom of God is indeed come nigh to them.

We are not promised any startling success; such may be given here or there, now or later, for reasons known only to God; but the general rule is "It is enough for the disciple that he be as his Master; . . . if they have called the master of the house Beelzebub how much more shall they call them of his household."

And 2. In the same way the superhuman power, the grace of Ordination, is to be faithfully used, not laid aside in deference to those "flimsy professors who are so ready to lay down the law on matters they do not understand." "Spiritual things are spiritually discerned." "If a son of peace be there, your peace shall rest upon him; if not it shall turn to you again."

And 3. All our work is only to prepare the way for Him. Whatever is achieved is His, not ours. It is our privilege and who can estimate its greatness? to plant and to water, "but it is God that giveth the increase."

The greatness of the privilege is shown by the word spoken to the seventy on their return—"in this rejoice not that the Spirits are subject unto you; but rejoice that your names are written in heaven."

If this then was Christ's method in providing for the publication of His good news to all men, let us go forward with confidence, knowing that it is His Will that we should use to the full the great forces of fellowship with Him and among ourselves. For it is His message that we deliver and we can only do it by keeping alive the most tender sensitiveness of sympathy between disciple and Master, and between the disciples themselves.

If a Conference such as this we are opening to-day did no more than bring together the scattered workers and give them a chance of comparing notes and discussing methods, it would be worth a great deal of trouble; but it does more than this; it helps each to feel that he is not alone in the struggle, that others too have the same difficulties, the same temptation to weakness and discouragement, and so helps all to realise more vividly that it is only by the Cross that we can conquer. And further, it brings home to the laity also that there are other parishes with the same problems and difficulties as their own; and (what is more important) that the parish is only one unit of a great organisation, which is world-wide, and whose whole and sole object is to reconcile man to God through the One Mediator, Jesus Christ; that all the units of this organisation are interdependent and that "if one suffers, all suffer with it;" and that a peculiar blessing is promised in response to the sympathetic co-operation of believers, in prayer and in work for the Master "whose service is perfect freedom."

At 4 p.m. A meeting of the Clergy was held for Conference as also on the two following mornings at 11 a.m. Much help was derived from the wise counsels of the Archbishop of Brisbane, and many subjects of interest were discussed.

At 8 p.m. the Conference met in the Parish Institute and the following members were present. Clergy:—His Grace the Archbishop of Brisbane, The Bishop, The Subdean Rev. E. J. Nash, M.A., Rev. W. E. Godson, M.A., Rev. W. E. Morrison, M.A., Rev. J.

Pranker, M.A., Rev. A. M. Hassell. Apologies for absence were received from Revs. E. Taffs and H. Ayscough who were unable to get steamers fitting in with the Conference, Rev. W. M. Wilkinson, who was engaged in a long bush journey, and Rev. F. T. Lane who was obliged to stay to represent the Church in the Gulf parishes.

The following lay members were present:—
Mr. H. Milman representing Thursday Isd.
Mr. C. G. Miles " Palmerston.
Mr. T. Woodd " Cooktown.
Mr. C. Armbrust " Laura.
Mr. A. T. Sullivan " Mossman.
Mr. G. F. Bromhall " Croydon.
Mr. A. S. Wells " Normanton.
Mr. F. Morey " Georgetown.
Mr. R. H. Allen " Diocesan Sec.

The Bishop delivered his Presidential Address as above.

Rev. J. H. Pranker was elected Clerical and Mr. R. H. Allen Lay Secretary.

A resolution, was carried all standing expressing sorrow at the death of the late King, and loyalty and prayer for his successor.

A number of votes of thanks were passed, including one to Mr. R. Christison for his gift of £200 a year, for three years, for white mission work in the diocese.

On Wednesday August 31st, the Conference met at 4.30 p.m. The following motion was proposed by Mr. F. E. Morey, seconded by Mr. H. Milman and carried unanimously: "That this Conference of clergy and laymen of the Diocese of Carpentaria notes with the greatest satisfaction the firm determination with which the Government has insisted on carrying out the will of the people of Queensland as expressed in the Referendum on Religious Instruction in State Schools in spite of persistent opposition in the Legislative Assembly; and respectfully expresses the hope that when the committee stage is reached a firm front will be maintained against all amendments hostile to the main principles of the Bill." The resolution was immediately telegraphed to the Prime Minister.

It was moved by the Bishop and seconded by Mr. Wells and carried, "That the Conference unanimously calls upon Mr. Douglas, Member for Cook, in view of the number of votes cast in favour of Religious Instruction in State schools in his electorate in the recent Referendum, to withdraw from all opposition to the Religious Instruction Bill now before the Legislative Assembly, whether on the second reading or the committee stage."

The question of the formation of a Diocesan Synod was raised, and it was resolved that the time had not yet come.

The Diocesan Regulations were approved with a few small alterations.

The report of the Douglas Memorial Fund showed that a sum of £99 19 2d was in the bank. It was resolved to leave it for the present on fixed deposit. The Reports of the Diocesan Emergency Fund, the Bishoprick Endowment Fund, Landed Property, "Carpentarian," Mothers' Union, and Girls' Friendly Society, were discussed and adopted.

The Diocesan Accounts, Terrier of Lands, and Statistics were presented by the Diocesan Secretary, discussed and adopted.

The Bishop submitted a proposed Scheme of Parochial Finance. It was resolved that the scheme be submitted to the parishes for consideration and report.

The principle of Diocesan Assessment for Missionary purposes was considered and adopted for the diocese.

The Conference adjourned at 10 p.m., and met again at 4.30 p.m. on Thursday, Sept. 1st.

Rev. W. E. Godson moved, Rev. J. Prankerd seconded, and it was carried, "That the Conference feels strongly that more aggressive work should be carried on in Queensland among the Chinese."

It was moved by Mr. A. S. Wells, seconded by Mr. A. T. Sullivan and carried, "That the matter of the Superannuation of Clergy be referred to the parishes with a view of ascertaining whether they will pay the whole or part of the contribution necessary to obtain the advantages to be derived from a Superannuation Fund; and that a committee consisting of the Bishop, Subdean, Mr. A. T. Sullivan, and the Mover, obtain all necessary particulars."

A most interesting discussion took place on the Church of England Men's Society, drawing forth some eloquent speeches. It was carried on the motion of Rev. W. E. Godson, "That the Conference urges on all Churchmen, clerical and lay, to do all they can to forward the extension of the work of the C.E.M.S."

Moved by Mr. A. T. Sullivan, seconded by Mr. F. E. Morey, and carried, "That it is desirable that the Bishoprick Endowment Fund be raised to such a figure as would supply an income of at least £500 a year."

Proposed by Mr. Sullivan, seconded by Mr. Woodd, and carried, "That in view of the falling incomes of the clergy owing to the decreasing population in Northern Districts it is necessary to form a Sustentation Fund for the purpose of increasing clerical incomes from headquarters."

The Sub-dean, Rev. W. E. Godson, and Rev. J. Prankerd were elected clerical, and Messrs. H. Milman, A. S. Wells, A. T. Sullivan, lay members of the Diocesan Council.

Mr. Allen and Mr. Morey were appointed a sub-committee to examine the deeds and trust deeds in the Q.N. Bank, and to report to the Diocesan Council.

Thursday Island and Palmerston were assessed at £6 6s., and the other parishes at £4 4s. for Diocesan assessment.

Mr. Wells expressed the feeling of the Conference in a hearty vote of thanks to the Archbishop of Brisbane for his presence and great assistance to the Conference.

The conference was formally concluded at 0 p.m. with the singing of the Te Deum.

On Friday the Archbishop conducted a Quiet Day for the clergy, and none of them are likely to forget the strong deep thoughtful words that he addressed to them, as he spoke of Penitence, Hunger after Righteousness, and Growth in the spirit of Sacrifice.

On Saturday, by the kindness of the Government Resident, the John Douglas was put at the disposal of the Conference to visit the Lission at Moa. A party of nearly twenty, including several ladies, made a start at 6 a.m., and Moa was reached soon after 10 a.m. It was blowing half-a-gale and a veil had better be drawn over the sufferings of the passengers. The distance is only 31 miles, but a lot of misery can be crowded into that distance. Only three or four managed to preserve their equilibrium. However, once within the shelter of the reef people began to recognise that life was still worth living, and none were too idle to thoroughly enjoy the visit to the mission. After a welcome on the beach the visitors proceeded to the Church School House, where the scholars, dressed in bright clean dresses and lava-lavas, were drawn up on either side. After they had taken their seats the head school boy read an address to the Bishop and Archbishop, and each visitor was then presented with a necklace of shells.

Then followed the Administration of Holy Baptism to an infant, followed by an address by the Archbishop. After the congregation had retired the Archbishop examined the children and expressed himself as much struck by their secular and religious knowledge, and good order and discipline. School was followed by a sumptuous repast provided by Deaconess Buchanan and her helpers; and the visitors, in spite of their past sufferings and the prospect of what was awaiting them on the return journey did it full justice. After dinner there followed hurried packing to get off by the appointed hour, and amid much waving of farewell a start was made about 2.45 p.m. The wind was right ahead and more violent than ever, and some who had survived the journey out succumbed on the way home, but all things have an end and just after dark all were safely landed on the Thursday Island Jetty.

On Sunday the services were bright and joyous and well attended. The Bishop celebrated at 7.30 a.m., and at 10 a.m. there was a Church Parade of the Garrison and a good congregation. The Archbishop was the Celebrant and Rev. W. E. Godson, M.A., preached a most suitable and stirring sermon on the words "Be Strong." In the afternoon Rev. J. Prankerd addressed the children, and in the evening every seat in the Cathedral was full and the Archbishop delivered a very powerful sermon on the duty of public worship. On Monday evening a very pleasant gathering of the congregation was held in the Parish Institute to welcome the Archbishop and visiting clergy. Mr. K. O. Mackenzie made the following speech:—

As representative of the citizens of Thursday Island it gives me great pleasure to be here this evening to welcome His Grace the Archbishop of Brisbane and the other members of the Conference. I am quite sure the meeting together of such a body of Clergy here must have resulted in good both to the Church and the people. Those who have been fortunate in listening to the Archbishop, either in the Cathedral or during the Conference, have enjoyed a rare treat, and I am sure His Grace's words will be long remembered among us. Speaking more especially for business men I think we must all admit, that in the stress and worry of commercial life we are apt to forget how large a part the Church plays in our lives, so that we can the more readily realize how much good a Conference such as has been sitting here can do, bringing as it does fresh faces and ideas into our midst and, as it were, infusing new life into the work of the Church. Apart from this work the presence amongst us of a man of such sterling personality as His Grace the Archbishop, whom we must remember was almost the Primate of all Australia, a man whose good deeds and earnest work are known far and wide, should and I think does awake in every man who sees and hears him speak, a sense of how much one man can do for his fellow creatures, and must surely stir in them striving to imitate his good example. A conference such as the present one must be tremendous help to the Bishop and Clergy of this diocese. I fear we are all apt to forget the tremendous size of Carpentaria and the difficulties with which its ministers have to contend. Our own Bishop has thus, besides the cares and worries of our parish with which we may be familiar, the worry and administration of one of the largest dioceses in the world, and such a diocese, composed as it is of parishes scattered throughout its breadth, in many instances with poor communication, presents problems with which we generally speaking are not familiar. It should also be remembered that each separate parish owes its living to some different industry, be it pearlshelling, pastoral, mining, agriculture or what it may, it must necessarily produce different features in the parish life and organization. It follows then that if on one Bishop's shoulders rests such responsibility, on those of the Archbishop rests the much greater task of controlling the work and problems of the combined dioceses of Queensland. Yet we see these men going cheerfully on their way, helping, comforting, and working with untiring energy, and perhaps we are apt to forget how much we owe to them.

He was followed by the Bishop, who spoke of the breadth of view, strength of character, and comity of the Archbishop as a public man.

The Archbishop replied in a most happy speech and said that he had been much struck by the warm welcome he had received and the reality of Church life at Thursday Island. Mr. Wells and the Sub-dean then welcomed the visiting clergy, and Revs. W. E. Godson and W. W. Morrison made reply. A most pleasant evening was passed.

The Archbishop, Revs. W. E. Godson and A. M. Hassell and Sisters Esther and Kathleen of Melbourne, who had been the guests of the Bishop and Miss White during the Conference, left next day for the south by the Aramac; and the Sub-dean, Revs. J. Prankerd, W. W. Morrison, and Mr. Woodd left the following day in the Mission lugger Lily for the Mitchell River and Normanton; thus bringing to a close the most successful Conference yet held in the diocese.

THE DIOCESE.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east, by the Northern Territory on the west, and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19 deg. 30 min. in the western boundary of Queensland due east par. 144 and thence N. to lat. S. 16 deg. 40 min., and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory of South Australia, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 sq. miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 16,500 whites, 7,000 Japanese, Chinese and other aliens, and 35,000 aborigines. The white population is chiefly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre N. of Cap. York.

FINANCE.

The Diocese has no endowment beyond the Bishop's income of £300 per annum.

MISSIONS.

Missions are carried on among the Japanese at Thursday Island, among the S. Sea Islanders at Thursday Island, Mosman, and Moa, and among the aboriginals on the Mitchell and Roper Rivers.

SPECIAL OFFERTORIES.

On Easter Day the offertories are given to the largesse of the Parish, and on Good Friday to the Australian Board of Missions.

BUILDING REGULATIONS.

Plans for the building or alteration of Churches, Church Rooms, and Rectories must be submitted to the Bishop for approval before any contract is entered into, but such approval does not imply any Diocesan responsibility for the cost of the same.

No alteration may be made in any consecrated building without a faculty from the Bishop.

FROM MARRIAGE REGULATIONS.

2. No marriage may be celebrated otherwise than by banns or by Episcopal license.

4. No Surrogate may issue a license for, or any clergyman celebrate the marriage of, any divorced person whatsoever without reference to the Bishop, and permission obtained from him.

5. No marriage may be celebrated otherwise than in a Church or accustomed place of public worship except by express permission of the Bishop; provided that in urgent cases, founded on special circumstances, when reference to the Bishop is practically impossible, the clergyman shall act on his discretion, and forthwith report the circumstances to the Bishop.

7. The authorised fee for the Bishop's license is £3 3s. The Surrogate is authorised to retain for his own use this fee, with the exception of 10s. 6d. which is payable to the Church Management Fund. Where only £2 2s. or a smaller sum is paid, the Surrogate is authorised to retain three-fourths of the fee paid.

Speech of the Bishop of Carpentaria

IN GENERAL SYNOD IN SUPPORT OF HIS MOTION ON BEHALF OF THE ABORIGINES

I rise to speak for those who have neither the power to use our tongue, nor, had they the use of it, the ability to put in order their plea. I speak for those who have no force to compel your attention other than the power of the silent appeal of the weak to the strong, of the child to the full-grown wisdom of the man, of those who sit in spiritual darkness to those whose minds are enlightened from on high.

It is hard for us to realise that where now there lies this great city, dowered with every gift of the most complete civilisation the world has yet seen, but four generations ago the wandering aboriginal with his stone age civilisation was the only representative of the human race, and that where now stands a cathedral built for the centuries to come he was related to the spiritual world only by those weird dances and wailing songs whose meaning he had perhaps even then forgotten.

From the greater part of Australia, their primitive race has withered away before our robust and self-asserting civilisation as a feeble plant wilts under the hot Australian sun. And to-day some 70,000 in the far north are practically all that are left of those who for thousands of years have alone represented our race on this great continent.

I do not see that much is to be gained by asking whether in the inevitable and necessary process of the dispossession of the lower race by a higher, we have always behaved as a gentleman should behave.

If a strong man finds a small child in his way he will quietly take him up and put him down safely out of the way even though the child should shake its fist and declare passionately that the road belonged to him.

If the strong man broke the child's leg with a kick, and then left him to die where he lay, we should perhaps be tempted to say that he had an imperfect appreciation of the duties and privileges of manhood.

We however are concerned not with the past but with the present, and even if we have qualms as to what is done we need not be ungenerous enough to allow that to keep us from right action to-day.

I am asking the Synod to affirm that the physical, moral, and spiritual care of the aborigines is a national responsibility.

There are some duties that we accept as worthy of our growth and manhood, there are others that are with us from the fact of our birth and are not to be repudiated without the charge of want of natural feeling.

However far the aboriginal may be below us in capacity or in character we cannot deny that he has been with us from the day of our national birth. He was already in possession, like some feeble Ishmael, of the house from which we were to dispossess him, nor need we grudge him the small sign and acknowledgement of a common fatherhood, the piece of bread and bottle of water and the far off wilderness of Parana in which to live undisturbed in his hunting.

I have said that the responsibility is for the physical, moral, and spiritual care of the aborigines. I have spoken of the duty of caring for the physical needs of the feeble and dispossessed native, and no one here and few outside are likely to deny it, but it is obvious that whether for their sake or for our own sake we cannot stop with care for the physical needs. We must see not only that they live but that they live like human beings. We have largely destroyed the sanction of the old tribal laws and customs which set up a standard of moral conduct and mutual consideration low indeed compared to our ideas, but real and effective so far as it went. We are bound to give them in its place some moral ideal which will raise them at least as far above the beasts as did their old code, and teach right conduct both towards ourselves and each other. This is an obvious and necessary duty, and experience seems to show that it can only be satisfactorily performed by an appeal to that spiritual capacity which they possess as well as we. Public secular missions to our reserves for the aborigines have not been a success, and hence we claim that it is the duty of the State to see that the aborigines have the opportunity of receiving those spiritual ministrations which alone can supply the moral stimulus by which they can live and act as responsible human beings.

I ask you to declare that this national responsibility rests alike on the individual States and on the whole people of the Commonwealth.

While on the one hand nothing can withdraw from the individual State its responsibility for its own aborigines, it is obviously unfair that the older and more populous States should leave all the burden to those newer and less settled States where nine-tenths of the remaining aborigines are to be found. I wish I could ask you to declare your opinion that it was the duty of the Commonwealth to assume all financial responsibility for the aborigines, but the suggestion seems to me at present impossible owing partly to the disinclination of States to part with rights of land and police control, and partly to the fact that the aborigines are specially exempted by the Federal Constitution from Commonwealth control. No one would welcome more than I a Federal assumption of national responsibility for the aborigines, but I earnestly hope that this House will neither by speech or resolution do anything to weaken the State sense of responsibility before it is quite certain that it can be replaced by a more adequate Federal control. I must in justice add that it appears to me that of late years the States have been increasingly recognising their duties and responsibilities and are now honestly anxious to do what is right by the aborigines, except that the amount of expenditure allowed for the Aboriginal Department by public opinion in the States most concerned is still utterly inadequate. What I desire is that in some way the older States should take their proper share in the burden and responsibility as a national duty and not merely in the way of voluntary religious and philanthropic effort. When once public opinion recognises the responsibility it will probably not be difficult to solve the problems of method.

I do not think that I need detain you over the last part of my motion. I do not say, however much I may think, that missions to the aborigines are the primary duty of the Church in Australia, but no one in this House will I think deny that they are a primary duty, and I move this resolution only for the purpose of reminding the Church that a primary duty is still largely unfulfilled: that men and women whom you have sent forth to fulfil it for you are doing this work of yours on wages so small that no worker would accept them for work however unskilled and inefficient. This does not trouble them, nor have they said they desire it otherwise, but it does trouble them that, while they are giving life and all for the work, the Church that sends them out should withhold, not only that which they willingly forego, an adequate reward for their labour, but that in the withholding of which they cannot quietly acquiesce without protest, the means of taking advantage of the great opportunities which are opening around them of a childlike people to develop those capacities of manhood which only wait to be developed for them to become a self-respecting and self-supporting Christian people.

I have not the eloquence to make an impassioned appeal, and if I had I would disdain to make use of it. The case is so strong that it needs no special pleading. Though he knows not that he is so, one of the least of the brethren of Christ lies at the door and as such he will not plead in vain.

Race Prejudice.

"Race Prejudice" is the title of an interesting book by M. Jean Finot. It is written from a purely scientific standpoint and the author has certainly no religious bias. M. Finot begins by attacking the gospel of the inequality of the races, and has no difficulty in showing the utter unreliability and contradiction of those who would have permanent distinctions of race on craniological measurements, size and weight of brain, prognathism, facial angle, etc. or on hair, height, or colour. He shows the enormous extent to which these things are dependent on climate, nourishment, education, and environment, so that the differences between men of various classes and occupations in the same nations is often far greater than between the average man of totally different nationalities, while the difference between the highest and lowest type of man is as nothing compared with the difference between the lowest man and the highest ape.

M. Finot goes on to show there is no European race that is not the result of constant and successive mixture of race and that those which are accounted highest, as the French, English, and German, are of all nations the most mixed, and that as a matter of fact unmixed races tend to degeneration and decay. He shows that so-called racial psychological characteristics are impossible of definition because they are constantly changing, and that even the best French writers for instance are unable to agree as to what it is that constitutes the French mind or the French character. Finally he discusses the question "Are there any races condemned to remain eternally inferior to others?" and after a study of the American negro he replies emphatically in the negative. He shows the wonderful progress made during the last 30 years in spite of immense difficulties and prejudice and refers to the fact that the physical characteristics of the negroes are changing and approximating more to the white type, while the white type in America is itself changing and approximating more to the Red Indian type with its pointed and angular face, leathery skin, long neck, and deep-set eyes, and thin body.

It is certainly curious to find a French scientist, who thinks that men "have created the Divin" according to their own character and fancy," confirming the advocates of Christian Missions in their claim that there is no race so low as to be necessarily condemned to a position of moral and social inferiority, or incapable of rising to a new conception of life and duty.

The Brisbane Cathedral.

Twenty-five years ago a man dreamed of a great and beautiful cathedral in Brisbane. It was to be of the very best, "I would rather have no cathedral at all than one without a stone groined roof" he said to the writer, who confesses with shame that he said to himself, "Then there will be no cathedral." Twenty years ago a second man drew the plans for a stately temple on a site that he had never seen, and to stand among surroundings which he could probably little realise. Six years ago the dreamer of a cathedral passed away from earth, ere the foundation was laid, and a third man took up the work and has brought the first stage of it to a triumphantly successful issue.

It is not proposed here to give an account of the magnificent services that were held, or to describe in detail the wonderful building which surpasses in beauty anything else in Australia, even in its present unfinished condition. These details are accessible to all in the special number of the "Church Chronicle," which, with its profuse illustrations, is issued by the Church Book Depot, Ann Street, Brisbane, at the modest cost of 6d. post free. We propose only to give a few random notes on points of special interest.

THE SITE.—The site is a commanding one overlooking the Custom House and the river. Some day no doubt a great wall will be built up from the street below the East end, and then there will be a magnificent view of the building towering above. The cathedral is a great central landmark for every ship coming up the river. The House of God will be the first thing that catches every stranger's eye as he approaches the heart of the city.

THE EXTERIOR.—Two great deficiencies mar the outward effect. The towers and spires are yet unbuilt, and the absence of the greater part of the nave gives the whole building a truncated appearance. In spite of these unavoidable defects the pile of building is a very noble one. The stone is a red porphyry largely marked with purplish grey and chrome yellow. The total effect is a very beautiful tint of red which is at present somewhat killed by the staring red of the roofing tiles, but will reassert itself as these darken in colour. The South porch is a kind of "Beautiful Gate of the Temple" and will be much admired.

THE INTERIOR.—In the interior again the symmetry of the whole is marred by the temporary brick wall which marks where the rest of the nave will be, but in spite of this the scene is one of great beauty and dignity.

VARIETY.—The first thought that strikes one is the wonderful variety. Here is no work turned out as per pattern at so much per yard. Everywhere are signs of care, thought, imagination, adaptation, variety and growth. The great Rose window in the North Transept is matched by six broad lancet windows in the South Transept. The Chapel of the Holy Innocents on the North side is balanced by a much wider and absolutely different Galilee on the South side. The pillars are of varied size and thickness, but all wonderfully slender when we look at the weight of the roof. It is only their number that enables them to carry the weight in safety. Wherever one looks the note is variety and spontaneity.

THE ROOF.—The great feature of the cathedral, and here it is unique in Australia, is that there is no break when you came to the ceiling. The stone runs up into and forms the groined roof. When one thinks of the enormous weight of the stone—the central boss of the transept weighs 7 tons—one realises the pressure on the slender pillars and admires the skill which has balanced those great masses of stone overhead without any apparent support.

THE PULPIT.—The pulpit is vast, square and classical. Beautiful as it is one is not quite certain that it is in place in a Gothic building while the colour of the soapstone contrasts strangely with the general effect of the building. It is perhaps more striking than entirely satisfactory.

THE LIGHTING.—The cathedral is lighted by clusters of electric lights hung from the roof. The effect is very beautiful, and the light strong and good without being dazzling.

THE AMBULATORY.—The ambulatory is a new feature in an Australian cathedral and one that adds immensely to the effect of processions, which enter by the north door, cross to the south aisle, and then pass singing as they go along the ambulatory behind the altar, half seen and half heard, to emerge again on the north aisle and enter the chancel.

THE SANCTUARY.—The chancel is apsidal with a comparatively small detached altar and reredos, in front of which is a vast open space which adds enormously to the effect and gives room for ceremonies.

FINANCE.—The work to date has cost about £62,000 and there is still a debt of about £4000, which is small compared to the amount that has been spent. It will cost at least £50,000 more to complete the work.

THE CONSECRATION.—The service on Friday October 28 was a most solemn and impressive one and will never be forgotten by those who were privileged to take part in it. The visiting Bishops included the Primate, the Bishop of Newcastle and Bishop Stone-Wigg, together with the Bishops of the Province of Queensland i.e., Carpentaria, North Queensland, Rockhampton and New Guinea. Most of the Brisbane clergy and many visiting clergy were also present. The cathedral was of course packed to its utmost capacity at both services on Friday and on Sunday. The meeting in the Exhibition Building was also most inspiring, and shows that the church in Brisbane has a real hold on the hearts of the people. The Archbishop and the churchmen of Brisbane are heartily to be congratulated on the great work that they have accomplished.

There is now in Queensland a building which worthily shows the very best that man can do in making an offering to God. We have a "poem in stone" which is a worthy expression of human aspiration. We hope that churchmen in our own diocese will show their sympathy and appreciation of the great effort made by the Brisbane diocese by sending their subscriptions towards the reduction of the debt which still remains. Any contributions however small will be gladly received and forwarded by the secretary of the "Carpentarian."

A Visit to St. Paul's, Moa.

By MRS. NASH.

On September 8 I was invited by Deaconess Buchanan to accompany her to Moa. Accordingly we met on the jetty at the time arranged, and the Bishop came to photograph the little mission cutter as we sailed away in the sunshine and a brisk wind. The "Banzai" is a small boat, but it was very comfortable to lie upon her deck covered by Deaconess's canvas, and to listen to the songs and snatches the latter sang to pass away the time. Now and then we shipped a huge wave, and but for the canvas must have got drenched. I hoped we should keep well. We did, in spite of the rough wind and sea. On arrival at Moa, with our flag hoisted, we were rowed to shore in the dinghy, and met many of the settlement who had come down to greet us on the beach. It was very pleasant to meet again, and to feel I had come to stay. I took up my quarters in the schoolhouse, and was well tended and cared for by good Fanny Bann. A history of how each day was spent should not be omitted. At 6 o'clock the bell outside Dea-

Deaconess's grass house summoned all the boys and girls to go and swim. Bob the policeman to take charge of the boys in the creek; and the girls swam in the sea within the reef. They occasionally fetched me out at this early hour to go and swim, but I much preferred a later time of day, and I usually went at 5 o'clock p.m., when it was cooler. At 7.15 Deaconess's bell for prayers was rung. Prayers took place in her grass house, and it was a privilege to be there and see the reverent behaviour of the men, women, and children, and hear the singing of the hymns and the practical words Deaconess spoke after reading the Bible lesson. The answers to her questions were wonderfully good. Then the bell at 8.30 was for the general breakfast, and at 9.30 the bell rang for school. Now school must be a happy institution to every child at Moa, for they all look smiling as they form into two lines, the boys on one side and girls the other, and salute their teacher as she passes through to the school. The little verses of "To and Fro" as they marched in with arms folded and heads erect are still constantly ringing in my ears, as are also the many little songs they were in the habit of singing at other times as well as in school. The Scripture class is the class of the morning, and wonderfully well do the children answer. I had the pleasure of being allowed to help with the arithmetic a little and to give a lesson in netting during the afternoon to some of the senior boys and girls. After school a party of girls escorted me to swim as a rule, and great noise, shouting and singing, took place in the water. They dive like young fish. Much to my surprise, one day a child asked me if I had been speared, and I found out that he asked me because of the deep vaccination marks on my arm. They were also pleased because I had white feet. Tea at 6, followed by evening prayers in the grass house, by no means ended the day for Miss Buchanan. She had a class each night of one kind or another—Bible, a choir practice, or reading. A good many men are learning to read so as to be able to instruct their little ones by-and-bye. I have omitted to say that all the twenty houses in Moa, with only one exception, are built of dried grass, and very picture-que they are. The settlement is governed by two councillors and two policemen, who see the laws are carried out. A bell at 9 o'clock, rung by Sonny the councillor, means every child must go to bed. One night as I was paying some late calls on the wives while the husbands were learning to read, I came across a house where the four children were all gathered round the mother with a sleeping child in her arms, singing the hymn over we had had at prayers. I asked if I might come in. The lamp was burning in the middle of the room, and we all lay on squatted round. The baby was asleep on a mat. I never felt so much impressed as I did at their simple room, with just plain mats for beds. Then at 10 o'clock the last bell goes to warn everyone to go to his own house. No one is allowed out after 10 o'clock, so yawning is not encouraged. One afternoon Deaconess and I gathered together some of the women to tell them about the Mothers' Union; and so greatly interested were they, they promised to go home and think about it, first of all to give up whatever in their lives was not in keeping with its rules, such as "smoking," "wild ways," "swear words," and "untrue yawning." I firmly believe they are in real earnest, and are making a great effort to overcome these failings. They have so little variety in their lives, and no cups of tea as we have to refresh them, that one feels it is very pathetic. Deaconess writes to me that "the women are still radiant," so with the help of our prayers I feel sure they will be victorious in the hard battle they are fighting. Meat is not to be had at Moa, unless the men and boys are successful in the bush on their holiday and bring home wild fowls, wild pigs, and porcupines. Those who own a sailing-boat occasionally bring home turtles; and one day while I was there two pigs and four turtles were caught, so kiki was very plentiful. Saturday night is the great preparation time for Sunday, and all cooking is done. In their gardens they grow bananas, paw-paws, mangoes, yams, pine apples, and pumpkins and water melons. They eat (Eastern fashion) all sitting round and helping themselves with their fingers out of a big dish. No cottage has a chair; they all squat. Damper is the bread they make, and when well made is very good, I believe.

Sunday is a day of great toil to Deaconess, though a great joy, for she begins with service in the school at 9 o'clock, followed by Sunday School; then a women's Bible Class, men's Bible Class, and little children's class and magic lantern service at 6.30 to finish the day with. The bush fires round caused some anxiety, and all the men in the last Sunday evening service were ordered out by the councillors to beat the fires down. It had begun on Saturday, and now encroached so near the school as to excite great alarm. One day I was rowed by two of the girls in a dinghy inside the reef; and another day we waded to the reef and speared fish and threw a line for fish. Another day I was taken by two of the girls to the alligators' creek, a beautiful walk along the shore, and once into the bush for orchids. One can never feel dull at Moa, there is so much to see. The time for leaving came at last, and I found myself on the morning of September 26 surrounded by kind friends on the beach, all come to wish me good-bye. My visit had been such a rest and refreshment to me, and it was like leaving home.

One of the councillors began a day or two before to call me "Mother," so now when a letter comes for me it is addressed to the "Mother of Moa"! I shall certainly always look back with pleasure to this happy time, and often think of the kindness shown to me by Deaconess and the whole of the settlement.

A Visit to Trubanaman

It had been arranged that I should visit the Trubanaman Mission Station after the Diocesan Conference had closed. The "Lily" had brought two of the clergy to the conference, and there were four passengers on the return trip: Mr. Pranker, returning to Croydon; Mr. Morrison, desirous of visiting Mapoon and Trubanaman; Mr. Woodd, taking over Mr. Roy's place at the mission; and myself. The sea was lumpy and the darkness intense as we went on board at 10 p.m. on Tuesday, September 6. The deck was lumbered with baggage and livestock—a dog, a goat, and pens of fowls and pigeons. It was impossible to reduce things to order in the darkness, so we tried to sleep, two in the cabin and two on deck.

Before 6 o'clock next morning we were sailing out of the harbour, and during the day made fair progress down the west side of Prince of Wales Island and so into the Gulf. With brilliant sunshine and a fair wind the day passed pleasantly, and as the sun dipped into the sea the crew mustered for prayers, and the notes of "Sun of my soul" sounded tunefully through the darkness.

In such a climate the deck is a very comfortable sleeping place; there is generally a good breeze at night and the easy motion of the little ship brings sleep almost too quickly, interrupting as it does your study of the southern constellations, among which the masthead like the point of a big pencil is drawing all sorts of fanciful figures.

Delayed by light winds, we did not reach Mapoon till 3.30 on September 8. We could only spare a few hours, so we set off at once with Mr. Hey to visit one of his out-stations and inspect his method of agriculture. The settlement is nineteen years old and is a striking monument to the unwearied patience and resourcefulness of Mr. Hey in the face of very great difficulties.

This pleasant interlude was followed by four days steady sailing, interrupted only by a regular afternoon calm. The coastline, when visible, is utterly monotonous and uninteresting; but life on board was not dull. If reading and talking flagged at any time the dog and the goat were always ready with a comic interlude—all the funnier because neither of them smiled. Ginger is a young dog and has evidently never seen a goat before; he thinks horns are a new fashion in head gear and wants to know all about them. Billy suddenly tells him something; and Ginger, after licking the sore place for a minute, returns for further investigation.

We were, of course, trailing a line and hook, and one afternoon a keen debate between two of the passengers was interrupted by cries of "Fish." As we had lost one the day before in the act of getting it on board, we were determined to get this one in safely. The operation was skilfully carried out, and in a very short time a fine 20lb. kingfish was hauled in, killed and cut up, and boiled merrily in the pot.

That day the sea was full of life; turtles and snakes in particular were plentiful. The most interesting beast was the diamond fish, a very big skate-like creature with a bad reputation. It is said to be the terror of the swimming divers, as it will embrace a man and drown him just for pure wickedness.

At 9 a.m. on the 13th we dropped anchor at the beacon which marks the landing place for Trubanaman, the Mission Station being nine miles from the sea. We had to walk this, through bush and over desert flats of sand and clay. On arrival lunch was followed by a preliminary inspection of the station and a swim in the lagoon.

At Evensong the singing was good and hearty. I gave a short address.

Every morning began with a swim in the lagoon before 7 o'clock matins. After breakfast the superintendent is busy at the hospital; then the aborigines set to work on their various tasks under the supervision of Mr. Matthews, Mr. Woodd, or one of the Melanesian assistants. There is plenty to do, even when the ground is too dry to work, in the way of fencing, gardening, wood-cutting and well-sinking, and other improvements. The houses are of picturesque design, thatched with cabbage palm, and the station is charmingly situated on a lovely lagoon.

Religious Instruction in State Schools.

The Bill to give effect to the will of the people as expressed at the Referendum on Religious Instruction in State Schools has now passed through all its stages and become law. Considering that the Premier and the Minister in charge of the Bill in the Legislative Council expressed themselves as personally opposed to the Bill we have every reason to be thankful for the firmness with which the Government resisted every attempt to mutilate the Bill by amendments and carried it through unchanged to a successful issue.

We deeply regret that the most violent and bitter opposition to the Bill came not from those who were opposed to all religion but from our fellow Christians, the Roman Catholic members of the Legislative Council, who not content with the most violent language attempted to block the Bill by stonewalling and by disputing the third reading.

We are not of those who think that Roman Catholic opposition is of small moment. It appears to us a most deplorable thing that at a time when a great effort has been made to secure for our children a Christian education, a large body of our fellow Christians should be willing to sacrifice the good of all who are not Roman Catholics because the denominational schools which they have established, and for which to their honour they have made such sacrifices, do not benefit by it. There is no doubt that this is the real trouble, for the plea that injustice is done to Roman Catholics by the present law is too absurd to be seriously considered.

In answer to the Roman Catholic demand for aid for denominational schools we reply that it cannot be granted so long as the present law holds good. We are satisfied that the Government should have full control of education so long as there is adequate provision for religious instruction. We are satisfied now and shall remain satisfied so long as the present law holds good. This is why our Roman Catholic friends are angry. We are sorry, but as we believe that the law does injustice to no one, we do not see our way to help it. Angry threats have been made that the law will be repealed before it has a chance of being tried. We can not believe that any party would so deliberately set itself against the declared will of the people. If it is tried and found wanting owing to either our sloth or inefficiency in taking advantage of our opportunities, or because we are foolish enough to walk into the obvious snare which has been set for our feet and stir up sectarian strife by replying with bitterness to the abuse with which we have been assailed, then it is probable indeed that the law will be repealed and never re-enacted, but we have every confidence that the grace of God, which we believe has hitherto been with us, will save us from either alternative, and that the Bill which has now become law will remain and be of inestimable service in bringing up future generations of Queenslanders in the knowledge of God and His Holy Word.

Conference With Presbyterians.

The following resolutions were passed by a conference which met in Melbourne in November, 1906, and October, 1907, and are now made public.

The Church of England was represented by the Archbishop of Melbourne, the Bishops of Grafton and Armidale, Gippsland, Newcastle, Archdeacons Hindly, Le Fanu and Nield; Canons Boyce, Stephen and Nash; Messrs. H. Henty and W. E. Norris.

The Presbyterian Church was represented by Mr. Rev. J. E. Clouston, D.D., Moderator of the General Assembly; Mr. Rev. T. R. Cairns, D.D., Moderator of the Victorian Assembly; Revs. J. McKelvey, D.D., J. Gibson, W. G. Machonachie, M.A., J. Matthew, M.A., J. R. Robertson, M.A., A. Stewart, M.A., A. Yule, M.A., J. G. Millar, Hon. J. Balfour; Messrs. T. J. Finlay and R. Gillespie.

1. We hold the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testament, as containing all things necessary to salvation, to be the rule and ultimate standard of faith.

2. We accept the Apostles' Creed and the Nicene creed as expressing the fundamental doctrines of the Christian faith, and as an adequate basis for any further formulated statement of Christian truth that may be needed.

3. We agree that there are two sacraments ordained by Christ Himself—Baptism and the Supper of the Lord—which must be ministered with unflinching use of Christ's words of institution and of the elements ordained by Him.

4. That the act of ordination, when regularly administered, involves prayer and the imposition of hands.

5. With regard to ordination, this Conference affirms the following to be essential conditions:—

1. Full membership of the Church.
2. The inward and personal call of the Holy Spirit.
3. The recognition by the Church of this call after due inquiry into personal fitness.

6. The laying on of hands in ordination we understand to be a visible symbol of the bestowal, in answer to the prayer of faith, of authority and grace by the Holy Spirit for the work of the ministry.

7. The authority to perform an act of ordination comes from God the Father, through Christ the Mediator, by the Holy Spirit as the Living Agent in the Church, and is exercised by the appointed officers of the Church.

8. We are opposed to the establishment of a State Church in Australia, and the President is authorised to make it is fact known at his discretion.

9. We recognise that up to the period of the reformation there was one common succession of Orders, and that since that time the practice of Ordination has been continued, and the act of Ordination has been performed (a) in the Anglican Church by a Bishop and Presbyter, and (b) in the Presbyterian Church by a Presbytery presided over by a Moderator.

10. That a Union of the Church of England in Australia and Tasmania and the Presbyterian Church of Australia be effected and consummated by a joint Solemn Act under the authority and sanction of both Churches, in which each Church shall confer upon the Presbyters of the other all the rights and privileges necessary for the exercise of their office in the United Church, so that from the moment of such Union all the Presbyters of each Church shall have equal status in the United Church. [A minority of two Anglican members declined to recommend this resolution, but expressed their willingness that it should be referred to the Lambeth Conference.]

11. That some form of individual superintendence and government, constitutionally exercised, is expedient for the United Church, and that authority to exercise such superintendence and government shall be conferred by a Solemn Act of Consecration duly administered on a Presbyter, with the title of Bishop exclusively attached.

12. That the person to hold the office of Bishop shall be elected by the Church in accordance with Regulation duly authorised.

13. That a Bishop, in his administration, shall be subject to all duly enacted laws of the Church.

14. That the length of tenure of office as a Bishop having jurisdiction shall be determined by the Church.

15. This Conference while recognising that the authority to perform an act of ordination is inherent in the Church, agrees that, as a matter of order, in the United Church, all ordinations of persons to the office of Presbyter as Ministers of the Word and Sacraments shall be by a Bishop and three Presbyters at least.

And further, that in the consecration of every Bishop, three Bishops at least shall take part, and such Presbyters as may be appointed for the purpose.

16. That liturgical and non-liturgical forms of worship be authorised, and that the use of the Book of Common Prayer be sanctioned by authority.

17. That there be an order of Deacons or licentiates, who are ordained to office, and may be allowed to preach the Gospel, but are not allowed to dispense the Lord's Supper.

18. That there be an order of officers whose office shall be analogous to that of Churchwardens and Elders, appointed to help in the pastoral oversight and government of the Church, but not for the administering of the Sacraments, and that these officers shall be elected by the communicants of each several congregation, and shall be set apart to their office by a form of ordination without the laying-on of hands.

The General Synod.

The General Synod of 1910 has come and gone, and a short summary of its work should interest our readers.

THE PRESIDENT.

In the first place we had a new President and in this capacity the Primate has won general respect and approval. Several changes were introduced. The Bishops, preceded by the Primate and staff bearer, entered punctually to the minute, forming in their scarlet robes an imposing procession, and the concluding Te Deum was said in the cathedral. The President resolutely discouraged unnecessary eloquence and set an example of self denial in this matter himself. He showed himself a master of procedure, and was clear and firm in his rulings, and absolutely impartial.

EUCCHARISTIC VESTMENTS.

The debate which attracted most outside attention was that on the use of Eucharistic Vestments, the accommodation reserved for the public being crowded out more than two hours before the Synod met. The motion of Archdeacon Williams, of Townsville, was a careful and moderate plea for tolerance, on the ground of the fact that their use was apparently enjoined by the Prayer Book, and that the judgment of the Privy Council against them was admittedly of doubtful soundness. The debate was, with two deplorable exceptions, conducted on a remarkably high level of good temper and charity, each side giving the other credit for conscientiousness and honest conviction. Such prominent evangelicals as Bishop Moule of Durham, Bishop Drury of Sodor and Man, Bishops Chevasse and Ryle of Liverpool, were quoted as favouring the permissive use of vestments under proper restrictions, and the same line was taken by the Archbishop of Brisbane and the Bishop of Wangaratta, who said that though he did not like them himself they had come to stay and ought to be legalised. After a most interesting and educative debate the mover at the request of the Archbishop of Brisbane and the Bishop of Perth withdrew his motion lest it should in any way be construed as a vote of censure on the Primate; the technical legality of whose decision on the matter was not disputed.

"CATHOLIC."

Happily only one day was wasted over this matter which is really of trivial importance since it was generally agreed that the vestments were in no way significant of Roman doctrine. A useful resolution was proposed by Dr. Leeper and unanimously carried:—"That this Synod place on record its emphatic disapproval of the practice too prevalent even among Anglicans of applying the word "Catholic" exclusively to the members of the religious denomination which acknowledges the supremacy of the Bishop of Rome; and that the Synod would earnestly remind all Anglicans that such use by them is inconsistent with well-established historical fact, involves a surrender of vital principle, and inflicts a grievous wrong upon the Church of their Baptism by implying that it is a "non-Catholic" and schismatical body."

ORDINATION CANDIDATES.

The Bishop of Ballarat brought up the necessity of aiding candidates for ordination; and it was resolved to start an Ordination Candidates Fund, a beginning of which would be made by a grant of £3000 for the purpose from the Pan-Anglican Offering Fund.

AUSTRALIAN HYMN BOOK.

One matter which may have far reaching results was the appointment of a committee to draw up an Australian Hymn Book, which was to be inclusive of all aspects of Australian Church life and feeling. We have all felt how utterly inappropriate some of our hymns are for Australian climate and conditions, and if the work is well done and wins its way, which it will have to do by its own merits, into general acceptance it may do much towards unifying the Church.

PRAYER BOOK.

A committee was also appointed to draw up additional services and to suggest such adaptations of the Book of Common Prayer to the needs of our church in Australia as may be possible when our constitutions allow us to alter the book, which they do not do at present.

COLLEGE OF THEOLOGY.

The examination for the Th. L. (Licentiate in Theology), which had previously been restricted to clergy and candidates for Holy Orders, has now by determination of Synod been opened to all members of the Church of England.

ASSESSMENT FOR MISSIONARY PURPOSES

On the motion of the Bishop of Rockhampton it was resolved—"That this Synod approves of the principle of voluntary assessment of dioceses for missionary purposes, and commends it to the several dioceses for adoption. This resolution is one of great importance, for it is a step towards the only fair way of raising missionary funds, i.e., dividing the sum needed between the dioceses in proportion to their population, communicants and wealth, as is done in the Church of the United States.

ELECTION OF PRIMATE.

A new determination was passed prescribing the method to be adopted in the election of Primate. Some time was lost in endeavouring to find a good method of Preferential Voting, the Victorian members being very anxious that the Victorian system should be adopted. It was however rejected in favour of a system of successive ballots with a casting vote for the senior Bishop if after three ballots the votes were still equal.

OPIUM SMOKING.

A motion was proposed by Canon Tomlin and passed to the following effect:—"That this Synod appreciates the noble efforts now being made by the Chinese Government to curb the vice of opium smoking in China, and respectfully urges His Majesty's Imperial Government to put an immediate stop, at all costs, to the opium traffic, and asks His Grace the President to transmit this resolution to the right quarter."

THE ABORIGINES.

It was proposed by the Bishop of Carpentaria and carried unanimously:—"That in the opinion of this Synod the physical, moral, and spiritual care of the Aborigines is a national responsibility resting both on the individual States and also on the whole people of the Commonwealth, and the promotion of Aboriginal missions is a primary duty of the Church in Australia."

The Bishop's speech will be found elsewhere in this issue. It was also announced that the Bishops would devote their Pastoral letter solely to the claims of the Aborigines.

REUNION.

A large committee was appointed to continue the work of conference with a view to Reunion with Presbyterians and others. The results of the negotiations of the late committee were laid on the table and are printed in this issue.

Francis Pritt.

Our old friend the Francis Pritt has been sold for the reasons given in the Bishop's Conference address. She brought £280 and has been renamed the Mabaduan and gone to New Guinea. A sum of £288 has been placed in the Q.N. Bank to the credit of a Francis Pritt Fund for the purpose of building a new boat as soon as she is needed. The new Francis Pritt will be of more shallow draft and built specially for mission needs. It will be long before any new boat will take the place of the old Francis Pritt in our affections. We may get a more suitable boat for our needs but never a more beautiful or more seaworthy ship.

St. Michael and All Angels' Church, Georgetown.

It is now some time since I sent any notes from this district to the "Carpentarian," there is so very little going on that it would be hard to write something which would interest the many people who read this diocesan paper. The one great advance we have made is the erection of a social room on the Church grounds, certainly it is not a large one, 16ft. by 12ft., but we shall no doubt soon be able to enlarge it. The room will be a great help to the general working of the parish. Up to the present we have had to have all meetings, etc., in the Church, which will now be avoided, and we hope that the room will be the means of drawing some of the lads from the streets of a night. We have not had a formal opening of it, but hope before long to give a "Coin Tea" which will be the means of getting the people together sociably. Our aim is to teach the people to support their Church with freewill offerings, this they have done admirably having collected since July, 1909, very nearly £150 for building purposes alone. We have now I think everything for the Church which one could wish for. Our last addition to the Church is a font which is being made out of silky oak with a leaden bowl and drain pipe through the centre, and a cover with a small cross surmounting it all; we hope to have it here by Christmas.

So far as to buildings, etc., the people have responded grandly, but of far more and deeper importance are their own personal spiritual lives, and here the outlook is not so satisfactory. We are expecting the Rev. J. Pranker here at the end of the week on his quarterly visit to administer the Sacrament of Holy Communion; such a time we do, or must I say "ought to," look forward to. Certainly there are some who do so, as we so seldom have this opportunity of obeying our Lord's command.

Why

You should be a subscriber to the "A.B.M. Review."

Because it will tell you what your Church is doing in the Mission Field.

Because it will remind you of your duty to share in this work.

Because it will help you to understand the real meaning of your membership in Christ's Church.

Because it will help your own spiritual life to keep in touch with the work of God among the heathen.

Because it will make you a more helpful and useful Christian to know more about mission work.

Because to know about the work will lead you to take a fuller share in it and to know more perfectly the joy of Christian Service.

Subscriptions 1s. 6d. per annum post free. One dozen copies, One Shilling post free. This is a very advantageous offer and should be taken advantage of by the parishes.

London, W.C., April 2, 1910.

My dear Lord Bishop.

I venture to ask your Lordship whether anything can be done in your diocese to enlist more support for this old society. Ever since (and even before) the diocese was formed, the S.P.C.K. has been helping to build churches and schools, to train up a native clergy, to grant books, and to assist in many other ways. The increase in the number of colonial and foreign dioceses has made the calls on the society's income far more numerous and insistent, and at the same time its subscription list has decreased. Some of the dioceses outside England that we have helped for many years are now in a firmer position. Is it too much to ask that they should begin to contribute to the old society, so that it may be enabled to help other dioceses, which are still in need of assistance? In some of these older dioceses the collections in the churches on one particular Sunday have been set apart annually for S.P.C.K. and these contributions have been most gratefully received by us. This plan may not be possible in all dioceses, but I venture to urge that some recognition of the work done for so many years might be annually made by those (whether clergy or laity) who could afford it. "We have nothing which we have not received," and a due appreciation of this truth in all its aspects might lead to a more general support being given to the oldest Missionary Society in the Church of England. —I have the honour to be, Your obedient servant, W. OSBORN B. ALLEN, Secretary.
